Peterboro Examiner: The new blue uniforms worn by the 57th Band in this morning's parade were the subject of much favorable comment. Few recognized in these smart-looking coats the old scarlet serges formerly worn by the band. Some bright spirit among the musicians, probably Bobby Beech, put the members on to the way of getting new undress uniforms at comparatively no cost. Fifty old serges were secured, and, presto, change! there is that number of handsome blue ones. It shows that economy is carefully practiced among the members of the 57th.

Twelve Cattle Killed

Mr. Henry Porter, of the Oak Hills, about five miles from Warkworth, lost twelve head of cattle by lightning, during the storm which visited that section on Saturday last. In the vicinity of Warkworth the storm was very severe, the rain having fallen in such abundance as to fill the ditches and entirely submerge low lands.

TO ENTERTAIN THE OLD BOYS

OPEN AIR FETES ON QUEEN VICTORIA PARK ARE PROPOSED FOR WHEN THE PRODIGALS RETURN.

A week from to-day seven or eight hundred of our former residents, now living in Toronto, are to be with us, for the Belleville Old Boys' Association of Toronto say its members will visit annually the place they love so well. To prepare for this event the executive of the Belleville Old Boys reunion met yesterday and made arrangements to welcome, in connection with the City Council, our guests who will be with us from Saturday morning until eleven o'clock on Monday night.

It is proposed by a number of ladies to hold two fetes on Queen Victoria Park, one on Saturday afternoon and evening, and also on Monday afternoon and evening, to erect marquees to welcome the visitors in and others to sell refreshments in, and to have the bands play. The ladies have taken these propositions up most enthusiastically, and two of their representatives met with the executive last night. It is believed that, with the aid of our citizens and visitors, our city hospital will get much needed substantial aid as the result of these gatherings.

The Man Who "Looks Into the Eye."

IS COMING TO BELLEVILLE.

Beginning Tuesday, July 17, and continuing for seventeen days, a great campaign of optical education and demonstration will take place at the jewelry store of Allan McFee. Dr. Wm. E. Montgomery, the Toronto expert "Shadow test" specialist, has been engaged; a new optical dark room has been built, new appliances installed, and a new day will dawn for those who suffer with defects of vision. Dr. Montgomery, the originator of this new system of sight-testing, is doing a wonderful work throughout Canada. He is teaching one jeweler in each town his new and perfect way, a way that does no guess work, a way that makes no mistakes. Everywhere that his work is known it is pronounced a revelation in optical science and a great achievement in ophthalmic practice. Each day at the store Dr. Montgomery will conduct free examinations for all, charging for material only. Appointments are now being made. Do not miss this grand opportunity. jy6-d6,7,12,14 1tw

A Plucky Doctor.

The New York Tribune pays the following tribute to a young Napanee man, who has friends in this city; "If Edward O'Brien lives the credit will be due to Dr. Templeton, of the J. Hood Wright Memorial Hospital, who, after the man was run over in the freight yards of the New York Central Railroad at 132nd street, crawled under the tender, bound up both legs, and after great exertion carried the man out and hurried him to the hospital, where both limbs were amputated immediately. O'Brien had lost much blood before Dr. Templeton reached him.

An Unlucky Jump

A Consecon correspondent writes: On Saturday morning the 9.40 train going to Trenton was delayed an hour owing to an accident to the boiler of the engine, which occurred quite near Consecon. The only accident, however, happened the assistant driver, who jumped from the window, breaking his jaw bone, and both wrists. Dr. F. B. Thornton was called, and did all that could be done to give relief.

SAFETY.

Never in all the history of transportation has travel been safer than it is to-day. Seated in perfect comfort in any of the mile-a-minute trains of the Lake Shore Railway you are in less danger by far than was your grandfather in the lumbering six-mile-an-hour stage of a half or three-quarters of a century ago. Trains over this line are protected and guarded in a way that is but little short of marvellous. Every device that skill or money can provide is used without regard to the expense and in spite of the high speed—the fastest in the world—you are as safe here as in your own home. Combined with safety and high speed are luxurious comfort and punctuality, all combined to make a service unequaled the world over. Women

Can you Answer "NO" to any of these Questions?

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women are the prescription used for sick and run-down women by a great specialist in diseases of your sex. Such a prescription ought to be a good one, hadn't it?

2.

The tablets are compounded just for women and contain the special tonics which your peculiar system needs. That should make them a better medicine for you than any sold alike for both men and women, shouldn't it?

3.

The tablets contain the very latest ingredients and discoveries in medicine—are up-to-date. That makes them worth more to you than any medicine put on the market years ago, doesn't it?

4.

The tablets are a compound remedy, that is, they contain something for every organ of your system. They must therefore reach the organ which is causing you trouble, even if you don't know yourself which one it is. That is a big point in their favor, isn't it?

5.

Unlike the liquid preparations, the tablets contain neither alcohol nor opium. You don't want to drink whiskey or take opium, do you?

6.

Because the tablets contain something for every organ, they reach immediately the seat of the trouble. Result—immediate gain in health. That is what you want, isn't it?

The Vital Question.

But here is the question of most vital interest to women suffering from a run-down condition or any trouble peculiar to her sex.

Will you take the tablets? Will you risk 50c. to get back your old time life and vigor?

The 72 tablets in a single box, taken now, will start you on the road to health. Take them now before your condition becomes harder to cure.

THE FEDERAL LIFE CO.

Directors Put Up Cash to Obscure Impairment of Capital.

President Dexter Testifies—An Agreement Between Directors and Certain Shareholders Dissected by Royal Insurance Commission — Loans and Call Loans and Unauthorized Investments Told About.

Hamilton, July 14.—The Royal Commission on Insurance, with its retinue of counsel, accountants, actuaries, reporters, stenographers and typists, will go to Winnipeg with an opening session on Tuesday, July 24, at 10.30 a.m. This was announced after the examination of the Federal Life Assurance Co. was completed here yesterday afternoon.

David Dexter, president and general manager of the Federal Life, was in the box all day. The Federal Life was organized in 1874. The capital was placed at $700,000, fully subscribed. In 1900 the capital was increased to $1,000,000, which, according to witness was done for advertising purposes only. The new stock was issued at 13 per cent., and a premium of $5.20 per share of 40 per cent. of the call. The premium was placed to increase the reserve.

Public Got No Chance.

Mr. Tilley brought out the fact strongly that the public did not get a chance to get in on this new stock. It was all gobbled up by the shareholders. Mr. Dexter got 336 shares for himself and some more in trust.

The Federal Life had an impairment of capital to the extent of $40,000 in 1890. This was made up by several directors taking as security an agreement signed by a goodly number of the shareholders, to the effect that until the loan was paid back all the bonuses and profits were to be turned over to those directors who had come to the rescue. This agreement was not kept, however, for instead of the shareholders standing for the loss the company paid the claim out of bonuses, salaries and other expense items. At the end of the year, instead of an impairment, a surplus was shown. This trick was turned again in 1897, and worked like a charm.

That Agreement.

Mr. Tilley then went into the agreement between the directors and shareholders minutely.

J. H. Beattie and T. H. Wilson had put up $10,000 each, and M. Aikens and William Cairns $2,000 each. Counsel held that the Federal was in no way liable for this $24,000, while Mr. Dexter insisted that it was the intention that the company should be liable. Mr. Tilley could not see it in this way. Finally Mr. Dexter said that he had been informed that the agreement was faulty, and that as a matter of law the company were liable.

Mr. Dexter has no use for the policyholder in the management of an insurance company. Shareholders in the Federal, Mr. Dexter sprang a new idea. Half a dozen stockholders got together and formed a trust fund. To make a long story short, Messrs. Dexter, Haslitt, Cairns, Potts, Scott and Wolverton own 5,117 shares, and so have the control of the company.

More Loans.

Mr. Tilley in his examination of Mr. Dexter brought it out that Dr. Wolverton, Hugh Murray, Director Wakefield and T. C. Haslett, director and solicitor, had obtained loans, totaling $20,750, but Mr. Dexter said that the Federal had not lost a copper in all these transactions. The company had purchased Hudson Bay an Sao Paulo bonds, which witness knew were unauthorized.

W. H. Ray of Whitby had received $200 loan on 50 shares of Federation stock. This was the only loan made on the company's stock.

The Federal had made large call loans to private individuals.

Impairment.

The capital of the Federal was impaired for several years; in 1891, $1,629; in 1892, $9,787; in 1904, $1,850, and there was a small impairment at present.

Witness had received no commisssion ro valuation for loans made by the company. Mr. Dexter received $3,000 in 1891, $4,000 in 1899, $5,000 in 1901, $6,000 in 1902, $7,000 in 1903, $8,000 in 1904, $9,000 in 1905 and $10,000 in 1906. His remuneration was regulated by resolution. Counsel thought it was a pretty rapid rise during the past five years, and witness said he was to receive $1,000 a year until his salary was $10,000. Directors received $10 a meeting and expenses. President Beatty, Mr. Dexter's predecessor, received no salary.

Witness said that he had one thousand shares of the Federal stock.

Rebate Evil Again.

Mr. Tilley took up certain specimens of Federal policies, which he discussed at length.

The profit and loss statement showed premium incomes $17,056 and total expenses $131,049. That is, $105,000 over the margin, or about 450 per cent. of the cost of first year's business. In other words, 60 per cent. of the entire business.

Agents of the Federal were paid bonuses and extra commissions for running up their business during the last three months of the year.

This Mr. Tilley said was objectionable, but witness could not agree.

"You have got to get the business to encourage your agents and put up an appearance," he said.

"You are a party to the rebating going on all over the country?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"We are not entirely free from it," answered Mr. Dexter.

"My, but that is modest!"

This closed the examination.

Shot, He May Recover.

Peterboro', July 14.—While Oswald Jory, 11-year-old son of Franklin Jory of Dummer, was out hunting woodchucks he stopped to pull some weeds, and the Winchester rifle he was carrying was discharged. The bullet passed through the entire length of the boy's leg. He may recover.

Edward Foley at Death's Door.

Toronto, July 14.—Almost at the point of death in St. Michael's Hospital, is the veteran, Edward Foley, so long connected with the civic waterworks department. The old gentleman was the victim of a runaway accident on the Kingston road last night, and his recovery is very doubtful. Mr. Foley lives at 30 Bond street. Lewis Fitzgerald, his friend and companion in his ride, has a broken rib.

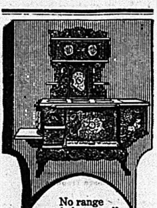
Kingsville, July 14.—A unique lawsuit has ended in the decision of Chief Justice Falconbridge, that John Wigle of Kingsville should pay William Chalk $1,000 for fifteen years' services, and also the cost of litigation. Wigle contended that Chalk was the same as a member of his family, that he had provided for him at all times, and that the young man had no just claim for compensation.

40,000 Miners to Resume.

Harrisburg, Pa., July 14.—The miners of the Central Pennsylvania bituminous coal district, numbering nearly 40,000, who have been idle since April 1, when the mines closed down because the operators would not restore the scale of 1903, will resume work on practically the same scale as 1905. The agreement to do this was made yesterday.

Toronto, July 14.—In the Police Court yesterday, on promises to retire from business, the "bucket shop" charges against Charles Davis, G. A. Fisher, W. G. Barber and H. Davidson, were withdrawn. Seven others will go to a jury, with preliminary hearings on July 19.



No range can bake so well as the Imperial Oxford, because no other range has the Diffusive Oven Flue that draws in pure air constantly, heats it just as hot as you want it heated, and sends it through every part of the whole oven every second. That flue, found only in this perfect range, keeps that heated pure air—DRY air—constantly moving DOWNWARD through the oven, over the baking food, and out up the chimney. When it enters the oven it's hot and dry; when it leaves it, it's wet air,—carries with it all the moisture, all the odors, but NONE of the juices of the food, that's being baked.

Please visit any of our stores and see why this is the right range for your kitchen.

MAJOR ALFRED DREYFUS

Complete Rehabilitation of the Victim of French Military Conspiracy—Under Secretary of State Sarraut Hurt in a Duel After Dreyfus Debate—Was Wounded in Right Breast by M. Pugliesi-Conti.

Paris, July 14.—Yesterday was the closing day of Parliament, and it was largely devoted to the rehabilitation of Alfred Dreyfus, so that the national holiday to-day may witness his return to the army and the official effacement of the stain placed upon his good name.

The Chamber of Deputies met at 9 in the morning for the purpose of hastening the parliamentary procedure, and War Minister Etienne immediately presented two Government bills, one raising Capt. Dreyfus to the rank of Major of Artillery and the other promoting Col. Picquart to that of brigadier-general.

M. Etienne asked for speedy action, adding that it was the Government's intention to inscribe Dreyfus' name on the list of candidates for the Cross of the Legion of Honor.

This announcement brought out a storm of applause. The bills were referred to the army committee, which at once went into session, approved them and drafted strong, favorable reports.

Tumultuous Scene.

Later, amid great excitement, the chamber considered the bill reinstating Dreyfus, and passed it by a vote of 473 to 42. A tumultuous demonstration greeted the announcement of the vote.

President Brisson, in announcing the vote, said: "It it with pride that I register this vote consecrating the triumph of virtue."

"Captain of Artillery Alfred Dreyfus, according to the law of 1880, amended in 1890, is hereby promoted to be major, taking that rank on the day of the promulgation of the present law."

There were violent incidents as the voting in the chamber began, and President Brisson suspended the session.

Picquart Report.

The report reinstating Col. Picquart severely arraigned the officers who were responsible for his condemnation, characterizing their acts as wicked villianies.

M. Denys Cochin, Conservative, protested against the violent language used in the report, whereupon there were tumultuous demands that General Mercier be prosecuted.

The restoration of Col. Picquart was passed by 477 to 27.

The Radical supporters of Dreyfus are seeking the Government to prosecute the many generals, colonels and high functionaries responsible for his condemnation. The Government papers declare that the affair is closed. The prevailing tone of the press testifies to the scrupulous integrity of the court and hails its decision as a triumph of justice.

Under State Secretary Hurt in Duel.

The scene of tumult which marked the enactment yesterday of the law restoring Alfred Dreyfus to the army was followed by a bloody duel last night, in which Under-Secretary of State Sarraut was wounded by the sword of M. Pugliesi-Conti.

The duel assumed the aspect of a veritable combat between the Government and the Opposition.

It was after the close of the session that the duel occurred. Later reports show that M. Sarraut is suffering from a deep wound in the right breast, penetrating the lung. While the wound is considered to be serious, it is not necessarily dangerous.

SUMMONSES BEING SERVED.

Toronto Civic Scandal Will Get Into Police Court Wednesday.

Toronto, July 14.—The issuing of summonses to appear in the police court at 10 a. m. on Wednesday next, marked a further advance step in the proceedings arising out of the report of Judge Winchester.

These are the individuals and companies, representatives of which are charged to appear, following upon the eleven informations sworn to yesterday afternoon: E. J. Lennox, Joseph Wright, Sam S. Clark, Dr. Adam Lynd, George B. Elliott, George Puddy, Henry Puddy, Thomas Douglas, Asa Matthews, G. N. Reynolds, Bennett & Wright, A. B. Ormsby & Co., Office Specialty Co., Wheeler & Bain, Metallic Roofing Co., W. B. Hutson & Sons, Canadian Office and School Furniture Co., Pedler & Co.

Mr. Little Resigns His Seat.

Toronto, July 14.—E. A. Little, M.P.P. for Cardwell, has resigned his seat. "In all probability," said Premier Whitney yesterday afternoon, "he will be appointed to succeed the late Mr. McLean Stevenson." Clerk of the County Court, registrar of the Surrogate Court, and deputy clerk of the Crown, are the offices in question. There was some thought of dividing them, but Mr. Little will combine the work. The bye-election will be announced in due course. The majority for Mr. Little was 700.

Two Accidents to Children.

Kingston, July 14.—George Snider of Detroit, aged 13, visiting his grandmother, Mrs. W. R. Fretts, of Hawley, playing in a hayfield, got in front of a mower, and the scythe took off one leg and badly cut the other. The horses started off suddenly.

Near Picton, at the farm of J. T. Collier, Ridge road, his four-year-old daughter got under the hay wagon, and when the team stopped up a wheel passed over the child's head, and death ensued in half an hour.

City Teacher Drowned.

Toronto, July 14.—Word was received in the city last evening that William P. Dandy, B. A., one of the instructors in commerce and finance at the Technical High School, had been drowned during the afternoon in Stony Lake. He was bathing, and it is supposed, took a cramp.

One of Three Things Always Cause RHEUMATISM

Do you know the system rids itself of waste matter through bowels and kidneys?-Yes, but by the skin as well.

As a matter of fact, the skin rids the system of more urea than the kidneys do.

If the skin, or bowels, or kidneys are unhealthy—they won't throw off enough urea. This urea is changed into uric acid—carried by the blood to joints and nerves—causing Rheumatism.

Fruit-a-tives

OR "FRUIT LIVER TABLETS"

will positively cure Rheumatism because they increase the eliminating action of skin, kidneys and bowels—and make these three organs so vigorous and healthy that there can be no urea or waste retained in the system to poison the blood and irritate the nerves.

FRUIT-A-TIVES are fruit juices, combined with tonics—the whole forming the most effective cure for Rheumatism.

There are Teas and Teas

There is what we migh call the up-grade and the down-grade. Most teas come under the latter heading—not that they were'nt once good, but the average dealer buys a box of tea that he keeps under the counter where it gets stale and loses most of its goodness. Stroud's teas are of the up-grade variety. We receive our teas fresh every week from our headquarters in Montreal, and while we have them in our store we keep them in tins that are practically air tight, but we don't have them long enough for them to get stale.

DREYFUS POPULAR HERO.

Meanwhile Count Esterhazy Says There Is Still Evidence of Guilt and End Is Not Yet.

Paris, July 16.—The celebration of the French national holiday Saturday assumed especial significance in connection with Dreyfus resuming his place in the army. The Official Journal published a decree announcing his reinstatement and promotion and the inscription of the name on the list of chevaliers of the Legion of Honor.

Major Dreyfus, who remains in his apartments, is besieged by many friends, who are congratulating him on his final success. Hundreds of felicitations have reached him by mail, telegraph and cable. The date of his receiving his sword and putting on his uniform awaits his assignment to a regiment.

What Esterhazy Says.

In an interview with the London correspondent of The Matin, Major Count Esterhazy is reported as saying that Capt. Dreyfus was a matter of indifference to him, and that he believed Col. Sandheer, former chief of the secret intelligence bureau of the French army, had proofs of Dreyfus' guilt. Count Esterhazy said he thought the affair was not [illegible]nded.

President [illegible] Saturday reviewed the troops at Longchamps. The principal feature of the day were the enormous crowds and the frequent shouts of "Vive Dreyfus," showing the prevailing sentiment. The review was a brilliant spectacle, the whole garrison of Paris participating.

Duellist Improves.

Paris, July 16.—M. Sarraut, the deputy who, last Friday, was wounded by Deputy Pugliesi-Conti in a duel, following an encounter in the chamber over the Dreyfus affair, is improving.

Plucky Lyon Loses Match.

New York, July 16.—There was uncertainty as to whether the year's golf champion of the United States was to be a homebred or a Canadian until the last few holes of the thirty-six hole final yesterday at the Englewood Golf Club. Eben Marshall Byers of the St. Andrew's Golf Club took the lead at the thirty-third hole and made the victory 2 up on the home green. George Seymour Lyon of the Lambton County Club, Toronto, was his opponent and a very plucky one.

Cudahys Coming to Canada.

Toronto, July 16.—One of the big Chicago packing firms has been licensed by the Ontario Government to do business in the province under date of June 27, as announced in the current Ontario Gazette. No greater amount of capital than $40,000 shall be used in Ontario by the firm, which is the Cudahy Packing Co., incorporated under the laws of the State of Illinois.

Succeeds Wisner.

Oyster Bay, L. I., July 16.—Eugene G. Haskell of Detroit was Saturday appointed by President Roosevelt as a member of the International Waterways Commission, to succeed George Y. Wisner, deceased.

Wife Slayer Was Callous.

Views Body, Says, "That's Where I Intended to Shoot Her."

Bolstered Up by Whiskey Christopher Spindleman of Windsor Kills His Wife in the Presence of Her Children—Terrible Battle Between Son and Murderer for Possession of the Weapon and to Save Murderer Becoming a Suicide.

Windsor, July 16.—His courage bolstered up to the murder point by whisky, Christopher Spindleman Saturday night shot and killed his wife as she sat on a camp stool in front of their residence. Seven minutes after the bullet crashed through the woman's head she was dead, slain in the sight of four of her children. One of them, Robert, who boarded nearby, and who witnessed the crime, ran to the scene and snatch the revolver away from his frenzied father just as he was about to end his own miserable existence.

Struggling desperately, the two men rolled about the lawn, one battling to overcome his mother's slayer, the other to place the revolver in such a position that he could blow out his brains. Youth triumphed and held until the arrival of Policeman Maitre.

"Let me look at her once more," begged Spindleman, as the officer grasped him by the arm to take him to the police station. Believing that the man was sorry for his deed, Maitre, his heart filled with pity for the trembling blood-stained wretch, led him back to the lawn, where the woman lay, dead.

"That is just where I intended to shoot her," said Spindleman, heartlessly. Then he was led away.

The tragedy was the result of a man's life devoted to whisky and to abuse of the woman he had sworn to love. Neighbors say that most of Spindleman's money was spent in saloons. For his wife and children he provided but poorly. The wife remonstrated many times, but Spindleman was past all reformation. Her recriminations led to bitter quarrels that grew so in frequency that Robert, the son, left home and boarded with neighbors.

Result of Quarrel.

Saturday afternoon about 3 o'clock the Spindlemans had another quarrel. The husband came home about 3 o'clock intoxicated. Shortly after, he left home, went down town and purchased a revolver.

At 5 o'clock the husband returned, even more intoxicated. He flourished the revolver in his wife's face, but the brave woman was not cowed. The quarrel continued until after 5 o'clock, when Mrs. Spindleman, convinced that her husband meant to kill her, took three of the children and left the house. Shortly after, she returned and seated herself on a camp chair on the lawn.

Revolver flashing in the air and uttering horrible curses, Spindleman sprang from the front door, ran to his wife, and before she had time to flee, fired a bullet into her head. With a moan on her lips, she sank to the ground, where she lay dying, while the struggle took place between her husband and [illegible].

Spindleman [illegible] years of age and his victim was [illegible]. They had been married about 20 [illegible].

Rossland Has $30,000 Blaze.

Rossland, B. C., July 16.—Rossland had a $30,000 blaze Saturday. The fire started in the F. C. Harrison Block, a three-storey structure on Columbia avenue, and soon communicated to the Windsor Hotel on the east, and the building occupied by T. B. Morrow, druggist, on the west. The Harrison Block and the Morrow Building were reduced to ruins, and the Windsor Hotel completely gutted. Hunter Bros., warehouse and goods, entailing a loss of $12,000, was also burned.

Mayor Schmitz Is Accused.

San Francisco, July 16.—Mayor Schmitz of San Francisco, who was elected mayor by union labor, is accused of grafting by acting as a whisky agent and coercing saloonkeepers into buying of him. The charge is made by Police Commissioner Reagan, whom the mayor Friday summarily removed from office for disloyalty to the administration and allowing his private interests to conflict with his official duties.

Imperial Preference.

The vote on the Drummond resolution at the Congress of Chambers of Commerce in England was, the London Free Press thinks, of immense value as an expression of imperial unity. However divergent the views regarding reciprocal trade within the empire in the practical working out, there was no discordant note on the desirability of strengthening the bonds between Great Britain and her colonial possessions. The significance of this phase of the proceedings cannot be overrated. The opposition to the motion was not on the principle involved, but on the difficulty, as Lord Avebury expressed it, of getting a reciprocal basis. What does imperial preference mean in practice? Mr. Fielding put the question very straight in 1904 in saying that Canada required some reciprocal trade advantage from England for the preferential tariff. That could only mean a discriminating rate on the products of Canadian farms. There is no evidence that this proposition has made tangible headway among the industrial elements of the Mother Land. That they may yet see in the general policy of Mr. Chamberlain, that of protection from the invasion of British markets by continental countries, some solution of their social problem, is credible enough. That that policy will yet triumph is within the range of possibilities. It is a policy which Canada cannot offer an axe to grind. But in its success an opening might be presented for closer trade relationships. The best reason for pressing the question at this time before the congress was put forward by Mr. Drummond, in the rapid expansion of Canada, and the danger that if the empire does not draw nearer together. Canada may drift into other commercial alliances. This phase of the question, however, seems too remote for present dread. Yet good is done meanwhile in every move toward imperial solidarity, and keeping alive the spirit of kinship among the outlying parts of the empire. In this aspect the discussions at the congress have a value which cannot be over estimated.

Tribute From an Independent.

"Even the superficial observer is likely to have noted, during the session of Parliament just closing, the effective work of Mr. R. L. Borden in the House of Commons. The general feeling is, we think, that there have been few discussions of any importance to which he had not contributed something, often a great deal, of interesting and useful point; many pieces of legislation he has materially helped to improve, and he has been a vigilant, fearless and forcible exposer and critic of the waste and graft, the revelations of which have been so numerous and serious during the session. Mr. Borden has undoubtedly gained great political weight during the past six months. It is fair to argue, fair to the public and not unfair to Mr. Borden, that much of the effectiveness of Mr Borden's work in the House during the session has been connected with the fact that the position of leader of the Opposition had attached to it last year the same salary as that of minister of the Crown. The Journal believed that that action of Parliament was a good one, and feels now more than ever convinced of its desirability. It imposes upon the leader of the Opposition the duty of giving all his time to political work, but it does him justice for his relinquishment of private occupation. It gives him the time and means as well as the will to grapple thoroughly with public responsibilities. These conditions must appeal to a public-spirited and honorable man to a degree which will spur him to the utmost political effort, with a result such as we think has been evident in Mr. Borden's leadership of the Opposition.

There were more people there than in all the churches put together.

It reminded one, somehow, of Mahomet and the mountain. The people would not go to the preachers, but why couldn't the preachers go to them?

"These old-fashioned summers," says the man on the next block, make me feel sorry that I ever growled a little bit about the good old winter time."

O, dear to my heart is the old-fashioned summer,
When you bake all the daytime and stew all the night!

"A Church-goer" writes; "I have no objection to the Salvation Army, and am quite willing to give it credit for the good it has done in this and other places. But I do not see what necessity there is for the Salvation Army band to play so loudly on the streets between 7 and 8 on Sunday evenings. It cannot but interfere with the different church services, and certainly jars on people who, like myself, love peace and quietness on the Lord's Day. I think that, between the hours of 11 and 12.30 in the daytime, and 7 and 8 in the evening, the Salvation Army band might rest on its oars, so to speak, on Sunday."

"Move on!" said a stalwart policeman to some young fellows in a doorway. And they moved—over to the next corner. The policeman also moved over and moved 'em on again. Which shows that the Belleville police force nowadays is bound to keep things moving.

The Whitney Government has lately added considerably to the powers of City Councils, and made several other changes in civic laws. In Ontario only British subjects may hold any office, municipal or otherwise, which calls for the administering of an oath. This is a new departure, but is considered a move in the right direction. The Council also has power now to pass a by-law prohibiting the sale of peanuts, fruit, etc., on the streets from pushcarts, and also to give a cut rate on the license fee to a British subject as compared with the fee charged a foreigner. Under the new law, the Council may take proceedings to wipe out such pests as the tussock moth, and charge the cost as a local improvement. The amendments to the Act also provide for the putting down of pavements on streets by a two-thirds vote of the Council and without the consent of the property-owners.

The Municipal World has this to say on the importance of keeping the roadways repaired, and the same is respectfully submitted to the Public Works department; "The repair of roads is as important as their construction. Neglect to keep the roads in repair, failure to repair them when repair is first needed, adds very much to the cost of roads. A good road which is not kept in repair, very quickly becomes a bad road, and the object of the original expenditure is thus lost. To allow roads to degenerate for want of repair, means an immense waste of labor, material and money, which has to be made up in their reconstruction. Wherever good roads are built, arrangements should be made for a careful attention to their repair."

A runaway horse in Kingston stopped when it came to a brewery. And the Whig seems to think the animal was possessed of almost human intelligence.

It seems to be pretty definitely settled that Belleville will not get one of the new Normal schools. Rather a pity, for there is no better location in the province. However, this city is not the only place disappointed.

Discussing some recent remarks made by The Intelligencer in regard to Lindsay's tax rate of 28 mills, the Brockville Times says;

"Brockville's rate is 25 mills, but it must be remembered that, while it would be pleasant to have it much lower, we have some valuable assets to show for it in the shape of waterworks and a gas and light plant, as well as 17 miles of permanent granolithic walks.

"Furthermore, the cause of our 25 mills rate of taxation has been due largely to the apathy of the people in the past who permitted incompetent men to get into the town council and muddle away the people's money. There is no getting away from the fact that the cause of the evil and the remedy lie in our own hands."

The above remarks, perhaps, fit the case of Belleville quite as well as Brockville, and, in regard to Lindsay, it is only fair to say that the people of that burg claim their property is only assessed at about 50 per cent. of its value, so that their assessment is not so dreadfully high, after all.

RAILROAD DISCRIMINATION.
(Canadian Grocer.)

The average shipper has long since ceased to evince marked surprise at anything a railroad may do or charge The workings of the railroad mind are past finding out, or even the elucidation of an A. G. Blair. Still the shipper occasionally runs across such a flagrant example of wrongheadedness as to excite his interest if not his surprise.

Such a case was recently brought to the notice of the Canadian Grocer. A large shipper has been accustomed to send quantities of crockery from Hamilton to St. John, N. B., paying 82 cents per hundred pounds A short time ago he had occasion to send a shipment of the same class of goods to Hamilton, Bermuda, and on his freight bill discovered that the railroad's charge to St. John was 29 1-2 cents, because the goods were going through to Hamilton, Bermuda.

By a little calculation it was seen that he could ship his crockery through St. John a thousand miles out into the Atlantic to Bermuda and back again to St. John for less money than if they were shipped no farther than St. John in the first place. This is charging what the traffic will bear with a vengeance.

A Real Romance of the Thousand Islands

Many are the strange tales told by the old-time residents of the Thousand Islands, yet none is more interesting than that of the parents who many years ago deserted their little girl, who is now a full grown woman, residing in the country but a mile or two from Frontenac. To-day the child of twenty-five years of age is a woman bearing all the marks of aristocracy, yet compelled to labor as the wife of one of the farmers supplying the summer residents with garden stuff.

Where the parents of the girl came from was never learned. They lived for a time on one of the islands in the St. Lawrence river.

One day in September the father came to a farm house on the main land. Tightly wrapped in expensive garments he carried his child. With some excuse or other he asked that the child be kept for a few hours. That was the last ever seen of the man or woman.

To-day all that remains to remind the woman of her strange parents are the little hand embroidered garments worn the day when she was given to others. These are daintily marked with the letters "L.R.M." but never has the meaning of these been deciphered.

The Potato Bug.

There's a tramp item going the rounds, says an exchange, that the potato bug is diminishing in number, but we doubt it, as the item must have been written a few weeks before the bug settled down to business Though apparently annihilated in good time by Paris green, he turned up in season all these years as if his destruction hadn't taken place the preceding year. It may interest the reader to learn that his first recognized visit of observation to Ontario was in 1872 and that in 1873 he took possession of every potato vine in sight. The effort for a few years to check his career of destruction was fruitless, hence many fields were abandoned in the hope that each succeeding winter would dispose of him forever. He seemed capable of resisting the power of frost and demolished tons of Paris green which cannot be estimated in value, yet the number each season was countless, and it will continue as usual.

ANOTHER GERM DESTROYER.

Herpicide is Death to Dandruff Germs.

The germ burrows into the scalp, throwing up the cuticle in thin scales called dandruff, or scurf, and digging at the root of the hair where it saps the hair's vitality. First comes brittle hair, then lusterless and dead-like hair, then falling hair, and, finally baldness. Nine-tenths of the hair troubles are caused by dandruff. Without dandruff, hair will grow luxuriantly, as nature intended. "Herpicide" kills the dandruff germ leaving the hair to grow unhampered, as it does with the American red man. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

A Thrilling Experience.

Bancroft Times: Passengers on the I. B. & O. train yesterday morning had an exciting experience and one that we fancy they would hardly care to repeat. The train, which left Baptiste shortly after ten o'clock, consisted of a passenger and baggage car and two flats loaded with logs. Just the other side of the long bridge which spans a corner of the lake, there is a heavy grade, and the train had just reached the top of this when it broke loose from the engine and started back. Gaining momentum with every turn of the wheels, it crossed the bridge at a speed of about fifty miles an hour, and only came to a standstill when it struck another grade about a mile this side of Baptiste. That the runaway did not land in the lake is almost a miracle. The sectionmen were at work on the road, and had their handcar loaded with ties, in the middle of the bridge. The train struck it and threw it into the lake, and the sectionmen had barely time to escape. There were ten passengers on board, among the number being Mr. and Mrs. Massey, of Toronto, and Dr. Beeman, of this village.

Unhappy Frisco.

San Francisco is now a wide-open city. The rum-sellers have consented to pay a heavily-increased license fee on the understanding that they are not to be "handicapped." Their doors must be allowed to swing night and day. Dance-hall adjuncts to the saloons will be opened in a few days, and the vanguard of a new "tenderloin" is fast drifting back into town. Prize-fighters and "sports" are opening their garish saloons right and left, and the old-time revel will soon be in full swing again. Evidently, says the Toronto News, something more than the worst that nature can do is required to reform San Francisco.

About Gratuities.

STATEMENT ISSUED BY THE PROVINCIAL SECRETARY — INFORMATION FOR APPLICANTS.

The Provincial Secretary has issued a statement concerning gratuities in which it is pointed out that those interested in applications should first see that they come within the provisions of the Act, otherwise the Government has no power or discretion in the matter.

The statement is as follows: 'There are before the Government a number of applications for gratuities. In many of these the applicants do not make out a case that brings them within the Act. By the Public Service Act, R.S.O. 1897, cap. 15, sec. 27, which was R.S.O. 1887, cap. 14, sec. 27, and which was taken from 41 Vic., cap. 2, sec. 26, it is provided that when the services of an officer are hereafter dispensed with in consequence of the age and infirmity or ill-health of the officer, but not for any fault on the part of the officer, such gratuity may be allowed as shall be directed by Order-in-Council, but not exceeding one month's pay for each year of his service.

"By an Order-in-Council passed on the 2nd May, 1881, it was provided 'that the rule be established that no gratuity shall be granted on their resignation or retirement to any of the following officials who have not now been for more than one year employed in the public institutions of the Province, viz.: attendants, guards, engineers, gardeners, farmers and such like,' and providing that future employees must not expect any gratuity on retirement from the service.

"By an amending Order-in-Council of 25th October, 1892, the words 'and such like' were stricken out of the Order of 2nd May, 1881, and the word 'etc.' substituted therefor.

"Then by cap. 6 of The Ontario Statutes, 1898, it is provided: 'Where any person shall after the first day of January, 1898, become a member of the civil or public service of the Province of Ontario he shall not be entitled to a retiring allowance upon retiring from such service, nor shall his family be entitled to any such allowance in case of the death of such civil or public servant.'"

Ghost Was Dripping.

STORY IS TOLD BY A WOMAN OF MAINE.

Bangor, Me., July 16. — Dripping with water from the Penobscot, where he met his death by drowning, the spirit of James Sheehan, of Bangor, stood before his wife, as she lay wide awake Sunday night, worrying over the burden of debt which she supposed he had left, and told her that in a tin box in the left hand corner of the safe of a certain downtown business man she would find papers which would clear up all her business troubles. Bright and early next morning, Mrs. Sheehan sent her little daughter to the office named, and the papers were found just as the spirit had revealed—so declares Mrs. Sheehan; she says she had no earthly means of knowing where the papers were.

Sheehan was engaged in lumber business, and in breaking a log jam he was drowned.

Cheer Up.

The tragedy of failure at the entrance examinations, says the Toronto Telegram, is most keenly felt in homes where the presence of a boy or girl at school means the loss of an earning power of $2, $3 or $4 a week.

The pity of it is that the examination papers, as prepared by the Ontario Department of Education, put a premium on the mere smartness, not to say cunning, of the teacher.

The teacher who seeks to ground his pupils in the knowledge of every subject may stick to the text books. The teacher who simply wants his pupil to pass the examination will cut loose from the text books and take the entrance papers over a course of years as the basis of his teaching.

Thus a child with a good general education may be tripped by catch questions. The pupil who has been skilfully coached over a wide range of catch questions on past examination papers will pass. But the candidate entitled to most sympathy in the boy or girl who has formed an entrance class of one or two in a one-roomed school, where the same teacher has to handle all grades.

The entrance examination is only a skirmish in the campaign of life. Many a boy and girl has failed in this skirmish and lived to triumph in the activities that constitute the main battle of every human career.

Few Apprentices In These Days.

Every student of the unemployed problem in the big cities is aware that one of the most potent factors in the creation of the army of the unemployed is the decay of the apprenticeship system. Boys on leaving school take positions as messengers, cart drivers, errand boys, etc., at good wages for boys, but at the age of twenty they go to swell the vast stream of unskilled labor. Even when a boy is admitted to an industrial concern he is rarely able to get an all-round training, even in cases where he is admitted as a wage-earning apprentice. The old system of indentured apprentices is practically obsolete, and even in the rare cases where a parent is willing to sacrifice gain for the future of his boy the employer is reluctant or unable to provide the necessary facilities for the proper training of the lad in his trade. The attempt of the Printers' Guild to restore the apprenticeship system in printing offices will be watched with interest. A committee of the Canadian Press Association also has the same matter in hand and it is hoped that some satisfactory plan will be provided that will furnish competent workmen for the "Art Preservative." Successful in this, the apprenticeship system is likely to be revived in other trades. —St Catharines Star-Journal.

The Cheese Board.

The phenomenal price for cheese still continues, and on Saturday it was 2 1-4 cents per pound higher than at the corresponding date last year. The heavy make still continues, and the pasture is exceptionally good, many farmers pasturing now on land which, they say, has never been used for that purpose before. It is believed that this will be a record season for cheese, both as to quantity and quality. The boardings on Saturday were 3550 white and 380 colored. Sales: Hodgson Bros., 1200 at 11 15-16c; Mark Sprague, 260 at the same; Thos. Watkin, 350 at the same; Grant, 334 at the same; W. J. Magrath, 100 at 11 13-16c. Hodgson Bros. bid 11 3-4c for the balance of the board, but it was refused. The cheese was afterwards sold on the curb at 11 13-16c.

Last year's output at the same date was 3795 boxes, and the best price 9 11-16c.

WESTERN HARVEST WILL BE EARLY

FARMERS ARE HOPEFUL AND ARE PREPARING FOR HEAVY YIELD.

A Winnipeg despatch says: The intense and timely rains of the past two weeks have advanced the crops throughout the Western Provinces enormously. At Rosthern, Peter Adams yesterday exhibited wheat slightly colored, measuring five feet high, with heads four inches long. In Southern Alberta the grain is turning. In general the indications are for a very early harvest.

The stalk is heavy and sale of binder twine is one-fourth in excess of the same time last year. This is accepted as evidence of a very heavy yield as well as early harvest.

Already the farmers are beginning to enquire about the possible help that the harvest excursions will bring from Ontario. The demand will be greatly in excess of other years because of the labor famine, due to railroad construction throughout the country absorbing surplus labor. The feeling is very general that the crop yield will be an average, if not an increase, because of the increased acreage in the new Provinces.

Caustic Criticism Of Medical Council

The Cobourg Sentinel-Star says:—The Ontario Medical Council has decided to remove from its register the name of a country doctor in Castleton, East Northumberland, for "infamous and disgraceful conduct in a professional sense." The dire offence consisted in advertising that he could cure la grippe by a secret remedy in a short time. This seems a small reason for depriving a professional man of his means of living. The medical profession, like the others, is not averse to pleasing and remunerative practice of advertising, but it must be done just so delicately and according to professional etiquette, or there is the deuce to pay. they are a trust, a close corporation, regulate their own prices, prepare their own Acts of Parliament. It seems to us that the Ontario Medical Council could employ its energies better than in scorching an obscure country doctor who has advertised not wisely but too well.

Battle of Tailors.

American tailors are much excited over the announcement that Mr. George Winter, a London tailor, has been engaged by the War Department to design various army uniforms and to instruct the American army tailors how to cut and fit.

For many years there have been constant complaints from officers and privates that the uniforms did not fit properly, and the men often paid to have the garments re-cut and fitted.

American military attaches have frequently reported that while the American soldier is provided with the best cloth obtainable, he is the "slouchiest" in appearance, owing to the inability of the army tailors to give a good fit. Mr. Winter will spend two weeks in a Government factory at Philadelphia to show how uniforms should be made.

The Merchant Tailors' Protective Association has sent a strong protest to Mr. Taft, the Secretary for War denouncing the employment of an Englishman to do work which could be as well or better done by Americans. It is also asserted that Mr. Winter's engagement is a direct violation of the contract labor law. The Merchant Tailors' Society has made a similar protest.

Several leading New York tailors, interviewed, spoke indignantly of the affair, and declared that clothes were much better made in America than in England, and that the New York man is the best dressed person in the world.

These protests will have no effect, as the War Department is determined that the proposed arrangements shall be carried out.

The splendor of God on the meadows is blazing,
And the way one perspires is simply amazing.

I know every rag I have on is just wringing.

Just to lie by this stream starts me thrilling with rapture—
There's a bug down my back that I simply can't capture.

The gladness of spring through my spirit is stealing,
And in two or three days my darned nose will be peeling!

O, glories of nature! O, May's yearly wonder!
Oh, why did I come here?—my legs ache like thunder!

Lo me drink that pure liquor that nature alone brews—
I'll bet thirty cents I'm getting a stonebruise!

Who'd live in the city, 'mid tumult and folly?
Let's get back to town — thank the Lord, there's the trolley.

AS SMOOTH AS A BILLIARD TABLE.

Your comfort on a railway journey very largely depends upon the roadbed of the route you select. No matter how luxurious the coaches, or how much personal attention you receive from the employees, you cannot be comfortable if jolted and jarred by a poor and irregular roadbed. On the Lake Shore Railway no expense has been spared to make a roadbed as nearly perfect as the most skilful engineering could build, and as a result, throughout the entire length and breadth of the system the right of way is as smooth as a billiard table. No jolts or jars, nor dust nor dirt. This perfection of service extends throughout the entire system. Lake Shore trains are the most luxurious, they are equipped with every comfort and convenience and are run at highest speed and in safety. They run on time. DANGERS OF DIETING

UNDERFEEDING LIABLE TO WEAKEN HEART'S ACTION.

Usually Appetite Is a Measure of Health, and the First Sign of Illness in a Man or an Animal Is Loss of the Desire For Food.

Professor Alexander Haig, an English dietary expert, has written from London to the medical fraternity of New York warning Americans against the popular belief that the average man eats too much. He says that the increasing number of deaths from heart failure is largely due to underfeeding.

The notion that science is a more unerring guide than is nature is constantly gaining ground. In the good old days men drank when they were thirsty and ate of whatever they wished until their hunger was satisfied. Now science condemns such foolishness as primitive. It prescribes one glass of water one hour before meals and one glass one hour after meals—no more, no less. If you happen not to be thirsty at those times, no matter, drink that amount anyway. If perchance you are thirsty and would like two glasses you must not yield; it is only nature that prompts you, and nature is an unsafe guide. Or, you may be "abnormally" thirsty at meals; nevertheless do not drink then.

As to our amount of food, we are directed to consume so many grams of the proteids, so many grams of the carbohydrates and so many grams of fat," while we hear learned discourses upon large calories and the supreme importance of exactly maintaining our nitrogen balance—whatever that may mean.

I have purposely not mentioned the precise numbers of grams of the different food elements, for the simple reason that our eminent authorities have not yet agreed upon this important point. All give different figures.

Scientists, however, following the lead of Russell H. Chittenden, Ph. D., LL. D., Sc. D., have pretty well agreed that the average man eats twice more than he needs. If half his customary amount of food does not satisfy him it ought to, they say, and it will eventually, provided he keeps on suppressing his natural and therefore unscientific instincts.

But just here lies a danger. It is true that one can accustom himself to a much smaller quantity of food than that to which he has been habituated and that eventually he will desire that smaller quantity and no more, but when he attains to this condition his digestive power will have been reduced by one-half. As a result he will lose from ten to thirty pounds in weight; that is to say, his muscles and organs will decrease by so much in bulk and strength. Now, if the heart decreases considerably in strength there will always be danger of its collapse, particularly if it be subjected to any extra strain, as when one runs for a car or rapidly up a flight of steps. Excitement alone may be fatal to a weak heart.

Rigorous dieting to reduce weight is always dangerous. A better plan is to work off the superfluous flesh by exercise.

Lack of sleep has a depressing effect on the heart, for during sleep cerebral circulation diminishes, when the blood can devote itself to the rest of the body.

Eating before going to bed, particularly if one is up late, is a good practice, it being most favorable to thorough body repair that the blood at night be rich in nourishment.

Accustoming the digestive organs to a small amount of food results in a decline of appetite, whereas our object should be to increase appetite and thereby strengthen our digestive powers by judicious exercise in the open air or in a well ventilated room.

If the doctrine that a small appetite is preferable to a large appetite be true—and this is what "economy in nutrition" teaches—then open air exercise, which manifestly increases appetite, must be injurious to health. Or why should we exercise to increase appetite if we may eat only so much?

The notion is wholly absurd. The first sign of illness in a man or an animal is loss of appetite. And usually appetite is a measure of health.

To build up the heart and muscular system generally we must vigorously exercise the muscles.

It is not enough that one should stuff himself; it is all important that he should desire every morsel he eats, and this he will do only if he undergoes general physical and mental exercise. Food that is ingested, and even digested, will be absorbed only by those organs that need it—that have been exercised. This fact explains why many persons that are good "feeders" are yet inadequately nourished. If they are brain workers and take no physical exercise their brains absorb what nourishment they need; the rest is excreted.

Magnificent as are the results of brain work we must bear in mind that there could be no result without the co-operation of the body, and that the body in its turn depends primarily on the integrity of its heart, lungs and stomach.

Men of the People.

The American tradition is the experience of the world everywhere. There is Washington and there is Hamilton, gently born and gently bred, but somehow the heart turns rather to Franklin and to Lincoln, as of more hope for the common men "God made so many of."—Mr. Howells in Harper's Weekly.

It requires a great deal of boldness and a great deal of caution to make a great fortune, and when you have got it it requires ten times as much wit to keep it.—Rothschild.

ROYAL WEDDING FEAST

UNLIMITED INVITATIONS TO THE GREATEST SINCE WORLD BEGAN

NO EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

Some Refuse, But a Great Host, Including Our Great Men to a Number That Transcends Belief, Accept the Invitations to Be Christians—Intellectual Giants Present—There Are No Classes In the Church.

Los Angeles, July 15.—The familiar parable of the King's wedding supper is presented by the preacher in this sermon in a new light and is made the basis for unlimited invitation to all classes. The text is Matthew xxii, 10, "The wedding was furnished with guests."

Some people are born ascetics. They love to travel the rough roads instead of the smooth. They profess to despise every form of comfort and ease. Like John the Baptist, they would clothe themselves in skins and banquet upon locusts and wild honey. They believe that primitive man in his dugout, eating his raw meat and herbs as he hunts them day by day, is a better type of the human race than is the modern man living in a hothouse and sleeping upon a feather bed and protecting himself from the rains of summer and the colds of winter with umbrellas and rubbers and storm overcoats. Like Emperor William I. of Germany, they believe that, though they may live in a palace, yet the body rests better upon the hard camp cot, the relic of many battlefields, and the coarser the food they eat the more physical and mental strength they will have.

The banquet hall may have a bad name on account of the gourmets and gluttons who make out of its table a shrine, yet one of the most important political, social, ecclesiastical, financial and literary factor of the world has been the banquet hall. When a Gladstone, a Disraeli, a Salisbury and a Balfour wanted to explain the state policy of the British Government, where did they utter their manifestoes? They again and again spoke to the British Empire and to the world over the banquet table, which was spread to celebrate the induction of a new lord mayor of London into office. When Henry W. Grady wanted to bind the new north to the new south with the golden cords of love, where did he do it? At the New England banquet held in New York city in 1886 to celebrate Forefathers' day. How did New York and America honor the electrical triumphs of the inventor of the telegraph, Samuel F. B. Morse? By a public dinner on Dec. 7, 1863. How did New York honor the cable triumphs of Cyrus W. Field? In the same way, by a public banquet three years later. And how did the American pulpit honor one of its greatest theologians a few years ago —Rev. Dr. Herrick Johnson, than whom there was not at that time a more powerful personality in any professorial chair in the west By a public banquet given in Chicago in January, 1903. The brainy men of this country do not gather in the banquet hall for a great feast of material viands nearly as much as for a feast of intellectual, moral and spiritual foods. Thus I am glad today that this symbol of my text is found in a banquet hall. Furthermore, it is found in the most fascinating of all banquet halls—namely, at a wedding feast.

You know this parable without our going into details. The King wanted to make a great feast to celebrate the wedding of his son. The loving father invites many guests to the wedding, but they all refuse to come. Then the King says to his servants, "Go out into the highways and the hedges and compel them to come." Then the servants go and bring in the new guests. Now, it is my purpose to talk to you about this banquet hall and point out for you the different characteristics and the social status of the guests. In thinking over this parable we often dwell on the direct lesson of the wide gospel invitation it conveys without noticing the characteristics of the men, the women and the children who were finally persuaded to sit down at the wedding feast of the royal Son of God, Jesus Christ.

Let us find a vantage ground to stand on. Let us, in the first place, learn how we can best study the personal characteristics of these wedding guests. Shall we do this by entering the brilliantly lighted banquet hall and watching the actions of the guests who are gathered about the table? Nay. You cannot tell what a man is like when he is dressed up and out for an evening entertainment. In order to find out what he truly is you must go and talk with him at his work. His Sunday clothes are not the true index of his life. Many a man has gone to an evening reception in a borrowed dress suit. Many a woman who is most elaborately appareled for a party is a slattern when in her own home. Thus in order to find out the different characteristics of the wedding guests we should follow one of the servants who goes forth by the King's command to gather in the guests for the wedding.

Now, what did the King say? "Go ye, therefore, into the highways and as many as ye shall find bid to the marriage." That means: "Oh, servant, as soon as you get into the street, give this wedding invitation to the first men and women and children you meet. Make no exceptions to this rule. Slight no one. Ask all who will to come." Now, who do you suppose the servant naturally first accosted? Probably the most conspicuous person in the street. It was doubtless the rich merchant or the military chieftain, astride his war charger, or it was the royal prince driving in his chariot. These men were naturally the most conspicuous in that crowded thoroughfare, therefore they were the first to whom I think the servant went and said: "Come! The King bids thee to come to the marriage of his son. Come, and come now!" But many of these rich men, the intellectual leaders, refused to come. Very likely they were among those whom the King had invited and who may have already refused the invitation. Some of all classes refused to come. But there were many of the intellectual world who did come, and thousands of the intellectual leaders of the world are coming to-day.

Did you ever try to estimate how many of our great men are Christians? Their numbers almost transcend human belief. Just study them in a political or governmental sense. A few years ago the editors of The Christian Herald sent forth a letter to all the governors of this country and, I believe, to all the members of the United States Congress and to the leaders both of the army and the navy, also to the justices of the supreme court, the President of the United States and his Cabinet and to distinguished educators and notable persons of both sexes. The letter, which was addressed to all alike, read: "Are you a friend of Christianity? Do you believe that Christianity is the friend of mankind? Does your belief extend to the recognition of a Supreme Being, to the divinity of Christ and to the surpassing potency of Christianity as a civilizing influence?" The answers came back by the scores and hundreds. They showed that from the President in the White House down to the humble executive of the western territory nearly all the governors, nearly all the senators and congressmen, nearly all the great leaders of our army and navy, were either out and out members of Christian churches or respecters of the same I kept those replies in my scrapbook. I could quote many of them now if I had the time. However, from memory I can say this—that nearly all of our great leaders in governmental life were ready to confess that their only hope for eternal salvation was the cross of Jesus Christ. And what is true of statecraft I believe will also be found true of medicine and of every other department of professional and business life if the statistician would only compile for us the records.

Do not talk to me about there being no intellectual giants in the banquet hall of the Divine Bridegroom. Why, there you can see the intellectual leaders everywhere around you. Agassiz once said that the greatest feast he ever attended was when he visited the great German naturalist, Oken. Lorenz Oken was rich in brain, but poor in pocket. Therefore he placed before Agassiz but two dishes—one of potatoes boiled and one of potatoes roasted. But while the young naturalist sat by the side of the great scientist Oken unfolded for him his investigations in natural philosophy. "Never before," wrote Agassiz, "were such potatoes grown on this planet, for the mind of the man seemed to enter into what we ate socially together, and I devoured his intellect while munching his potatoes. I repeat it—I never ate such a dinner before or since." As Agassiz, the great naturalist, was feasting because he was sitting at the table of Oken, so many of the great intellectual giants are feasting because they are sitting at the marriage banquet of Christ. They seem to care not what they eat or what they drink as long as Christ sits at the head of the table and they see him and hear his words. When a famous English writer lay ill a few years ago the nurse heard him talking. She went to his bedside and heard him feebly murmuring the words, "Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray the Lord my soul to keep." "I beg your pardon," said the nurse when she knew that he was praying. "I thought you wanted something." "I do," faintly replied Rudyard Kipling. "I want my Heavenly Father. He can care for me now." Yea, that Heavenly Father is not the hope of Rudyard Kipling alone. He is the hope of thousands of leaders of the world in almost every department of life. Am I wrong in asserting that the intellectual man is to be seen among the guests at the King's banquet which he gives for his Divine Son?

But no sooner does the messenger of the King give the invitation to the merchant prince and to the military chieftain or to the member of the sanhedrin than methinks I see him put his hand upon the shoulder of the servant who is holding his master's horse and say: "Won't you come to the King's marriage feast? The King bids me ask you to come also." "Ah, no," answers the servant; "I cannot come. My master would not allow it. He would not hire me a day if I did not keep in my social place. I can harness up his chariot and drive him to the temple, but I would not dare stand by his side in that temple of worship. This bridegroom's banquet is only for the aristocrat. It is spread for kings and queens. It is not for the plebean. If there was a servants' table adjoining the King's banquet hall I might come, but you would not have me sit down with the bridegroom on one side of me and my master on the other. Nay, this invitation is not for me." "Yes, it is, my friend," answers the King's messenger. "This invitation is for the kitchen as well as for the parlor, for the slave as well as for the mighty potentate."

Some people who are trying to build class churches do not believe this. They seem to think that the banquet hall of the Royal King can be controlled by a syndicate of capitalists or by social classes, even as a syndicate of real estate men can buy up a section of land and lay it out in building lots and decide who will live there and who will not. You know, of course, how this is done. It is by imposing "building restrictions." After the land has been laid out in building lots, the owners say to the buyers: "Now, this lot is worth $5,000. But you cannot buy it and build any house upon it worth less than $8,000. We do this in order to protect the neighborhood, so that only the wealthy can come in. We do not want the poor here. Neither do we want those who cannot move in our social set." Thus some class churches would bar the humble and poor out of the house of God where they worship. But, my brother, the gold lace of a king and the silk robe of a princess are not essential factors for entering into this banquet hall of the King's son. God does not say, "You can come if you are able to build a house worth $10,000"; or, "You can come if you are a university graduate"; or, "You can come if your family has a coat of arms." But God does say, "You can come, whether you wear a King's coronet or a King's livery, as long as you came in the name of Jesus Christ." Oh, servant, holding thy master's horse; oh, humble man, working as clerk in the store; oh, nursegirl, rocking the baby to sleep in the nursery, the King's messenger bids thee come to the marriage feast of his Son.

But while we follow the King's messenger down the highways or the public streets and hear him say to men on the right and to men on the left, "Come, come, come to the marriage of the King's son," I see him dart off to the side. He is about to disappear in the doorway of an adjoining house. "Where are you going, messenger?" I cry. "The King did not bid thee go into any homes! Thy command reads, 'Go ye, therefore, into the highways.' That is a private home. That is not the public street. Every man's home is his castle, and you have no right to enter there." "No right!" answers the guide. "Why, if I did not enter some homes there would be thousands of invalids who would never be invited to come to the King's banquet. Did you not see the pale cheek of that tired sick woman at the window? I am going to tell her to come to the marriage banquet of the King's son."

We enter the house and go into the sickroom. The nurse meets us at the door and says: "Hush! Don't make a noise. She is very sick to-day. She is failing very rapidly. She has been an invalid in this room for five, ten or even twenty years. Her time of departure is now not far off." "I know it," says the King's messenger. "I know it. She has had too many pains here. She has suffered enough. She must get up out of this bed and put on the bloom of eternal youth. She must renew her strength. She shall mount up with wings as eagles. She shall run and not be weary. She shall walk and not faint." "But," says the nurse, "she cannot even move a limb. See, she is paralyzed." "I know it," says the messenger, "but remember I have not come to bid her crawl around on a crutch. Remember I have come to ask her to attend the banquet of the King's son. If my lord is willing to ask her to come, surely he will give to her the needful strength with which to walk to his banquet hall and attend his son's feast." "Would you like to come, suffering invalid?" asks the messenger. "Well, rise up and come now."

What a blessed and glorious time that will be when all the sick and the helpless who for months and years have been counted among the "shut-ins" shall attend the banquet of the King's Son! When one of the greatest ministers of the world a few years ago was dying in the east his poor sick suffering grandchild, a lifelong invalid, was sobbing in the hall. As a friend of my mother was passing into the sickroom she stopped and spoke to the invalid child. "Is grandpa better?" the little girl asked. "No; he is dying," was the answer. "Oh," she said, "why did not God take me and leave him? I am of so little use in the world, and he is of so much use." Aye, when the King's banquet is to be spread God's messenger will come and get thee, weak, invalid grandchild, as well as grandmother. You have been praying enough in that dark room. God has heard your prayers. God's messenger will come soon, and when he comes you will not have to go into the banquet hall on a crutch. You shall not have to be carried there on a litter. You will walk there; you will leap there even as the lame man whom Peter spoke to at the the beautiful gate went into the temple leaping and singing and prasing God. The banquet, the banquet of the King, is spread for God's suffering ones of the sick chambers.

Thus as I go to that banquet door and push it a little open I find the strangest assortment of people. You would not believe those people are there unless you come and look for yourself. But as we are to-day following the King's messenger around and as we hear him saying to this man and to that, "Come to the marriage, come to the divine wedding feast," methinks he suddenly turns to us and says, "Friends, will you come also to the marriage banquet of the King's Son?" "Oh," some of us answer, "do not worry about me. I am all right. I know what it is to be a Christian. I was born in a Christian home. In a few years I will come, but not now. I expect to be saved; but, like the thief on the cross, I expect to be saved at the last moment. All that I have to say on my deathbed is, 'Lord, save me,' and it will be all right."

Is that so, my brother? I doubt that. I believe if you and I, who have grown up in Christian homes, are not willing to be saved now in all probability we shall never be saved at all. I like the interpretation which an old minister gave to a gentleman he was visiting. He said: "My friend, you expect to be saved, like the thief on the cross or like the man who was asked to go to work in God's vineyard at the eleventh hour, but did you ever stop to think that when those men were asked to go to work at the eleventh hour in all probability that was the first invitation they had ever received to go to work for Christ? Did you ever stop to think that in all probability the thief upon the cross had spent a whole lifetime with thieves and robbers and had never before been asked to come to Christ until he was on his own dying bed of a cross?" Oh, yes; at the eleventh hour men can be saved who have never heard the gospel invitation before, but for the most part those men who, like ourselves, have been born in Christian homes and who in their youth and young manhood have heard the invitation to come to the marriage banquet of the King's Son and have refused will in all probability never come at the eleventh hour.

Dare we refuse the King's invitation which the messenger is giving to us now?

Canada's Fortieth Anniversary.

The celebration of Dominion Day was marked by an unusual manifestation of national spirit. Many of the editorials were not perfunctory, says The Toronto Star, but dealt fully with the history of Confederation and the progress of the country since 1867. There were also references to the subject in the pulpit. The death of Alexander Muir on the eve of the anniversary gave another impulse to thought on national questions. Next year will be the fortieth anniversary of Confederation, and that anniversary might be celebrated in some special manner, with honors to the last two surviving fathers of Confederation, if they are still with us, and to such veterans as Sir Richard Cartwright, who can give us personal recollections of those troubled times.

others, Kelly directed his horse, and as he neared the door a couple of lusty, yellow haired boys of six or seven years of age came bounding out to meet him.

Mrs. Kelly was unexpectedly ladylike, small and very pretty, with a skin that no wind could tan, and her great, wistful, pathetic eyes appealed to Raymond with instant power. She greeted him cordially, and, while Kelly took the horses to the corral, he entered at her invitation. Her voice was as charming as her pale face and hair of burnished gold, and the young fellow looked upon her in surprise.

"You don't look very well, sir," Mrs. Kelly said to Raymond.

"I'm not very well, but I'm going to tear up the sod just the same. Your husband is to show me how."

"Matt can find gold easy enough, but he can't keep it."

"I've confessed as much, Nora, me girl, and if Raymond can help me on that score I'll put him in the way of makin' his pile. Can ye walk a few rods? If so, I'll show ye the mine and the chance."

The two men walked round the little grove of firs to the west and came upon some men busy with a very small upright engine hoisting ore from a shaft.

Raymond's blood leaped with the joy of it.

"Here," said Kelly, "is where we tap 'the river of life.' This is my own mine, but the wan I advise ye to take is that just beyond. I have an offer for me own prospect, but I shall not take it. If ye are agreeable, we'll lease the Last Dollar together and work it to the limit, for I'm satisfied its vein is the same as me own, which will keep; but if I strike ore, Curran, who owns the Last Dollar, will jump his price to the moon. Our lay is to bond and lease his mine, move my machinery over to his old shaft and work like mad to open up ore to buy in the property. Ye see, no one has touched pay ore in this quarter, and Curran is anxious to sell. He offers it at $15,000. I believe we can open a vein that'll pay for it in less than six months. Will ye go in with me?"

"I will."

As their hands met their hearts warmed to each other. Kelly removed his hat and was almost solemn as he said slowly: "This makes us both. Now let's go eat."

The Kelly home was as suited to its surroundings as a Swiss chalet. It had the dirt roof, the widely projecting eaves and the southern porch of a mountain cabin, and its latchstring and battened door were in keeping; only the windows, with their machine made frames, were out of key. There were two small bedrooms, a living room, which served also for dining room, and a tiny kitchen, and yet it produced on Raymond's mind the most charming effect of unhesitating hospitality and homeliness. This was due as much to the charm of Mrs. Kelly's manner as to the deep voiced, cordial invitation of the host himself. There was no lock on their door and no bar to their warm hearts.

But Raymond saw what Matt's loving eyes could not discern—Nora was overworked and losing heart. In spite of her ready smile and cordial seconding of her husband's invitation, "Ye must make your home with us," she was not strong enough to take on this extra care, and he resolved to stay in Bozle till he could build a cabin for himself.

CHAPTER X.

LATE in the afternoon, after they had talked long at the mouth of the mine, Kelly and Raymond left the house and walked out along the ridge toward Skytown, which was built where the ground rose from a pine clad plateau to a rocky point overlooking the valley to the north. It had but one business street, which repeated in unpainted lumber all the shoddy architecture of a prairie town, whose flaming battlements pretend to a dignity which they do not fulfill.

The chief business of the street was gambling. Next in order stood rumselling, with assaying a close third. The street was swarming, as usual, but the talk was directed for the moment to one topic. A convention of miners had been called to meet in the Golden Horn saloon, and several who knew Kelly called out, "Hello, Matt; we're going to make you president of the union."

Kelly smiled as if all this were a joke and introduced his friend and partner. Raymond shook hands with each man heartily, well knowing that if he were to remain in the camp it would be well to be on friendly terms with all. Following the lead of others, they were soon wedged into a throng which filled the largest saloon of the street, a huge gambling establishment called the Golden Horn, of which Marvin Hanley, a celebrated gambler, was proprietor.

For the first time since the opening of the Golden Horn's door gambling was suspended and the machines of chance set aside. The proprietor, a pale man with close clipped yellow hair, a man who looked like a Catholic priest, mounted a box at one end of the room and called the house to order. "You know the purposes of this meeting," he said. "Now, who will you have for chairman?"

"Kelly! Kelly!" cried a dozen men.

"Munro!" shouted those farther up the hall.

"Moved and seconded that Munro be chairman," said the smooth faced man. "All who favor say 'Aye!'" A shout of many mingled voices answered. "Opposed, 'No.'" Only an obvious minority voted "No." "Munro is elected. Jack, get up here!"

As the new chairman's head rose above the throng Raymond experienced a shock. "I know that man," he said under his breath. Munro was a clean shaven, boyish fellow, with black hair pushed back from his face. He was young and handsome and began speaking in a clear, musical and most persuasive voice. It was plain he was on good terms with his audience and quite certain of himself.

"I don't know why I should be made chairman of this meeting," he said after some local allusions, "unless it be to open the way for the real speaker and man of the hour—the man who has a message for you—Tom Larned of Dead Pine."

While the crowd applauded Larned climbed to his place and began to speak. He was a short man, with a forward thrust of the chin. His high forehead was smooth and pale, its calm lines in vivid contrast with his burning blue eyes. He ignored all of Munro's joking and thrust his way into the middle of his contention.

"I hear some men say we don't need a union here, but I tell you you do. You're going the way of all mining camps. As soon as the claims are all taken consolidations begin and wages will be cut. A big mining camp must be run by union labor. The work has got to be done by men bred to the mine, and they must be organized. If they're not, they'll work for nothing This camp is about to decline"—

"No! No!" shouted a dozen men.

The speaker held up a hand. "Wait a moment! I mean to say that this swarm of easy going tramps scratching the surface looking for a mine will begin to melt away. It is already melting away. These men on horseback, these grub stakers, these burro punchers, will not dig gold for other men." ["You bet they won't!" shouted a big lunged fellow.] "The real miners have got to get underground and stay there' You understand? Stay there! And they will want somebody on top to look after their interests. They'll want a union if you don't; but, I tell you, you short term miners will want a union before February is out."

In such wise he argued, and even Kelly admitted the truth of what he said. Others spoke, grizzled old fellows from other districts, men who had given up all hope of discovering a lead for themselves; men with families to feed and educate, who had fallen to contentment with a good wage and a steady job. But in some of the speeches a note of bitterness toward Valley Springs made itself heard. Skytown had begun to hate the valley as the home of those who lived on the labor of others, and some of those in the valley, as Raymond well knew, expressed their contempt of those who dwelt in the Sky by calling them "red necks," in allusion to their tanned or drink inflamed faces. Politically the two towns were already as wide apart as the poles, and references to this division were numerous during the evening. The county was divided against itself and hopelessly imbittered, and Bozle was eager to be free from the valley.

Kelly, weary of the wrangle, touched Raymond on the arm and turned toward the door. A big miner, detecting this movement, shouted out, "Here's Kelly taking a sneak!"

Instantly Kelly was seized, a couple of brawny fellows lifted him to the bar, and so, towering over them all, the big prospector took off his hat and, with smiling composure, said: "Boys, I wish ye well. I make no objection to the plans, but why should I, an old burro puncher, bother me head about a union? No one is cuttin' my wages. No one is shortenin' my hours of labor. Besides"—and here he broke into a broad smile—"I'm an employer of labor meself."

"Down wid 'im!" shouted Munro.

"To what extent?" asked another.

"To the whole of five men—not countin' meself," answered Kelly with a roguish grin. "And I'm a har-r-rd master."

Kelly playfully struck at him with his hat and then became serious. "Now, boys, let me tell you. I honestly don't think you need a union. The landscape is wide up here; there's a chance for every man in the hills. I believe in the big, free land. When any man tries to corner me, I take me mule and strike out into the wild country. I have no fear of the Red Star Mining company nor any other, and you needn't. I do not oppose the union. Mind what I'm sayin'. It's well enough for those who believe in it and nade it, but lave me out of it. The Kellys will take care of themselves."

Larned was on the box before Kelly had time to get down and, leveling his finger at him, cried out sharply:

"That's all well and good for you, Matt Kelly, a skilled prospector, a man with a paying mine already, but how about these men who have no skill in finding gold, who are working for money to start themselves a home? How about those who are hoping to bring their families here and clothe and educate them? They are not so fond of all outdoors. They haven't even the mule and the grub stake. They are holed up five hundred or a thousand feet underground, working for a company, and this company, I tell you, has no regard for its hands. Their interests are not those of the miner. You may blarney all you like, but the miners must look out for their own interests, just as the employer hires lawyers and agents to look after his."

"Very true," replied Kelly calmly. "I'm not objectin' to that. Organize and take care o' labor's interests, but don't ask me, an employer of labor, to throw up me hat when you vote to raise the wages of me five men. I'll fight scandalous"—

"Go it, Kelly! You have him on three legs and goin'!" shouted a wag, and, amid the laughter that followed, Kelly leaped down and made for the door.

When Raymond overtook him again he was in talk with a lean young fellow with large, bright eyes, who had the tone of an old and bitterly disappointed man.

Kelly introduced him. "Rob, shake hands with Mr. Dolan, correspondent of the Valley Springs News. Jim, this is my new partner."

Dolan, as he clasped hands, remarked, "You've met up with a good man, a man that won't do ye, and there aren't many like him in this town."

Only long after did it come to Raymond's mind that Kelly had been giving Dolan a note concerning their plans and that his whereabouts would be at once made known to Valley Springs and to Louis.

"Who is this man Munro?" asked Raymond as they left the reporter and started for home.

"He's a devil-may-care chap from Red Cliff. He pretends to be a miner and is a partner with an old fellow on the north side o' the hill, but he's workin' for Hanley—lookout for the roulette wheel. The boys all think a heap of him. They say he always gives 'em a square deal."

"Does he?"

"I think so. I never heard to the contrary."

"Larned was right about the union," said Raymond. "The big owners in the Springs are sending east for their miners. They know that men like you and me will not do their deep work for them. He's right, too, in saying these cowboys and farm hands from the states won't make miners. They don't intend to work underground. We'll find ourselves left short some morning if we depend on these fellows, who can hit the trail at ten minutes' notice."

"Sure thing," said Kelly. "This gettin' under the crust o' the earth and livin' there is unholy business—not for free men like ourselves. It's all goin' to be done by the Rooshians and the dagoes."

In silence the two men looked abroad over the valley toward the dim line of peaks faintly lit by the big silver bright moon.

A sentence from Richter came into Raymond's mind, "In the presence of beauty, beneath the stars, men think of love," and his heart ached with a sense of loss.

Unconsciously, in spite of his attempt to put himself away from her presence, Ann had come to dominate his musing hours. At thought of her he grew resolute and hopeful and, reaching forth a powerful hand, grappled the air as if it were the throat of a hitherto invincible opponent and said, "I will win!" He acknowledged that wealth had power to aid him. "So long as I am unknown and poor and in disgrace she can only consider me what I am—a failure. Money is a measure of value, and wealth I must have first; then leisure and the higher life."

CHAPTER XI.

ON the second morning after his meeting with Dolan, Raymond, riding down the trail toward Bozle, discovered a small figure toiling toward him, pausing often to rest. "It can't be Louis," he said, "and yet there's something familiar in that walk. It is Louis, and he's on my trail!"

When the boy, lifting his tired head, recognized the rider he uttered a fierce shout of joy, but he fairly staggered with weakness.

Raymond slid from his horse and put his arm about the reeling lad. "When did you come to camp?"

Louis leaned against his big friend. "Oh, I've been here a week. I knew you were here somewhere, but I couldn't get track of you. Don was over here yesterday, but I dodged him, and he went back. I didn't sign my own name on the register." He grinned slyly. "See my boots. Aren't they right?"

Raymond looked down at the boy's small legs clothed with miner's laced boots. "You believe in dressing the part, don't you? You are a kidlet." He laughed at the boy's chapfallen look, for Louis detested being called a boy, and added: "Well, what now? Does your sister know where you are?"

"No."

Raymond's whole expression changed. "Climb that horse," he said sternly. "You're going back to town, and you're going to send her a telegram at once."

As he led the horse down the hill Raymond comprehended something of the anxiety the runaway had brought to Ann and that he indirectly was the cause of it, but at the door of the office he said more gently: "Now, younker, hop off. You're going to send word to the folks that you're with me and safe."

He led the horse down the hill.

"You're not going to drive me away?"

Raymond looked at him in silence. "No. I'm going to put you to work."

The boy's face threw off its shadow. "That's bully! Now I'm all right. Give me a pen." He wrote:

As he handed it over he said gayly, "Will that do?"

"That's satisfactory. Now rush it."

As they walked out Raymond sternly asked: "Want to stay with me, do you? Well, everybody works where I live. We don't allow idlers. If you had something to do you'd keep out o' mischief."

Louis twisted his small right arm. "I'm ready for anything."

"Got your outfit—your whole kit?"

Raymond packed his hand bags on the horse, and together they set out up the trail. At first the lad exulted and cried out like a blue jay, but his breathing grew labored as they rose, and at last Raymond turned. "Now, see here, Louis, this air is pretty thin till a fellow gets used to it; you'd better mount. You'll enjoy the scenery better."

With a feeling that he was succumbing to an unmanly weakness, Louis clambered to the horse's back and perched among his possessions, while Raymond, striding ahead, led the way up and up till the whole world seemed coming into view. "Oh, this is fine! Jupiter, this is the place for me!"

He was unfeignedly delighted with everything—with the new shacks, with the slab tables and the plank chairs and with the liberal and smoking dinner which Mrs. Kelly provided—but he drew a hissing breath of admiration over the grand figure of old Matthew Kelly. "Gee, but you're a wonder! I must do you."

Kelly was puzzled and a little embarrassed by this outspoken admiration and regarded Louis with definite disfavor till he presented him with a pencil drawing of the lads playing on the doorstep, and then he said: "The Lord God has made a power o' people that the Kellys have not seen. This is wan of them. Now, isn't that a wonder? He put the whole thing together in five minutes." Thereafter he accepted the boy for the cunning that lay in his fingers.

Raymond wrote that night to Ann as formally as the riot in his brain would permit:

> I planned to take myself out of your life as completely as if I were dead, but Louis would not have it so. When I met him on the hill today and he told me how long he had been from home, I determined to hustle him back to the Springs, but he asked to stay a day or two, and here he is. Will you trust him with me? He will tire of it here by and by and go back to you of his own accord. Just now he is mad over the life and the scenery. As for myself, I am a new man, with new aspirations. They may not seem very high to you, for I am striving now to acquire gold, but that is only a means to an end. There is something else in the world for me to do. I don't know what it is to be—perhaps my care of this wonderful boy is a part of it. At any rate, he is here and not to be driven away without great risk to him and deep pain to me. So, unless you object, I shall keep him. Our life is rough, but not contaminating. I will see that no harm comes to him.

There was nothing more personal in the letter than this, but Ann's heart warmed to the writer unaccountably. And yet the thought of Louis in a mining camp troubled her. "I ought to go and fetch him away," she said to Don.

"No, no! You remain here, and I will go over and see the little scamp and bring him back if possible."

The next morning Raymond put into action a measure he had formulated during the night. He called Louis to him, and together they ascended the "Lookout," as Kelly called the ledge back of his cabin. "See here, lad, I've brought you up here to ask you a few questions," said he.

Louis braced himself. "Fire away!"

"As I understand it, you and—Ann are alone in the world—I mean you are closer to each other than to any one else—she's your best friend. You've given her a great deal of anxiety, my lad, and that isn't right. You must go straight back to her and apologize and ask her permission to come back. If she consents, then I'll make a place for you here."

"She won't consent. I'd have to run away again, and I'd do it!" he added defiantly.

Raymond, after a pause, slowly resumed: "Now, I want to make a compact with you. If you'll go down and see her, I will write a letter interceding for you and asking her to let you return."

The lad's face was suddenly illuminated. He threw out his small palm. "I'll do it!" he cried out, and his tone carried conviction.

Raymond continued: "You like me, and I like you. You can't live in the Springs, and your sister can't live here. So it seems that I must be your big brother and look after you. And, hark ye, you must mind what I say, or I'll take a birch to you."

This threat seemed not to appall the boy. "Can I work in the mine?"

"No; you can't work in the mine, but I'll find something on top for you to do. You must take care of those lungs of yours for awhile. But come, let's see if we can't catch the stage."

"Oh, let me stay till tomorrow!" pleaded the boy. "I don't want to go today. It's too beautiful to miss."

Raymond reflected a moment. "Very well, but you'll want that stage ride. It's one of the finest roads in the mountains. You rattle down the canyon tomorrow, sure thing. Remember that!"

Together they went down toward the mine, where a group of men were building a log cabin. "Here is where we are to live, provided your sister consents."

Barnett came riding up the hill about sundown and immediately at sight of Louis began a jocose tirade. "You scamp! You young flyaway! A nice interlude you've given us. Ann hadn't slept a wink for a week till she got your message yesterday. How long have you been here?"

Raymond hastened to say, "I induced him to wire as soon as he turned up."

"Had you been here all the time, you young rattlepate?"

Louis was not afraid of Barnett. "Yes; I was down there looking for Rob." He pointed toward the town of Bozle.

"Well, I'm to bring you home—instantly!"

Raymond winked at Barnett. "He's going tomorrow on a promise to me, Don. I've made a bargain with him. He can tell you about it on the way. Moreover, he is going by stage. He's on honor."

When they were alone Barnett said: "The most unaccountable of all things is the human heart. That boy is crazy about you. By the way, how's the lung?"

"Almost as good as ever."

"Your constitution is a wonder. And the mining deal?"

"Very promising."

In the talk that followed Raymond learned for the first time of the proposed consolidation of the Red Star with two or three other heavy properties, and they fell into a discussion of the camp.

"If I had my way," said Barnett, "I'd have this meddling idiot Larned thrown out of the camp. What business has he here? He's a rank outsider anyway, and this union is a breeder of war."

Raymond raised a warning hand. "Careful, Don. It doesn't do for you to say such things up here. This union has come to stay, and you who employ labor will do well to treat it with a certain measure of respect."

"But you're an employer too."

Raymond laughed. "Oh, my little crew don't count. They're all prospectors or cowboys, and, besides, I work right with them and am classed as a working miner. Your case is different."

Barnett went away calmly superior, but came back from a conference with Mackay, the superintendent of the Red Star, less haughty of manner, but distinctly more acrid of tone. "Mackay says this confounded union is growing rapidly and that practically every incoming miner joins at once. I told him to nip the thing in the bud, and he has begun to formulate a plan to do so."

"Wait a year," warned Raymond. "Wait till I pay for my mine."

That night as Louis sat before the fire in the center of the unfinished cabin his face shone with joy and the heart of the tall miner grew very tender toward him. It was good to have this gay young brother of his love to keep him company. A new sensation arose from having some one to plan for and to protect.

The dreaming lad, outstretched on a pile of blankets with his hands under his head and his small feet, clothed in moccasins, extended to the blaze, suddenly turned and said: "Rob, this is the kind of life for me. Wouldn't father have liked this? I'd be perfectly happy if I didn't have to pack off down the hill tomorrow. Why couldn't Ann come up here?"

"Maybe, by and by, when we get our cabin fixed up, we will ask your sister and Mrs. Barnett to come up and visit us," said Raymond.

Louis started up. "Oh, will you? If Ann were here I would never want to go back east again—never! I could live here always."

In the unfinished doorway stood a graceful young fellow in a white sombrero and a neatly fitting dark suit. "Jack Munro!" exclaimed Raymond, and they shook hands. "Sit down. This is a boy friend of mine from the Springs," he said, indicating Louis. "What can I do for you?"

"Nothing, old man. Just lined you out today. I heard that a man named Raymond had taken a lease with Kelly, but I didn't know it was you till I saw you with Barnett today. Well, this is wonderful! Where you from? What have you been doing since we—graduated?" There was something in his voice that eluded Louis. Raymond gave Munro a warning glance.

"Oh, a little of everything—cattle ranching, hunting, mining. I saw you last night in Hanley's saloon."

"Why didn't you speak up?"

Raymond hesitated. "I didn't know whether you"—

"Oh, rats! I'm not one to dodge. What did getting fired amount to anyway? I was ready to leave."

Raymond repeated his warning sign. "Have you been back—home?"

Munro smiled broadly. "You bet! I went back and swelled around in high feathers—told my side of the story—understand? I didn't let the institution get the drop on me. But, see here, come up to the saloon; I want to talk things over with you. The boys are bound to make me take a hand in this union."

"Can't do it now, Jack. But come down again. Louis is going back tomorrow, and I'll be alone for a day or two, and then we can talk freely."

"All right. There are a whole lot of things I want to turn over. By the Lord, this is wonderful—our meeting up here!" He was reluctant to go. "You bring up the old days. Well, so long."

Louis was much interested in the stranger. "Who was that, Rob?"

"A chap I used to know."

Next morning after breakfast Raymond hurried Louis off down the canyon to the stage and in his letter to Ann repeated his pledge to look carefully after the boy's health and to keep him out of mischief.

His absence had been a revelation of his value to Ann. She had not realized up to that moment how deeply his care was woven into her daily life. It was jealousy of Raymond's power—an acrid juice—which had turned her pity for him, while wounded and helpless, into resentment, and now that he was well and triumphantly drawing the boy to his side her heart was bitter with hatred, but she gave her consent to Louis' return because she dared not do otherwise, and in a letter to Raymond she said:

> I resign Louis into your hands, because his happiness is more than my own and because he no longer regards my wishes. I have heard much of the gambling and drinking of mining camps. I beg of you to guard him. He is so fine and sweet now, and defilement is so easy.

Upon reading this letter the camp suddenly became a dark and dangerous place to the young miner. He found it harder to make excuse for profanity and foul jests of the miners, and he went less and less among them and spent more of his time with the lad watching him draw or listening to him while he read.

Their cabin became the center of the finer spirits of the camp. Dolan and one or two of his friends often came in of an evening to smoke a pipe and play a friendly game of cards. "A visit to the bungalow always pays," said one young fellow whose weakness was drink. "They send a fellow away feeling respectable."

Mrs. Kelly supervised the housekeeping as well as she could, and the place was at least warm and cheerful. Once a fortnight Louis rode down the trail to spend Sunday with Ann, but Raymond steadily refused to join him, though he suffered keenly of loneliness.

"I am a miner now," he said. "I've taken myself out of that life." And Louis did not know when he carried these words to his sister that they Literary Notes.

SUMMER GOWNS AND ACCESSORIES.

White is always appropriate for summer gowns, but yellow seems to be preferred for the dressy functions crowded into August. The latest shade is the rich gold of ripened corn. This tint combines beautifully with the faint greens and warm blouses one sees in sun-burned corn-silk.

An artistic creation in this golden hue is veiled with very fine brown tulle and embroidered in the corn-silk tones. The hat that accompanies it is of mushroom shape, tilted by a high bandeau. It is of yellow chip and shows brown velvet ribbon bows on the crown. The bandeau is hidden by closely set choux of brown tulle, with golden dandelions nestling among them. The smart, tailored coaching gowns are trimmed with showy buttons, straps and touches of fine hand embroidery. Many of them are pure white, the material ranging from rajah, through serge, cloth and flannel, to every day washable corduroy. The coats are pony or sack shape, and show original treatment on the collar and cuffs. Inlays of salmon, orange, or coral silk are edged with lines of black. Ruby shows a line of yellow, burnt orange is combined with black and white, and yellow is blended with brown.

The coaching hats are either large or small. Arched plumes, osprey and peacock feathers, natural, or bleached and dyed, rise from the brims, while veils float in the breeze, showing every tint in the color card. Moss roses and moss are the latest in millinery effects.

Lace coats, white or dyed, and cut on pony lines are particularly chic. They are worn with gowns of any sheer material. These pretty coats are quite in keeping with the picture hats in hair and, in fine leghorn.—Helen Berkeley-Loyd, in The Delineator for August.

Driven From Home.

"Jinx had to put up at the hotel last night. He had quarreled with his cook."

"Why, the idea! What was Mrs. Jinx doing, to stand for a thing like that?"

"Mrs. Jinx is his cook."

Startled the Doctor.

An Aberdeenshire doctor who recently attended a woman was somewhat staggered at receipt of the following epistle from her: "Please come and vaccinate the child you gave birth to last week."

A Phrenological Point.

We have never yet seen a captain of a varsity crew who possessed a poor or retreating chin, a weak or turned up nose, a small neck or a diminutive brow or irresolute eyes.

No man's abilities are so remarkably shining as not to stand in need of a proper opportunity, a patron and even the praises of a friend to recommend him to the notice of the world.—Pliny.

Onion Soup and Fame.

Membership in the French academy, the hoped for reward of Gallic writers, was once closely associated with onion soup. During the restoration in France a club was formed under the title of "Diner de la Soupe a l'Onion." This organization contained twenty members. It met every three months, when the dinner was opened with an onion soup. The club was to endure until every associate was elected to the academy. This was accomplished in 1845, when the last banquet was held.

Pat's Escape.

"Arrah, now, dear honey," said the other, "poor Pat was condemned to be hanged, but he saved his life by dying in prison."

She Would.

"I'm going up to interview your wife," said the society reporter. "Do you suppose she'll talk?"

"Do I?" replied the husband. "Why, she'll be talking when your twenty-second edition comes out."

A Vacancy Filled.

Gerald—I have a cold in my head.
Geraldine—Well, I suppose that is better than nothing.—New York Press.

The Wood Pile.

Proofreader—You speak here of Nuritch's house as "a magnificent marble pile." Editor—Well? Proofreader—Well, it isn't marble at all. It's a frame building. Editor—That so? Then just substitute "wood" for "marble."

Though I am poor, send me to carry some gift to those who are poorer, some cheer to those who are lonelier.—Van Dyke.

"Journal" and "Journey."

Strictly speaking a "journal" should be a daily publication, although the word no longer has that limited use. The case of "journey" is exactly comparable. Even to Chaucer it still meant a day's progress, and in the fourteenth century it was possible to speak of one country as being "fifty-two journeyes" distant from another, a "journey" being reckoned usually as twenty miles. But "journey" calls up no suggestion whatever of a day now.

The left side of the face is usually considered by artists to be more beautiful than the right.

LIVING ON AN ACRE.

A family, with a modest house surrounded by an acre of good soil, even where the work has to be performed by members of the family who are occupied during the long hours of the day at various occupations, will produce almost everything used in the family. An acre of ground thoroughly well cultivated, with a little chicken yard as an adjunct, will reduce in a very material way the expenses of the family.

Of course acre lots are impossible inside of the city limits or even very close to the city limits. The person seeking so large a lot must go to a considerable distance from the business center, but the extension of electric lines enables even working people to live at a considerable distance from their place of employment. A man who earns $2.50 to twice that sum a day and who has a family consisting of a number of children often finds some difficulty in bringing them up properly and giving them the kind of an education he would wish. Such an investment as this, saving rent of say $20 a month and yielding eggs and all kinds of vegetables as well as considerable of the fruit that goes to make up the daily ration of each member of the family, will make his struggle in life much lighter. A man who has such a stake in the country will be in every way a better citizen than the one who spends his week's earnings as soon as they come into his hand, if not a week before they are earned.

Varied occupation exceeds all other processes in drawing out whatever of ability a man possesses. Here lies the advantage to the community—one superior to all economic gain—of the suburban acre lot for the home of the city wage earner. The cultivation of that acre in alternation with his other employment will bring him intellectual and spiritual enlargement, while it gives him a healthier body and wholesome surroundings in which to bring up his family.

THE GROWTH OF TROUT.

Age, Food and Temperature Seem to Have No Bearing on Size.

The Salvelinus fontinalis, which is currently but inaccurately called brook trout, was supposed for many years to be a small fish. Agassiz was largely instrumental in exploding this fallacy. It is not an uncommon thing for an angler with ordinary luck to get a six or seven pound trout of this variety. It is known that a trout may grow to weigh eleven or twelve pounds. There is, however, great difficulty in accounting for its variation in size.

In northeastern Canada there are large streams and lakes in which only fingerlings have ever been found. In the immediate vicinity of such waters three and four pound trout are quite common and seven and eight pounders are not phenomenal. In all these waters crustacea do not abound; there are no small fish of any kind except small trout. All the fish are pure fly feeders. At some places, it is true, frogs abound, but taken as a whole the difference in food supply is not an adequate explanation for the difference in growth.

There is no substantial difference in the waters as to temperature, size, origin and course. Climatic conditions are the same. The small trout taken to virgin lakes in which there are no fish have sometimes grown to a great size, have sometimes remained small and sometimes have not thriven. The anglers who haunt these waters have not yet found a satisfactory explanation of this peculiar condition of things. It is one of the mysteries which lends fascination to the art. "You never can tell what is going to happen when you go fishing."

Long Words or Short?

Which shall we prefer in speech and writing? Almost everybody will vote for the short word, and almost everybody will be voting for the best candidate. The short words are usually the strong words. They make up in muscle and liveliness what they lack in size, says the Manchester Union. And they are readily in the eyes of men who have thoughts that they wish to lodge in other minds. A man who should run out into the street and yell "Conflagration! Conflagration! Conflagration!" when his house was burning would be thought to be making a jest of the affair. And so in all matters where ideas are to be handed out quickly and clearly—the short word has first choice.

Cockfighting Among the Greeks.

The sport of cockfighting seems to have originated with Themistocles of Greece. When he was leading an army against the Persians he noted two cocks in a desperate battle. To stimulate the courage of his soldiers he pointed out the bravery of birds, and, having won his battle with the Persians, he ordered that an annual cockfight should be held to celebrate his victory. In England the records show that the first cockfight took place in 1191.

What He Meant.

"Don't forget to visit the mystery show while you are in Europe."

"Let's see, that's in one of the German cities, isn't it?"

"No, it's in Berne, Switzerland. I refer to the international sausage exhibition."

Danger In Soap.

A Philadelphia boy who was washing his face got soap in his eyes, fell off a step and broke his elbow. Small boys can show this to mamma.

Ambition is pitiless; every merit that it cannot use is contemptible in its eyes.—Joubert.

Picking a Way Across a Mountain.

Picking a way is good fun. You must first scout ahead in general. Then you determine more carefully just where each hoof is to fall. For instance, it is a question of whether you are to go above or below a certain ledge. You decide on going below because thus you will dodge a little climb and also a rather slippery looking rock slide. But on investigation you find, hidden by the bushes, a riven bowlder. There is no way around it. So then retrace your steps to the place where you made your first choice. The upper route again offers you an alternative. You select one; it turns out well; forks again. But you discover both these forks utterly impracticable. So back you must hike to the very beginning to discover, if you can, perhaps a third and heretofore unconsidered chance. Then, if none are good, you must cast in review the features of all your little explorations in order to determine which best lends itself to expedients. This consumes time, but it is great fun.

Milk Fed Kid.

"This is milk fed kid," said the leather merchant. "It is very soft and fine and pliable, isn't it?"

He smoothed the delicate white skin and went on:

"All first rate kid is milk fed. It comes to us from the French mountaineers. These men are superb goatherds. Their immense flocks supply the world's kid gloves. The goatherds of France are careful to keep their kids on an exclusive milk diet. They pen the little animals with their mothers in rocky inclosures, where there is no grass. At that the kids often escape, often manage to eat solid food, for, with almost human perversity, kids that shouldn't be weaned wean themselves early, whereas calves that should be weaned cling like grim death to milk. One meal of grass will spoil a kid's skin, will rob it of its softness and pliability, will harden and coarsen and stiffen it; hence, when you buy kid gloves always choose the milk fed kind."

The Name Tuxedo.

The Tuxedo coat got its name from the fashionable colony at Tuxedo, and the original name of the place was Duck Cedar. Lots of the old natives still call it Duck Cedar. George Tidabech, one of the original settlers of the country, named the place. The lake was then much smaller than it is now and was simply known as the fish pond. One day old Tidabech and his sons had gone there to shoot game. The ducks were very plentiful; numerous cedar trees were growing out of the rocks along the shore.

"Let us give this place a name," said the old man. "Let us call it Duck Cedar."

So Duck Cedar it was and continued to be for many years until the name was changed to Tuxedo.

Mark Twain on Advertising.

"There was a man," he said, "back Iowa way who was so pleased with an advertisement in the local paper that he wrote the following testimonial letter to the editor:

> "Mr. Editor: Sir—After selling all I could, giving barrels away, stuffing my hogs till they would eat no more, I still had last fall about 200 tons of big, juicy, fine flavored apples left on my hands. I inserted in your valuable paper an ad. that I was willing to send free a barrel of picked fruit, freight paid in advance by me, to any one who would apply, there being, of course, no charge for the barrel. You will hardly credit it, but that little forty cent ad. cleared out my whole stock of apples, and I could have disposed of five times the quantity on the same terms."

Drinking of Healths.

The drinking of healths in wine or liquor or other kinds originated in Britain at the time of the rule of the Danes, before Alfred the Great finally succeeded in driving them from the land. Owing to the assassination of Englishmen by the Danes, it became a custom to enter into compacts for the mutual preservation of health and security. These compacts were usually pledged in wine, and hence the custom of drinking healths.

A Spelling Test.

The catch question has often been asked, "How many words in the English language end in dous?" The common answer is four—hazardous, jeopardous, tremendous and stupendous. As a matter of fact, however, there are five, and the word often overlooked is hybridous, meaning mongrel or of mixed sort.

LACE BARK TREES.

The Beautiful and Serviceable Dress Materials They Yield.

There are in all about half a dozen lace bark trees in the world, so called because the inner bark yields a natural lace in ready made sheet form, which can be made up in serviceable articles of apparel. Only four of these curious species of trees are of much practical value. Tourists who have stopped at Hawaii or Samoa may recall the lace bark clothing of the natives—clothing of a neat brown color when new, of remarkable strength and of a fragrant odor, like freshly cured tobacco leaf. The native tapa cloth, as it is called, is made from the bark of the Brusonetia papirifera, but it is not usually included among the real lace bark trees. In its natural state the real lace bark is of a delicate cream white tint. It is probably a kind of fibrous pith. When the outer bark is removed it can be unfolded and unwound in one seamless piece, having a surface of a little more than a square yard. Washing and sun bleaching give it a dazzling white appearance. The fabric is airily light. It is used in the West Indies for mantillas, cravats, collars, window curtains—in a word, for every purpose that ordinary lace is used. In making up shawls, veils and the like it is customary to piece two sheets of lace bark together. Delicate and apparently weak as it is in single mesh, a bit of lace bark if rolled into a thin string will all but resist human strength to break it.

UNCONGENIAL FLOWERS.

Mignonette and Roses, For Instance, Will Not Mix.

The florist frowned as he took up an order for a table decoration. "That will never do," he muttered. After calling up the customer and suggesting a change, he told his new clerk a few things.

"You must never take an order that calls for a mixture of mignonette and roses," he said. "A centerpiece of those two flowers wouldn't last half through the luncheon. They simply wilt one another. I don't know why, but they can't get along together.

"It is true of many flowers. Pansies, for instance, last twice as long if they are not combined with any other flower, and the same may be said of violets. Jonquils and daffodils, on the other hand, seem to get a new lease of life if you combine considerable green with them. Carnations will go all to pieces if you combine them with roses, although the roses do not seem to be affected.

"It is more striking in combinations of green with flowers. If you try to use an entirely different type of foliage from what the flower is used to, it won't last so long. So I never put feathery foliage with lilies of the valley, for you know its natural foliage is a thick leaf. I never use thick leaves with carnations, for their foliage is of the feathery type. It isn't as though flowers fought, but they seem to grieve at being misunderstood."

CHURCH CHIMES OF YESTERDAY.

NOTES OF SERVICES IN BELLEVILLE'S DIFFERENT PLACES OF WORSHIP.

Christ Church.

Rev. Mr. Forster is at present occupying the pulpit of this church, in the absence of the Rector, Rev. R. C. Blagrave. Last evening his discourse was "Witness for Christ," and the text was from St. John 11th chapter, 2nd and 3rd verses.

At the morning service, Mr. M. Vanderwaters, of Toronto, sang a solo which was much appreciated.

St. Thomas'.

At the evening service the Rector, Rev. Rural Dean Beamish, preached, his subject being "Summer Time." His text was from the 74th Psalm and a portion of the 17th verse:

"Thou hast made summer and winter."

At the conclusion of the regular service a short recital was given, during which Mr. L. A. Piche, sang "O Paradise," by Brown, in a highly pleasing way.

Holloway St.

At Holloway St. there were interesting services yesterday, the pastor's text in the morning being Mark 12, 43, "The widow's mite, or a character whom Jesus commended." Showing the attention Jesus gave to the obligations we owe to God and His work. Jesus claims the children, and we must direct them in the use of money, as this indicates character, and the habit of childhood most likely grows up with the man and woman and a generous interest in God's work in fundamental and often a final test of Christian character. Let us recognise the presence of Christ, observing our every act and contribution to His Treasury and thus let us bring our children up for Christ and His church. The bouquets of cut flowers were numerous and the solos of Miss Price and Mr. Gordon were appreciated, as was also the selections of the choir. Mr. A. Chown presided at the organ with much acceptance.

William J. Cronk Has Two Families.

ADMITTED THE CHARGES ABOUT THE MATTER.

Napanee Beaver; William J. Cronk, was arrested and brought before Police Magistrate Rankin on Thursday morning to answer to a charge of assault on his sister-in-law. He was given two months in jail at hard labor without fine, for the purpose of giving the authorities time to look up his character. While in the witness box yesterday morning the prisoner admitted having a wife and eight children in Syracuse, N.Y., and also a wife and four children at Coe Hill, Ont., and it was very evident to the magistrate that his object in coming to Napanee was to break up a happy home here, which he has almost succeeded in doing.

CLARK'S CANNED MEATS.

The Last Rites.

The funeral of the late George Leach was held this morning. After brief services at the house the cortege proceeded to Emmanuel R. E. Church, of which the deceased was rector's warden, where services were held, and the Rector, Rev. A. M. Hubly, preached a memorial sermon. He eulogized the life of the gentleman who has just passed away, and said his influence would be felt for good by all who had known him. The floral tributes were tasteful and beautiful, including a pillow from the family and a wreath from the congregation of Emmanuel church. The bearers were all old friends of the deceased, namely, ex-Ald. Harris, Messrs. Dougherty, Worrell, S. Wedden, W. Kemp and Wm. Canning. Many citizens followed the hearse, showing the last tribute of respect to a good man and consistent Christian.

Albert College.

An important meeting of the Executive Committee of Albert College was held on Saturday afternoon last.

Quite extensive improvements will be made to the college building and property during the vacation. Several changes in the teaching staff have been made necessary by illness and other causes.

Mr. Fennell, B.A., an honor graduate of Victoria University in Mathematics and Physics, has been engaged to teach that department. He is highly recommended by Chancellor Burwash, and has had successful experience as a teacher.

Miss Margaret Baker, sister of Rev. Dr. Baker, has been engaged as teacher of Elocution and Physical Culture. She has had large experience as a teacher, and has studied under the best teachers in New York and Boston. She will be a great strength to that department.

Miss Isabelle McBrien, an honor normal graduate of the Lillian Massey School of Household Science, Toronto, has been engaged as teacher of Domestic Science. She comes highly recommended by both Inspector Leck and Mrs. Lillian Massey-Treble. She is the daughter of Mr. McBrien, Public School Inspector for Ontario, and she has had successful experience as a Public School teacher

The Normal Schools

HAMILTON, PETERBORO, STRATFORD AND NORTH BAY FAVORED — WHY KINGSTON DID NOT GET ONE.

Toronto, July 14.—From about 200 applicants four locations for the new Provincial Normal Schools were finally determined upon at yesterday afternoon's Cabinet meeting. Hamilton gets one, as anticipated. The eastern school goes to Peterboro, the western to Stratford, and the northern to North Bay.

Few matters have caused more difficulty, it is understood, within the privacy of the Council Chamber. At no fewer than nine deliberations of the Administration has the Normal School matter been threshed out, and adjourned, and a decision was only arrived at in the last moments of meeting. Many of the members of the House, in constituencies interested, have literally haunted the Parliament Buildings, and the Education Department for days, furthering the claims of their districts and the task of selection was a very delicate and difficult one.

Hamilton was assured the plum, but it is generally understood that the three remaining recommendations which come from the Department to the Cabinet were Kingston, Chatham and Meaford.

KINGSTON VS. PETERBORO.

Between Kingston and Peterboro the fight was long and bitter. It was alleged that Mr. Donald M. McIntyre, the defeated Conservative candidate, had secured the practical promise of this institution for the Limestone City, hence the Department's recommendation. But a majority of the Ministers claimed Kingston had its full quota of Government institutions. Mr. Bradburn, the Government member, who won Hon. Mr. Stratton's old constituency, arrived on the scene, and there were some doings. He championed the claims of Peterboro in no uncertain manner, claiming that city had earned its reward, and, it is rumored, even going so far as to intimate, at least to outsiders, that he was no longer willing to represent a constituency whose claims were overlooked in this matter.

After feeling the pulse of his colleagues, Hon. Mr. Hanna conceded the geographical impossibility of Sarnia for the west at the present time, and Chatham, whose claims were advanced by Mr. P. H. Bowyer, M.P.P. for East Kent, and Hon. Adam Beck, secured the initial recommendation. But Chatham was not received cordially by the Cabinet. The Maple City had, since the incoming of the new Government, furnished it with more than its share of worry and embarrassment, notably in license matters, where it was necessary to appoint three Boards of Commissioners within a year to obtain a working of the non-partizan license policy insisted upon by the Premier, and in matters of local patronage, and it was held by the majority Chatham was not entitled at the present time to preference over other equally favored sites. Stratford came to the fore and stayed with the struggle to the end. Three times her deputations were heard, and with her representative, Mr. John Torrance, they pulled off the prize. Some of the Stratford civic representatives stayed in Toronto to the end and left for home rejoicing last evening.

NEW ONTARIO'S CLAIMS.

The claims of New Ontario, with Hon. Mr. Cochrane in their van, overbalanced the arguments of Meaford and Owen Sound, although it is said there was almost a tacit understanding that the northern district will be favored when the Government decides to create additional Normal Schools, possibly two years hence.

Plans for these new institutions have been prepared by Mr. F. R. Heakes, Provincial Architect, and the work of building will commence almost immediately. Each school will cost $50,000, and will accommodate 150 students the year round. In each case the municipality is furnishing a site.

Fraternal Visit.

Twenty-five members of Loyal Moira Lodge, No. 116, Canadian Order Oddfellows, including District Deputy Grand Master J. W. Boyd, paid a visit yesterday to Loyal Strathcona Lodge, Allisonville, for the purpose of attending divine service. Wellington, Consecon and Earl Grey lodges were well represented. Bros B. F. Butler, P.D.G.M., Brighton district; Thos. F. Spencer, also Nelson Parliament, P.D.D.G.M's., of Belleville district; Bro. John Canning, Grand Lodge Officer, Belleville, were also present. Service was conducted by Rev. Bro. White, of Consecon. It was a very large gathering, and the Allisonville brethren are deserving of great credit for the manner in which they conducted the affairs of the day. The Belleville brethren had a very enjoyable trip and came home highly pleased with the way they were entertained.

BELLEVILLE.

Dougherty Lost His Horse and Buggy.

BUT IT WAS RETURNED — A POLICE COURT CASE.

In the early part of Saturday evening a man named Dougherty placed his horse and buggy under a shed in rear of the Ontario House, on Front street. When he went to go home at 10 o'clock he was much surprised to find his horse and buggy gone, and, making enquiries, could find no trace of it. The matter was reported to the police and about an hour later Sergeant Hayes saw a man drive into the yard from where the outfit was taken. The officer followed in and it proved to be Dougherty's property. A young Englishman named Charles Richardson was in the buggy and his story to the officer was that another party had driven the horse away and that he (Richardson) just brought it back. Richardson was, however, locked up and kept in the cells until this morning, when he was brought up before the magistrate.

Richardson was brought up before the Magistrate this morning and as Dougherty did not appear to prosecute the prisoner was allowed to go, upon promising to leave the city.

The soldiers received the speech with much applause and showed eagerness to join the union, which already is very strng in southern and southwestern Russia, Siberia, the Caucases and Turkestan. Yesterday's meeting was the first step toward organization in this locality.

The three shots fired were all effective. The murderer was a well-dressed man. He has been arrested, but not identified. The case is regarded as mysterious, as Gen. Kozlov was not connected with any political agitation.

The murderer, who is believed to be a Social Revolutionist, carried a photograph at which he gazed attentively before firing, as if comparing it with Gen. Kozlov.

It was a photograph of Gen. Trepoff.

THAW DISMISSES COUNSEL.

Murderer of Stanford White Will Not Have Insanity as Plea.

New York, July 16.—Mrs. Wm. Thaw, mother of Harry K. Thaw, accused of the murder of Stanford White, returned to New York Saturday on the steamer Kaiser-Augusta Victoria. When the passengers landed at 5 p. m. it was too late for Mrs. Thaw to visit her son in the tombs.

Won't Be Called Insane.

It was announced last night that Harry Thaw had dismissed the law firm of Black, Olcott, Gruber & Boning in a fit of anger. Judge Olcott, who has been the active member of the firm in connection with the case all along, has insisted that insanity be made the chief point in the defence, it is believed, while Thaw has insisted with emphasis that he would not permit the insanity plea. Saturday the firm received this letter from Thaw:

Dear Sirs,—After careful consideration, I have concluded to make a change in my attorneys, and while I have no possible criticism to make of your conduct of my case, my decision is such that I have concluded to no longer retain you as my attorneys. You will therefore regard your connection with my case as finished, and will please deliver all papers in my case to Clifford W. Hartridge.

I have sent a copy of this letter to Mr. Hartridge and ask you to communicate with him at once. Yours truly, Harry K. Thaw.

Mr. Hartridge heretofore acted as personal counsel to young Thaw.

There are Teas and Teas

There is what we might call the up-grade and the down-grade. Most teas come under the latter heading—not that they were'nt once good, but the average dealer buys a box of tea that he keeps under the counter where it gets stale and loses most of its goodness. Stroud's teas are of the up-grade variety. We receive our teas fresh every week from our headquarters in Montreal, and while we have them in our store we keep them in tins that are practically air tight, but we don't have them long enough for them to get stale.

WORKMEN IN ATTACK

Collisions With Police in the Russian Capital.

Nobles Unite Under Count Ignatieff Against Expropriation of Their Properties by Law and Despoilation by the Peasants — Drift Towards Decentralization of the Empire Becoming Apparent.

St. Petersburg, July 17.—Sunday night witnessed the usual collision between workmen and police and gendarmes in the industrial quarters of the capital.

The most serious affair occurred on the Schlusselburg road, where a crowd of 2,000 persons attacked a steam street car, which ran over a drunken soldier. The crowd stopped the car with obstacles placed across the track with the intention of lynching the engineer and the conductor, but were finally dissuaded by the pacific counsels of a workman.

Unite Under Ignatieff.

The nobles having large estates, under the leadership of Count Ignatieff, ex-governor of Kieff; Prince Kassatkin Rostovsky, and M. Colovin, president of the Moscow zemstvo, have formed an organization for the mutual protection of their properties, both against expropriation by law and despoliation by the peasants.

The different groups in Parliament are systematically sending members into the country campaigning in favor of the prestige of Parliament. From the very beginning, by tacit understanding, no roll calls have been taken at the sessions of the Lower House, in order that, should reaction again get the upper hand, the Government will have no record of the votes with which to prosecute members.

Progress Is Toward Decentralization.

Representatives in Parliament of the various regions of the empire are uniting, irrespective of party affiliations, for the advancement of the local interests. The Armenians, Tartars, Georgians and Cossacks of the Caucasus have formed a separate group, and the Little Russians have also united. The Poles and the members from the Baltic provinces were previously organized. This movement shows plainly a drift towards decentralization, and indicates the natural tendency towards the disintegration of the vast empire once the grip of the central authority is broken.

New Rates Suggested.

Commercial Travelers' Co. Before Insurance Commission

Actuary Report Is Presented to the Dominion Investigators Before the Directors of the Association Get it--Only One Loan With Any Member of the Association In Its History--Treasurer's Figuring Stopped.

Toronto, July 17.—Joseph Taylor, president and manager of the Commercial Travelers' Mutual Benefit Association, told the Dominion Insurance Commission yesterday morning that the society never had a permanent actuary, but had engaged actuaries on certain occasions. He did not consider an actuary necessary. Mr. Taylor devoted only a portion of his time to the society. Mr. Ivens, the agent, was paid $600 a year and $2 for every accepted member.

The Mutual Benefit, which was an outgrowth of the Commercial Travelers' Association, insured merchants, manufacturers and clerks, as well as commercial travelers. Prior to 1888 no medical examinations were in vogue. The payment of certificates to beneficiaries was dependent on the assessments being sufficiently large, which they had always been. Besides, the society had power to raise the rates if the members' sanction could be obtained.

In 1901 it was decided that the rates were too low. Two years previously it was agreed that there should be a change in the method of management, and efforts made to secure members in the insurance branch of the Commercial Travelers' Association.

The investments of this society were all in real estate and debentures, and only one questionable deal with any of the members was put through when R. L. Patterson got a loan on property. The members passed a resolution of want of confidence in the board as a result, and since then no loans have been made.

Mr. Taylor's examination was continued in the afternoon. The report of Medical Referee Dr. Elliott re. death rates on Jan. 16, '97, was read by Mr. Tilley. This report dealt with the conditions of the Commercial Travelers' at the time, also making suggestions whereby the medical examination should be made strict and on a more substantial basis. The duties of the medical examiners were laid down for the benefit of the board.

Mr. Tilley put this report in as an exhibit, to which was attached a memo from the then secretary criticizing the report in detail, which he read. Witness explained that the memo was for the use of the president.

The report of Sidney A. Pike, I.A.D., suggested that unless the rates were changed so that the old policyholders should pay lighter premiums, there would be disaster. This was overcome by the increase of the rates in 1900 for they practically cETAOIN a ql SHC all new members coming in, and they practically carried the old ones.

Mr. Tilley read a report of another actuary, which suggested the premiums be based on the Hm. table.

At this point Treasurer E. Fielding strenuously objected to this report being read as it had never come before the Board of Directors, but Mr. Tilley continued reading the report.

The witness said that Col. MacDonald's report was not agreeable to them for in suggesting the Hm. table he was putting the premium on too high a basis. The majority of the members were against higher rates, but witness thought the rate should be raised slightly higher. Some suggestions of Col. MacDonald's, however, were adopted.

In the commission, Mr. Taylor said, "In my opinion, the rate should be changed as the age implies according to their age. We should practically come in as new members. This would make our affairs stable and more satisfactory. The old members are too much of a drag."

The lapse rate was about 20 per cent. when the change of rate took place.

The gross income from 1901 to 1905 was $441,108.94, and the gross expenses $400,343.88, leaving a profit of $40,765.06. Assets, Dec. 31, '05, $58,976, liabilities $4,538, leaving excess assets of $54,258, providing for no reserve. The business in force was $1,676,000.

Mr. Tilley found that the salaries list was governed by the amount of expenses.

Members of the society could get any information and at all times have access to the books. There was a case, however, when some one wanted to make a list of the members, he was ignored.

Votes by mail were carried to a successful conclusion in this campaign, but it has never been necessary to furnish this list only to an occasional.

Treasurer Fielding belittled Mr. Pike and his report. He knew something about actuarial work, and considered the Hm. table a defunct proposition. He commenced a problem in mathematics, but was stopped by Judge MacTavish, who said, "We have no time to study medicine."

"I believe the rates are equitable and safe," said Mr. Fielding.

"Mr. MacDonald's report has no business to come into this court in condemnation of our business."

Crime In Canada.

Some interesting figures are to be found in the volume of criminal statistics of Canada for 1904, which has lately been issued. Crime seems to be making no alarming increase in this country, when the growth of the population is taken into consideration. In 1903 there were 9,642 charges laid, resulting in 6,541 convictions. In 1904 the charges numbered 9,901 and convictions 6,754. There must be more groundless charges laid in the west than in the older provinces, or else justice is not so sure, for while the percentage of convictions to charges was 81.25 in Quebec, it was but 52.84 in the Territories.

The number of convictions by divisions together with the ratio per 10,000 of the population was as follows: The Territories, 532, 19.43; British Columbia, 379, 17.46; Manitoba, 489, 16.00; Ontario, 3,034, 13.75; Quebec, 434, 9.38; New Brunswick, 122, 3.65; Prince Edward Island 28, 2.76.

Women criminals are fortunately rare. Only 5.58 per cent. of those convicted, or 377, were females, as against 406, or 6.18 per cent. in 1903.

Crime among juveniles showed a marked decrease. In 1903 there were 1,038 offenders under 16 years of age, and in 1904 there were but 697, a decrease of 38.85 per cent.

The occupations of those sentenced were given as follows: Agriculture, 4.38; commercial, 12.94; domestic, 7.04; industrial, 10.76; professional, 0.65; laborers, 41.38; not given, 25.85.

Unmarried persons form the great bulk of the criminal class. Of the offenders of 1904, 24.86 per cent. were married, 1.77 per cent. widowed, and 62.11 per cent. unmarried.

Illiterates are, in proportion to their number in the country, the most frequent criminals. They represent 9.75 per cent., those of elementary education 75.83 per cent., those of superior education only 2.12 per cent.

Most of the criminals convicted use liquors, 60.48 per cent. being classed as moderate drinkers and 27.02 as immoderate.

The religious persuasion of criminals is not very important. Many of them when convicted will answer questions as to their religion at random although the denomination of their parents probably gets the preference. In 1904 there were classed as follows: Anglicans, 15.6 per cent.; Methodists, 9.7; Presbyterians, 8.0; Baptists, 2.8; Roman Catholics, 39.1. A table given in the report shows an average for ten years of Anglicans 16.4; Methodists, 9.8; Presbyterians, 7.5; Baptists, 2.9; Roman Catholics, 40.01.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Good evening. Not buying any furs these days, are you?

How many visitors are you going to have next Saturday, Sunday and Monday?

As an instance of how Belleville boys migrate, take the case of a young fellow just come home from a big Canadian city. "I haven't much pleasure in coming home now," he said, "for all the fellows I used to chum with have moved away." And he named over half a dozen of them, all gone away in the past year. What a big and prosperous city Belleville would be, if all her boys and girls had stayed at home!

This kind of weather is enough to set the male shirtwaist controversy raging again.

The Lord's Day Act does not come into force till next March, but the Ten Commandments are enough for anybody of an old-fashioned turn of mind. The Hamilton Times man seems to have the correct idea of Sunday labor. He says:

"Pains and penalties are not required to keep me from working on Sunday. If I put in six days' hard, honest work in a week, I am ready for the seventh as a day of rest. Why should any man want to work on Sunday? Does any man want to work on that day? I don't think it. The trouble is there are a lot of people who want to have others work on the seventh day, but there are not so many who want to work themselves."

That's about the size of it.

The Russian soldiers about Tsarskoe-Selo rioted because they were forbidden to read the newspapers. Probably the government feared that the help-wanted ads would lead the soldiers to desert.

Professor Crook, of Amherst, thinks that fortunes are swollen beyond healthy limits when they yield from $5,000,000 to $20,000,000 income a year. Most newspaper men will agree with the professor. Their fortunes seldom get beyond the figures named.

At the present rate at which the weeds are being cut, a good many of 'em will die of old age before the man with the scythe gets round to them.

The session of Parliament just closed is likely to go down in history as the "Scandal" session, for, as those who followed the proceedings know the main business of the Opposition during the session was in showing how grafters had been robbing the country, and the main business of the Government and its supporters was in defending rotten transactions which loomed up as monuments of graft. But to save its own reputation the Government had to defend them, were they ten times as bad.

It must be remembered, however, that the revelations at Ottawa this session are not so much the result of extra effort on the part of the Opposition as they are the cumulative effect of years of dishonest public service. Discreditable work on the part of the Government is coming to light for the simple reason that it can no longer be concealed. It has become known, to officials and friends enjoying the confidence of the Ministers, and there comes a point where the facts can no longer be suppressed. Such a point has now been reached at Ottawa.

No one who has followed the proceedings at Ottawa this session can escape the conclusion that the Laurier Government is weaker today than it has been at any time since its accession to power. It is weaker in the quality of its members, weaker in the fading personality of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and worse still, weaker in its forfeiture of public confidence. The same feeling is abroad concerning the Laurier Government that was in the air when Cap. Sullivan and his co-workers were using every means in their power to keep Ross, Stratton, et al. at the head of the Ontario Government. There are the same reasons why the same feeling should be abroad, and there is excellent reason, as one reads the signs of the times, to believe that, at the next election, the same result will be attained as came to pass on January 25th, 1905 — the grafters and justifiers of wrong will go down and out.

"One of the Salvation Army Band" writes:

"In reply to a little item that appeared in your paper last evening, would say if the good gentleman that has been finding fault can't stand the sound of sacred music here what will he do when he gets to Heaven where sounds of praise and music ascend for ever and ever. Probably the reason we have been playing so lustily lately is God has been working wonderfully in our midst, and desperate drunkards and sinners have been getting saved. To God be all the glory. Trusting we have not annoyed anyone else and thanking you for your space. I am, sincerely yours,

People who have had occasion to go to the wharves lately must have been very disagreeably impressed by the dust which is inches deep on the street down that way. When we remember that many visitors to our city come in by the boats these days it can readily be seen that the said dust is anything but a recommendation in the eyes of strangers. The powers that be only provide for watering Front St. as far down as the market, but Mayor Sulman, with the energy which characterizes him, has arranged that Front St. shall, for the present, at all events, be watered as far as Queen Victoria park, and that Dundas St., as far as the railroad crossing, shall also be watered.

This is very good so far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. Front St. should be watered clear down to the docks, at all events while the excursion and picnic season is on. The street is now much travelled by ladies and children, and that they, on their way to and from the boats, should be enveloped in clouds of dust every two or three minutes after they pass the entrance to Victoria park, is disgusting. The city should pay for the watering of the street—at least it should pay a share. It is likely the transportation companies would pay their share if they were approached, as they might easily see it would be to their interest.

There would, we opine, be very little objection to the civic authorities taking this matter up. All classes of our citizens use the street in question, and so far as the expense is concerned—well, it would be a good thing if all the city's money were spent as wisely as that would be.

Toronto Globe: Good marble is much in demand and is rarely distributed. It is, therefore, a very valuable kind of rock. The announcement of the discovery of an immense deposit near Bancroft, in Hastings County, is, therefore, more than ordinarily interesting from the economic point of view.

The dear old Globe is getting so swift it may be arrested for scorching. The discovery in question was announced nearly two years ago.

Forty Years in The Ministry.

Sunday morning the congregation of Dunn Avenue Methodist Church, says a Toronto paper, listened to a sermon by the Rev. T. M. Campbell, an ex-president of the Bay of Quinte Conference, on "Forty Years in the Ministry." His text was Deuteronomy 8: 2, "And thou shalt remember all the way the Lord thy God led thee these forty years." "Forty years ago to-day," said Mr. Campbell, "I began my ministry in the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and by the kindness of our pastor I am invited to celebrate the occasion in a sermon this morning." After some personal and family references, he spoke of the significance of the words of the text, as spoken by Moses, that great patriot and prophet of Israel, and announced as his theme, "Forty years' growth and development of Canada, and forty years' growth and development of Methodism." The first part was patriotic, and his array of facts and figures was frequently punctuated with the words, "this is the way the Lord our God has led us these forty years." The second part of the discourse was a review of Methodist history for the past forty years, and a contrast between the Methodism of 1866 and 1906. The sermon, many parts of which were eloquent, was followed with intense interest by the congregation, and at the close of the service Mr. Cook and many of the congregation went forward to congratulate Mr. Campbell and express their enjoyment of the sermon.

In Preparation For a Rainy Day.

The members of Christ Church choir last evening presented Mr. Bruce Bottum with a handsome umbrella. The recipient is leaving the city, and the choir desired, before he left, to express their appreciation of his services. Mr. Bottum, although only a young man, had been connected with the choir for some years.

Coins Wouldn't Keep Out

(Buffalo Express.)

It is not astonishing that the Canadian plan of getting United States silver coins out of the Dominion did not work well. The Canadian Government made an arrangement with the banks by which it became profitable for the banks to impound U. S. silver and turn it over to the government for deportation. The arrangement expired yesterday, and it is said that there is but little more Canadian silver in circulation now than there was before the deportation began.

The inference is that the deported silver found its way back into Canada. Silver coins were exported in bulk, and flowed back in driblets. Every tourist from this side of the line left United States money in Canada. There was no real resistance to it there: it was even welcomed, when the tourist wished to spend any. What the Canadian Government really ought to do is to plant itself down on the border in a big chair, and say "Come no farther, Yankee silver!" King Canute tried the same plan, in reference to a different substance one. But it is shocking that discourteous tourists should keep on forcing U. S. silver upon their unwilling but amiable Canadian cousins.

Girl Slaves in China.

A native writer in a Chinese publication remarks: "When a girl is sold in China she becomes the slave of her owner and a part of his property. She no longer retains her freeborn rights, but surrenders them all to the will of those who own her. She receives no compensation for her labor, but is obliged to accept such raiment and food as her owner may be pleased to give her. In cases of tyranny or gross cruelty she cannot appeal for redress. She may be resold, given away or cast off in the streets at the arbitrary will of her master. All freedom is denied her, and she remains a tool and chattel in the hands of her owner until she is sold again or until death releases her from her unwilling fate."

The Black Maria.

"Black Maria" is a familiar term, with an origin more or less mysterious. It has been suggested that "Maria" really represents the old word "marinated," which meant transported or "married," a slang expression formerly applied to persons chained or handcuffed together on the way to jail. But more attractive is the story that in the old colonial days a gigantic and brawny negress kept a sailors' boarding house at Boston and frequently lent her strength to the cause of law and order. Once she took three sailors to the lockup unassisted. "Send for Black Maria," it is said, became a regular way of hinting that a man ought to be jailed.

One English Seal.

The parish council of Rudgwick, Sussex, England, possesses an official seal in which the occupations of all the members are indicated. Thus the vicar is represented by an open Bible, the farmer by some trees, the coal dealer by a sack, the miller by a mill, the innkeeper by a bottle and jug, the bootmaker by a boot, the auctioneer by a hammer, the doctor by a medicine bottle, the carpenter by a plane and the baker by a loaf.

The Violin.

Each instrument excels in some particular passage, the piano in scale passages, the harp in arpeggio, the mandolin in the rapid repetition of one note, the banjo in the rapid playing of broken chords, and so with other instruments; but the violin can beat them all on their own ground, while there is much violin music that can be played on no other instrument.

An Optimist.

"Blank started out to be a rose specialist, but the insects ate up his flowers so fast he had to give it up."

"Wasn't he discouraged?"

"No; he found so many interesting varieties of bugs he went in for that subject, and now he's just as enthusiastic over bugs as he was over flowers!"

Nothing Doing.

"Miss May," began Mr. Hoamley, "would you—er—be mad if I were to kiss you?"

"Not necessarily," replied the bright girl, "but I would certainly be mad to let you."

Seen and Heard.

Enid—My new bonnet attracted a great deal of attention in church. Edna—Why, all the girls said it was your new shoes.

I have lived to thank God that all my prayers have not been answered.—Jean Ingelow.

THE GOORALS OF POLAND.

Honest, Hospitable and Brave, but Obstinate and Quarrelsome.

The character of the goorals has nothing in common with the humble peasants of the low country. In their good qualities and faults they rather resemble the proud noblemen of Poland. They are vivacious, honest, hospitable and full of pride, bravery and chivalry, on which one may always count. But their defects are grave. Obstinacy and quarrels lead them often to bloody fights, the lack of thrift is frequent among them and superstitions haunt them at every step. They love nature and in their songs praise their gigantic peaks, spruce forests and the clouds and rain. They build their houses facing Tatra, which they constantly observe and consult about weather conditions. A gooral cannot live without his mountains, and if he sometimes leaves them homesickness will soon bring him back.

They are very religious, but their Christian faith is mixed with old superstitions, and the Roman Catholic rites are mingled with weird, often very picturesque, usages which have their origin in the old Slavonic paganism. So, for instance, on St. John's night Sobotka is celebrated by burning bonfires on fields and hills and by dancing, a festivity which in pagan times was held on the summer solstice in honor of Sviatovit, the god of sun, fire and love.

On Easter holidays from every house various kinds of food are brought into the church to be blessed by the priest, or the priest, accompanied by a sexton, goes to the house, where on a long, white covered table cake, eggs and venison await his blessing. This is called swiocone. The table remains covered with food for a week to await all friends of the house that may come.

The Polish tongue among the mountaineers has pleasant, soft inflections, and their dialect resembles the old Polish of the fifteenth or sixteenth century. The picturesque and practical costume of the goorals consists of a coarse linen shirt fastened with a brass brooch; a serdak, which is a sleeveless sheepskin jacket of a reddish color, richly decorated with applique ornaments of colored leather and silk embroidery and lined with fur; tight fitting trousers of coarse, whitish, homemade woolen cloth, and a cloak called tsuha, worn usually over one shoulder. A black felt hat shaped like a mushroom and soft leather sandals (perpce) complete a costume that weighs from thirty-five to thirty-eight pounds, but is a good protection against cold and the rain which in these regions is frequent, for twenty days in a month are at least drizzly.—W. T. Benda in Century.

Fort Saratoga.

With the history of Old Saratoga the names of Schuyler and Livingston are closely associated. Fort Saratoga was built in 1690 by Major Peter Philip Schuyler, and around it grew up a small settlement which suffered many vicissitudes during the troublous times of the next hundred years. Lying on the thoroughfare from Canada to New York, this northern valley of the Hudson was always in dispute in the French and Indian war, and in the Revolution until the great battle of Saratoga—the first victory over which the American flag waved, and one of the fifteen decisive battles of the world. The actual battleground is several miles away from the settlement and is marked today by many stones recording the brave deeds of our American soldiers. The house still stands in which Arnold was confined as prisoner and from which he escaped in time to help turn the tide of battle toward victory.

A Too Familiar Snake.

Seeing snakes is a common experience with the inhabitants of India and one unconnected with any suggestions of bibulousness. An English nurse tells of a little boy who lived in the next bungalow to hers and had his bread and milk every day on the veranda sitting in a child's high chair. One morning, hearing him talking and crowing to himself apparently, she was paralyzed on looking out to see him gently tapping the head of a cobra with his spoon, saying, "Naughty, naughty!" The snake was drinking the milk out of the bowl, paying no heed to the child. In that mysterious country the snakes may be heard rustling across the verandas and have an untidy habit of shedding their skins anywhere.

He Showed the Way.

On the 16th of August, 1807, Colonel Michel Ney, duke of Elchingen, having received orders to charge, turned to his men and shouted to them in a voice of thunder:

"My lads, I have an income of 300,000 francs, and you haven't a farthing. Keep your eye on your colonel as he charges, and do as he does."

So saying, he rode off as hard as he could tear in the direction of the enemy. The whole regiment followed him as though electrified.

Modern Cannon.

In modern high velocity cannon the pressure of the gases at the moment of firing generates tremendous heat. It is estimated that this heat runs as high as 8,000 degrees and even 9,000 degrees. The white hot gases eat away the steel lining of the guns in much the same way as streams of boiling water eat away a block of ice.

A Puzzler.

Johnnie—Pa, equine is a horse, isn't it? Father—Yes. Johnnie—And cow is a kind of an ox, isn't it? Father—Yes, a sort of an ox. Johnnie—Than what is an equinox?

Politeness is a coin destined to enrich those who give it away.

AT THE TOP OF THE ROAD.

(Charles Buxton Going.)

"But lord," she said, "my shoulders still are strong—
I have been used to bear the load so long;

"And see, the hill is passed and smooth the road——"
"Yes," said the Stranger, "yield me now thy load."

Gently he took it from her, and she stood
Straight-limbed and lithe, in new-found maidenhood.

Amid long, sunlit fields; around them sprang
A tender breeze, and birds and rivers sang.

"My lord," she said, "the land is very fair!"
Smiling, he answered; "Was it not so there?"

"There?" In her voice a wondering question lay,
"Was I not always here, then, as today?"

He turned to her with strange, deep eyes aflame:
"Knowest thou not this kingdom nor my name?"

"Nay," she replied, "but this I understand;
That thou are Lord of Life in this dear land!"

"Lord of the Land; but men have named me Death."

To connect Lake Winnipeg with Lake Superior by a canal navigable by the largest lake vessel would be a great project even for J. J. Hill. If he can accomplish the construction of such a canal as a private enterprise it would speedily put him ahead of all rivals for the trade of western Canada. This is, of course, out of the question. If there is to be a canal there at all it must be a Government undertaking and it must be open to all vessels on the same terms.

The Canadian Churchman delivers itself in favor of the short church service during the summer months. "A short, fresh, well-considered sermon," says the Churchman, "is, to our mind, far more effective on a hot, sultry summer day than one of greater length." To this many congregations will give a ready assent.

Sisters of Mercy in the London hospitals no longer wear the familiar black garb of their order while on duty. The nurses realized that a white costume would be more cheerful and hygienic, and they therefore took steps for its adoption. Two little dolls were dressed, one in the regulation costume and the other in the proposed new uniform. The dolls were sent to Rome, and high officials of the church were called on to pronounce an opinion. It was finally decided that the nurses were right in desiring a change, and the white uniform was authorized.

Newspaper men in Great Britain are discussing plans for a censorship of the press, to be exercised only in times of grave national peril. The remarkable success of the Japanese during the late war in keeping their plans secret has shown how important secrecy may be at certain times. The efficiency of a fleet especially is greatly increased when its movements may be hidden from the enemy. The British Government would evidently hesitate to provide a censorship without the consent of the press itself. A committee of representatives from the great English dailies have been in consultation with the government with regard to the framing of a satisfactory act.

The old-age pension commission appointed by the Australian Government have made their report, and recommend that such pensions be provided throughout the commonwealth, the maximum to be $2.43 per week, which, it is estimated, will require $7,299,756 per annum. The game of hare and hounds originated in England about 1640.

The game of hide and seek came from Europe about the beginning of the seventeenth century.

Blind man's buff found its origin with the Greeks, among whom it was often indulged in by adults.

Skipping rope is a childish pastime of ancient origin. In place of rope a vine stripped of leaves was originally used.

The spinning of tops came from the Greeks. Records show that this kind of fun was in vogue at the time of Virgil.

Kite flying is about two centuries old in Europe. Probably it originated in China, where the practice of flying kites is very ancient.

The game of seeing who can hop the longest on one foot came from the ancient Greeks, among whom it was practiced by the youths for wagers.

Cathedral's Title Chain.

There is one thing in particular in St. Patrick's cathedral in New York that you cannot see in any other building in the city, if indeed in the country. It is a framed sheet of paper hanging on the wall of the southern entrance that contains the complete chain of title of the property on which the edifice stands from the time it was first sold until the church authorities bought it. The only reason for its being there so far as any one knows is to put a stop to the old story that the property was originally purchased by the church for a dollar. To settle this point the chain of title shows how much was paid for it in the beginning, and from that point on each change of ownership is accompanied by the price it was sold for.

HAMLIN GARLAND

conveyed a deeper meaning. Ann was aware that Raymond was holding aloof from her, and, while she respected him for his consideration, she was, after all, a woman and resented his self mastery a little.

She was beginning to be bored to hopelessness by the narrow life at the Springs, under conditions which seemed to the outsider ideally beautiful. But Louis came down each time browner, more manly in bearing—almost comical in his assumption of Kelly's walk and Raymond's impassive face. He always had exciting tales to tell and seemed so entirely happy and so well that Ann had not the heart to ask him to return east with her. She even found herself listening with interest to his account of the doings of his heroes, for he had placed Matthew Kelly on the same pedestal with Robert.

Mrs. Barnett responded graciously to his invitation to come up and see the peak, but explained that the high altitude was destructive to her, and Ann shrank from meeting Raymond again, though she expressed to him in a letter a tepid sort of gratitude for his care of her brother.

CHAPTER XII.

ONE day Barnett telephoned to his wife that he would not take luncheon at home. There was nothing unusual in the words of this announcement, but Jeannette's keen ear detected restrained excitement in his calm drawl.

"What's the matter?" she asked quickly.

"Nothing, my dear; nothing," he glibly responded.

"Don Barnett, I know better. Tell me this instant!"

He was in for it. "Well, Mr. Mackay, our superintendent, was tarred and ridden on a rail by the miners this morning"—

"Gracious heavens!"

—"and I'm getting off up the stage road to meet him."

"What did they do it for?"

"Oh, it's the same old business. The men didn't like some regulation of his and struck, and—but it's a long story; I won't go into it now. I'll get back in time for dinner, probably."

In an hour Millionaire row was humming with news of the outrage. Reports, confused, conflicting, flew along the wires east and west, and the afternoon papers were filled with dramatic details of the opening of a big strike in Skytown and the story of how the union leaders had mishandled Mackay, the superintendent of the Red Star Mining corporation.

All this would have interested Ann very little had not her brother been in the midst of the disorder. She immediately wired him to come down and got a reply from Raymond saying, "Louis is on the way—no danger," and the boy himself came riding into the yard at dusk.

Raymond's letter to Barnett took serious view of the situation:

> I don't think Mackay the proper man to attempt to reorganize the working hours of this camp. Don't try to put him back, and don't make too much of this little affair. The whole camp is uneasy at this time. The union is getting very strong and likely to make it hot for independents like Kelly and myself.

"This is a boy friend of mine."

"What is it all about?" asked Jeannette.

Don looked bored. "Oh, really now, don't ask me to go into the cause of a strike. A woman never understands such a situation. However, here is what Rob says:

> Mackay posted his notices Saturday night, putting the new nine hour schedule into effect Monday morning. Sunday the camp boiled. The union put forth its decree, and of course at the morning hour a big crowd gathered to see Mackay face his men. He came riding up (the jackass!) in tan colored English riding breeches and a little two billed gray cap—you know the kind. Of course they hooted him and headed his horse back down the slope. He was red headed, naturally, and, being a double distilled idiot, hired a couple of desperadoes from Bozle as guards and came back. This time the boys jerked him and his men from their horses and hustled them down the canyon at the boot toe. I did what I could to prevent this, but the men who had the matter in charge had been drinking, and the crowd was with them. My men are not in the union, but I hear ominous threats. I advise you not to attempt to put the new schedule into operation at the present time.

The effect on the valley of Mackay's recital of his maltreatment was most wonderful. The principal mine owners of the Springs met to discuss their campaign. The valley called for the blood of those who had dusted the sacred person of their representative, and the sheriff was ordered to arrest and bring down the insolent "red necks" who had humbled the proud and confident Red Star superintendent. "This spirit of lawlessness must be checked or it will run into riot," said Barnett, who developed unexpectedly into a leader of the mine owners by virtue of his large interests in the Red Star.

The sheriff valiantly responded to the call and, with a half dozen deputies, marched up into the glittering mist of the high peaks and came down again empty handed and sullen.

A meeting of the officers of the Red Star and allied companies was called, Barnett presiding. Most resolute resolutions were passed. Mackay was instructed to press his demands to the full. Barnett naturally opposed a conference with the miners. "Either they come to our terms or we close down the mines," he said. "It is our cue to be firm in this demand."

The sheriff, who had been invited to be present and tell his tale, put in a warning word.

"Gentlemen," said he, "you're dealing with a lot of free miners and prospectors—men who won't be driven and can't be scared. If it had been just a case of ignorant dagoes I would have brought 'em down, but they've got leaders that you can't monkey with. When Hob Smith, Denver Dan and that devil Jack Munro met me with their holsters tied down I threw up my hands. You are from the east, where things are different. About one-third of the men on the peak are old prospectors and free miners, and if they stay by the proposition you've got to take a sneak or put up the fight of the age."

"We stand pat," said Barnett, "and we shall insist on your arresting the men who assaulted Mr. Mackay."

The sheriff made an elaborate bow. "Right you are, Mr. Barnett, but I'll want a hundred deputies to do it with."

Moving with such secrecy as he could, the sheriff collected and swore in some ninety men, the boldest and hardiest to be found in all the towns of the valley. They were not sedate and considerate citizens, but they were brave, or at least reckless, and without exception experienced wearers of guns. They professed themselves quite able and willing to bring down anybody in the hills. After being armed and provisioned they were to be sent round by way of a railroad which was building toward the camp from the south.

Barnett was heedful of his words at home and made light of the probable opposition of the miners, but Louis, with a boy's ability to discern what was going on, soon acquired a pretty clear idea of the plan, and when Ann asked him not to return to the heights on Monday he was ominously calm, but asserted his right to go where he pleased.

"Rob wants me and needs me, and I'm going. You can put me in jail, but that is the only way. If there is going to be war, I am going to be in it, and I'm going to be on the side of the miners."

Ann wrote a swift and fervent note to Raymond:

> I am trusting Louis to your care because he will not stay. You have won his heart from us, and we are powerless to prevent his return. Guard him, for the sake of his boyish sweetness, for my sake.

She wrote no further, for as her mind dwelt upon that camp of ruffian miners and their desire for battle a bitter resolution swept over her. "I will test his love for me." With cold intensity she announced her purpose. "If you insist on going back to that camp I shall go too."

"You must not go," said Louis. "It's no place for you."

"It is no place for you."

He asserted himself again. "I can take care of myself."

"Mr. Raymond has asked me to keep you here." She went to him and put her arm about his neck. "Stay with me, laddie. I am missing you these days."

In the end she seemed to prevail, but she took no pleasure in her victory, for he went about the house like a young eagle pinioned. Nothing save the news of the camp interested him, and when the time came for the sheriff to start on his new raid he became greatly excited.

"There's going to be a battle," he said to Ann. "I'm going."

"No, no!" she pleaded.

She changed her tone. "Very well. When shall we start?"

He looked at her steadily, and into his eyes came a softer gleam. "I've just thought," he began reflectively; "you can stay with Mrs. Kelly till we build a wing for you. She's a nice woman and lives in the cunningest little log cabin. That settles it! We will go right away, today!"

Ann was at a loss, but did not show it. "If you are determined to go, then there is no use in waiting. Let us start at once!"

While Mrs. Barnett suggested what to wear Don ordered a carriage to take Ann and himself to the train, and Louis saddled his horse for his return trip up the stage road. "I'll beat you up," he shouted to Ann and galloped away with shining face.

The railway which ran up Bear canyon was still building and had not yet reached the divide, so that a stage ride of some twenty miles connected the town of Grand View with Sky camp. Ann and Barnett were noticeable persons in the car, which was filled with roughly clad workmen of all kinds. Ann was conscious of their admiration for her, and it deeply annoyed her. Two or three of the better dressed men, who were on speaking acquaintance with Barnett, came up to ask him what he thought of the strike.

"I didn't know it was a strike," said he, ignoring their evident desire to be introduced to Ann.

"Oh, it's a strike all right. Your man Mackay wasn't much hurt, was he?"

"Not badly."

"He was a little too previous. I hope the sheriff won't try to do anything more about it. The boys up at Sky are a little sharp set about that business. Ain't goin' up there yourself, are ye?"

"Yes; I've always been on good terms with my men. I think I can help to arrange some sort of a compromise."

The two miners looked at each other. At length the older of them said in a tone that meant a good deal to ears accustomed to western inflections: "Well, I reckon the whole thing has been exaggerated. My claim is just below Bozle, and so, of course, I don't know much more about Sky than you do. Still I wouldn't advise your going in at this time."

At Grand View a couple of stages met them, and as Ann waited on the platform for Don to secure a carriage she observed that on the seat of each of the coaches two guards sat, negligently nursing rifles which glittered in the sunlight. Soon the whips began to crack, and the coaches rolled away one by one, leaving Barnett to follow in a road wagon which he had hired for their own especial use.

The sun was sinking to midafternoon, and Mogalyon on the left was in full glory of ermine and saffron. The air was keen and crisp, the sky cloudless, and the road, except for an occasional mudhole, was very good. Barnett remarked, "We ought to pull into Bozle before dark on these roads."

Night came abruptly. A thin gray scum rose swiftly on the western sky and suddenly grayed the brightness of the sun. The world grew instantly stern and cold. The road, after climbing a ridge, descended into a gorge with firs on either side, and when they came out upon the flat meadow to the northwest of Mogalyon only the lights of Skytown could be seen.

At the moment that Don was pointing out the lights two horsemen appeared in front and in the middle of the road.

"Halt!" cried a clear voice.

"Is Donnelly Barnett with you?" asked one of the men as he rode nearer.

"I'm Barnett. What do you want of me?" asked Don coolly.

"Not a thing," answered the horseman. "That's just it. We have no use for you, and I've been watching to meet you and say that the boys want you to continue your quiet, uneventful life at the Springs."

"Who are you?"

"We're a couple of Skytown vedettes. Who is the lady?"

"That doesn't concern you. Go on, driver."

The driver took up the reins, but the voice of the vedette grew sterner, "Stay where you are!" Then, turning to Barnett: "I'm your best friend, Donnelly. The boys understand that you are backing Mackay in his plans, and it isn't safe for you to enter the camp. I advise you to turn around right here and go back."

Ann spoke up: "Please let us go on. Mr. Barnett is taking me in to meet my brother, and I am cold and hungry."

There was something thrilling in the calm, clear sweetness of her voice, and the first of the vedettes, pressing nearer, leaned from his saddle to ask:

"Who is your brother, lady?"

"His name is Louis Rupert. He is only a boy, and I am going in to care for him."

"Rob Raymond's kid. I know him," replied the vedette. "But I thought he was visiting you in the Springs."

"He was, but he went back to the camp today, and I am very anxious about him."

"He's all right, lady, so long as Rob Raymond has him in hand. You are welcome, but Barnett is on the outside and must stay there."

"I decline to acknowledge your authority," responded Barnett, now thoroughly angry.

The horseman laughed softly, irritatingly. "Manners don't go with us at the present time. I must ask you to camp right here or go back to Grand View till I can communicate with the president of the union. If you are here to talk compromise the men will be glad to meet you, but my judgment is that you better retire to Grand View. I will see that this lady gets to her brother."

Ann was not a timid girl, but the thought of riding away into the blackness of the night with these sinister guards made her flesh chill and her nerves creep. "Don't leave me, Don," she whispered.

Barnett stormed at the horsemen. "It is impossible! If I am forced to go back she must go with me. What right have you to interfere in our plans?"

The answer came quickly, coldly, every word telling. "I'll tell you. The boys have learned that you have been chiefly instrumental in pushing the sheriff into another raid, and if trouble comes they'll kill you. It isn't safe for you to be on the hill tomorrow. Now you needn't be afraid to trust the lady to me." The vedette removed his hat. "I am not a man to be feared by women."

Ann again spoke. "I can't consent to your going into danger for me, Don. Turn back, and I will go on."

"It is madness!" he said in a low voice. "These men are not fit escorts for you. We will both go back and wait—until morning."

Ann's teeth were chattering with cold. "I dread that long drive. We must be almost at our destination."

The two horsemen conferred together, and at last one of them returned to say: "Driver, you may come on until you reach the first cabin at the foot of the hill. There the lady will get out, and you will drive Mr. Barnett back before daylight tomorrow morning."

As they drew up before the shanty door the leader of the vedettes rode forward and said gently: "Lady, the road from here to the summit is lined with cabins, and no harm can possibly come to you while I have you in charge. Or, if you like, you can stay here till morning; but I would advise you to go on to Mrs. Kelly's. There is no cabin suited to your needs on this side of the peak."

Ann, stiff and weary and hungry, rose in her seat with a sort of desperation. "I will go," she said with trembling voice.

The vedette, dismounting quickly, helped her to the ground, while the second man, leaning low on his horse, entered into a muttered conversation with an unkempt man in the doorway.

Barnett argued and insisted on going on to Kelly's.

"Not one step farther!" sternly commanded the vedette. "But you can sleep here till daylight if you wish."

Ann interposed. "Don, I beg of you to go home. I don't want you to go any farther. I am not afraid now. This man will take me to Mrs. Kelly's. I'm sure of it, and Louis will be there by this time, and Mr. Raymond."

"Sure thing, lady. And it isn't late—not more than 7 o'clock. We'll almost get there in time for supper. Can you ride a horse?"

"Yes."

"Well, I will put you on my saddle, and I will walk and lead the horse." The light from the doorway fell upon him as he approached her, and the sight of his boyish face reassured her.

As Barnett saw her rise to the saddle he burst out: "This is preposterous! You must not go up there. The boy isn't worth it. I'm going with you or fight!" He drew his revolver, but some one caught his hand from behind and twisted the weapon out of his grasp.

"Go on, Jack. We'll take care of him," called the man in the cabin door.

As the light of the lamp was left behind and the darkness settled round her a convulsive terror seized upon the girl. The horse, stumbling over loose rocks in the road, which ran back and forth on the hillside like folds of braid, passed now and again under dark and silent pines.

"Halt!" cried a clear voice.

Once, as her guard came back toward her, something rose in her throat, some elemental dread, and her breath rushed hoarsely through her lips. "If Robert only knew my need of him," she thought, "he would surely come to me."

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

THE FARMER'S CROPS.

Howdy, stranger? Glad ter see ye,
Yes, it looks a bit like rain;
How as crops? Well, come an' see 'em
Guess I'll hafter fust explain.

In that field where bees are buzzin'
Over all the white an' green
Thar I'm raisin' devil wagons—
Can't ye smell the gasoline?

In these acres over yonder,
Jest behind the hick'ry knoll,
Thar I planted grand piannys—
Can't ye hear the music roll?

See those fields thar, near the wind-mill,
To yer left, half way about?
That's set out in college courses—
Listen! Can't you hear 'em spout?

See that patch that's lyin' fallow?
Been unworked a year that way:
Seeded once with mortgage-lifters—
Ain't no call fer 'em to-day.
—New York Times.

NOTES.

The pig, by nature, is one of the cleanest of animals, and in internal construction resembles the human being more closely than any other animal What wonder then is it that we hear of so much disease when they are kept under such filthy conditions as we often see. Give them clean, healthy surroundings and we shall hear very little of disease, and they will be to us the money-making machines they have proved.

Sprinkle the cucumber or melon vines with land plaster and Paris green not quite so strong as for potatoes. This application will drive away the striped bugs and other insects.

To keep away insects from melon vines place a little hen manure over each hill when planting, and no spray will be required. If soot is applied to growing vines it will drive away insects.

Successful farming and scientific farming are growing more and more alike.

Varieties should be held back from the market until the market demands the variety.

Most farmers have all their help engaged for this year. There are a few, however, who are always looking for help and always will be. They expect their men to work from sunrise to sunset and do their chores after that time.

It does do good baking

This is the range that bakes better because the diffusive oven flue draws in cold air from the kitchen-floor, carries it around the oven, and pours it HOT down into the oven FROM THE TOP in a current that moves all round the whole oven and up and out the flue. When that clean, hot air leaves the oven it takes with it all the moisture, all the odors, which in OTHER ovens stay in and saturate the baking food. Perfect draft control, perfect oven, draw-out oven rack for easy basting,—all points singular to

Owning one costs little because there's such great economy of food and fuel and bother with this range.

It saves its cost in the juices it doesn't bake out of roasts alone.

More roots are fed to stock than formerly, as farmers are becoming more and more convinced that they are of inestimable value as a regulator,

To read over the irrigation magazines, one would suppose that the dry regions were to drive the East out of the fruit business altogether. But no grower need cut down his orchards because of the boom literature of the land companies. Ontario apples and home-grown fruit will never lack a market.

Two general roads lead to prosperity in farming. One is called More income the other is termed Less expense The first way requires more enterprise and harder work—the second way is straight and direct, but steep. Earn more or save more, which? Success is sure for those who can wisely combine the two ways.

No business dairyman would try to sell gilt-edged butter at a cheap city restaurant. Neither does the wise truck and fruit grower send strictly fancy stuff to a dealer who handles mostly a cheap grade of produce. Nor, on the other hand, does he ship the poor and ordinary grade to a dealer whose trade will take nothing but the best.

A man who understands his business is Farmer Streak, but somehow he never seems to get ahead very fast He is considered a saving man, too. If a friction match is wasted, Streak will lament the loss, although it does not seem to worry him that wood enough for several cords of matches has been used each year in driving the sap from the green stove wood which half the time is the only kind he provides. A quarter's worth of powder for the boy to celebrate he considers a sinful waste, but ten times that amount consumed in his pipe is nothing of the kind. He rakes the hay fields as if with a comb to secure the last wisp of hay, but he loses dollars in its value by cutting too late in the season. Of things bought at the store not so much as a pinch of salt is wasted, but last year he allowed to decay enough early apples to have paid his taxes, although the fruit would have sold readily in Boston. Papers, books and church dues he has never felt able to afford, but he has a little mortgage on his farm as the result of endorsing a note. That is Farmer Streak; careful with cents and careless with dollars. Do you know him? —American Cultivator.

PICKLING CUCUMBERS.

Money can be made by growing cucumbers for pickling, especially where the grower retains for himself all the profit in the various branches of the business. It pays well to have a small piece planted as a second crop, to gather the 'small cukes,' salt them in strong brine, and when a barrelful has been obtained to put them in vinegar made on the farm, and then to retail them direct to the consumers. Good home-made pickles can easily be sold by those who run a milk or vegetable route. Grocers and marketmen will buy them if the pickles are well prepared. A good way to grow pickles is to plant the seed on a freshly turned piece, mowing or pasture land, harrow the surface as fine as possible, using a disc harrow, and applying a shovelful of well-rotted manure to each hill. Four feet apart each way is about right. They may be planted as late as July 20 and produce a good crop in average seasons. In gathering the cucumbers care should be taken to leave none to go to seed and exhaust the plant. The crop should be sorted according to size. Small pickles are considered much more valuable.

HORTICULTURAL.

John Burroughs' Vineyard.

John Burroughs' son, Julian, tells in the September Country Calendar of the veteran naturalist's successful fruit-growing;

It was not until the mid-eighties that my father really became a grape grower. He was at the time ill in health. His experiments with general fruits had been failures and the example of a neighbor, who was growing fancy grapes successfully, decided him to become a grape grower. Accordingly, he bought nine acres from an adjoining farm to his home on the Hudson, making seventeen in all. With the exception of the garden and the lawns about the house, this was all set out in grapes.

Growing grapes exclusively, and on such a small scale, we have found it necessary to select only fancy varieties and to make these truly "gilt-edged." This course is one of the reasons for our success.

There is nearly every year a market 'glut' of common fruit of all kinds, from oranges to strawberries, much of which does not pay transportation charges. At the same time fancy fruit, arriving in market in good condition, always bring a "living price." The exceptions to this are few, indeed. Any man with the courage of his convictions, suitable soil and intelligence, can always make a living by growing fruit, provided he will grow only the very finest. The days when a fortune was to be made out of grapes are probably over. Had my father gone into fancy grape-growing ten years sooner, he could have become wealthy at it. There is still a fortune to be made in peaches wherever one has the land to grow them A cold, northwest mountain side, of new soil, some kind of an especially built plow for plowing away deep snows, the right kind of peaches, and you have about the best of the honest 'get-rich-quick' schemes.

HAIR NATURALLY ABUNDANT,

When it is Free of Dandruff, It Grows Luxuriantly.

Hair preparations and dandruff cures, as a rule, are sticky or irritating affairs that do no earthly good. Hair, when not diseased, grows naturally luxuriantly. Dandruff is the cause of nine-tenths of all hair trouble, and dandruff is caused by a germ The only way to cure dandruff is to kill the germ; and, so far, the only hair preparation that will positively destroy the germ is Newbro's Herpicide — absolutely harmless, free from grease, sediment, dye matter or dangerous drugs. It allays itching instantly; makes hair glossy and soft as silk. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect."

DAIRY DEPARTMENT.

Pigs and Calves for Market.

On dairy farms there is more or less done in this line, and as the yield of milk begins to diminish it will be necessary to get rid of some of the animals. To hasten the process extra pains should be taken to fit both the pigs and calves for the market.

Pigs will do much better with a suitable addition of grain with the milk upon which they are so largely grown. This should be of a kind that will promote growth and fat. Where barley is raised this will be found an excellent feed with the milk Pork products are now bringing good prices and it will pay to give a little extra feed and care.

In dairy districts, away from the cities, there are many calves raised on skimmilk and sold. These vary a good deal in size and quality, indicating very plainly the feed and care that have been given them.

It will hardly pay to raise a lot of small, poor calves to sell, and it certainly will not to keep. Add some grain feed to the milk, thus making increased growth and a better condition. This will pay in dollars and cents, Try it and see.

AGRICULTURAL ITEMS.

Egg Yolks From China.

Chinese duck egg yolk alone and mixed with the yolk of hens' eggs is imported into Europe in large quantities for use in the manufacture of noodles and other egg pastes.

A Bug Farm.

In Yorkshire, England, there is a farm for the raising of rare moths and butterflies for zoological collections, the ground being planted with suitable trees and shrubs. In their season the stock of caterpillars is twenty thousand. From thirty to forty thousand preserved insects are kept in stock, so that specimens may be supplied to museums at any time of the year.

Making Bordeaux.

One satisfactory method of making bordeaux mixture at the experiment station, Geneva, N. Y., was found to be to have three barrels emptying by a faucet into a common trough connecting with the spray tank. In one barrel fifteen pounds of copper sulphate are dissolved in fifty gallons of water, in the second from eighteen to twenty pounds "new process" lime are dissolved in the same manner, while the third barrel is filled with clear water. After the contents of the barrels have been thoroughly agitated all three barrels are opened and the materials flow together into the spray tank. In these experiments it was found that prepared limes cost somewhat more than stone lime, but they possess an advantage in that all the material could be used, while this is not true with ordinary stone lime in barrels.

LIVING IN MANITOBA.

To a Massachusetts man who inquired as to the advisability of immigration to the Canadian Northwest, Consul Samuel H. Shank, of Winnipeg, wrote as follows:

As to the advisability of a man immigrating to the Canadian Northwest, I desire to say that I can only give you a few of the conditions here, and it will be necessary for you to judge for yourself as to whether or not you should come to this country. The cost of living you can easily estimate from the following prices: Rent fro a seven-room house, $35; soft coal, $8.50 a ton; hard coal, $11 a ton; wood, $5 to $7 a cord; coal oil, twenty-five cents per gallon; potatoes, fifty cents per bushel; flour, $2.50 for one hundred pounds; sugar, seventeen to twenty pounds for $1; apples, $4 to $5 per barrel; eggs, twenty to thirty cents per dozen; butter, twenty-five cents per pound; corn, twenty-four cans for $2; peas, twenty-four cans for $1.70; tomatoes, twenty-four cans for $3; boiling meat, five to eight cents per pound; roasts, ten to 12 1-2 cents per pound; steak, 12 1-2 to eighteen cents per pound.

Following are wages paid different workingmen: Carpenters, 27 1-2 to thirty-five cents per hour; helpers, 22 1-2 to twenty five cents per hour; masons, fifty-five cents per hour; helpers, twenty to twenty-five cents per hour; stonecutters, sixty cents per hour; plasterers, fifty cents per hour; helpers, twenty-five cents per hour; painters, twenty-seven to thirty-five cents per hour; structural steel workers, thirty-seven cents per hour; electricians, fifty cents per hour; stationary engineers, thirty cents per hour; lathers 1 1-2 cents per square yard; teamsters, twenty cents per hour; teamster, with team, $5 for ten hours, and laborers, 17 1-2 to twenty cents.

Last year there were slaughtered in this city about twenty-five thousand cattle, twenty-four thousand sheep and 125,000 hogs. It is estimated that forty-five thousand hogs were shipped in from the United States. There is not a great quantity of meats shipped into this city, because the duty and freight amounts to about three cents per pound, which is almost prohibitive except at certain times when the prices are exceptionally high in the market here. The prices at present are about as follows; Lard, 11 3-4 cents; hams, fifteen cents; ribs, twelve cents; shoulders, twelve cents; backs fifteen cents, and bellies, fifteen cents. The hogs here are fed on barley, peas and frosted wheat, and consequently do not have proportionately as large an amount of lard in them as the corn-fed hog. These hogs produce a very fine quality of hams and bacon, which sell at top prices.—The American Cultivator.

DOMESTIC HINTS.

Corn Muffins.

Buttermilk or sour milk assist in making the best muffins. Take two cupfuls of either, one scant teaspoonful of baking soda, one tablespoonful of sugar, a little salt, and add to them cornmeal enough to make a thin batter, then stir in two tablespoonfuls of whole wheat flour. Pour in buttered gem pans and bake in moderate oven.

Tomato Salad.

In a new book, "The Up-to-Date Waitress," by Janet McKenzie Hill, several new salads are described. A tomato salad Du Barry sounds attractive. Peel a good-sized tomato for each person to be served, cut a piece from the top and with a teaspoon scoop out a portion of the pulp. Sprinkle inside with salt and set upside down in the refrigerator. When ready to serve fill the tomato shells with cold cooked cauliflower and set on heart leaves of lettuce. Put a tablespoonful of mayonnaise on each tomato.

Cucumbers, Espagnole.

Neatly peel and cut into even quarters, lengthwise, three medium sized cucumbers, carefully suppress all the seeds, then cut into half-inch pieces. Plunge into a pint of boiling water with half a teaspoonful of salt and boil for eight minutes. Drain on a sieve. Heat in a small frying pan a teaspoonful of oil, adding half a finely minced green pepper and half a finely minced white onion; gently toss while cooking for two minutes; add half a bean, finely chopped garlic and two peeled, crushed tomatoes; mix well and let cook for five minutes, pour in half a gill of tomato sauce, add the cucumbers. Season with half a teaspoonful of salt, a saltspoonful of cayenne pepper and a half teaspoonful of sugar; lightly mix the whole tgoether and slowly cook for ten minutes, occasionally mixing meanwhile. Remove, pour into a deep dish, sprinkle half a teaspoonful of freshly chopped parsley over it and serve.

Macaroni with Codfish.

Soak one-half pound of codfish over night; drain and break in small flakes, removing any skin and bones, and cook until tender. On a platter arrange a layer of the macaroni, then a layer of the fish; add a few slices of hard boiled egg, then another layer of macaroni and the fish and set it, covered, in the oven, while preparing the sauce. In a saucepan put one tablespoonful of flour, one-quarter of a teaspoonful of salt, a saltspoonful of pepper. Stir over the fire until mixed, add one cupful of milk and stir until it is smooth and thick. Pour it over the fish and macaroni, sprinkle with finely chopped parsley and serve. This is an excellent way to use macaroni left over. Or cook half a pound of macaroni in plenty of boiling water, with a teaspoonful of salt, until tender.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

In making fruit pie be sure to have a small opening in the centre of the crust, and keep it clear with an earthenware or paper funnel.

In cases of inflammation of the stomach and bowels, try cloths wrung out of hot water in which a tablespoonful of turpentine has been put.

As canvas shoes can now be had in different colors to match the dress, preparation can be bought, pink, blue, red, gray, and black, as well as white, for cleaning and retinting when the shoes become soiled or faded.

The little red blood veins which sometimes show in the face are often caused by exposure of the skin so strong, cold winds. Applications of warm, wet cloths until the skin feels soft, and a gentle rubbing with good cold cream, into which a little distilled witch hazel has been beaten, will remedy the trouble.

If alum is added to the paste used in covering boxes with paper or muslin moth and mice will avoid them.

If hooks for bathroom, kitchen and pantry are dipped in enamel paint there will be no trouble from iron rust.

If candles in warm weather are kept in the refrigerator for two or three days they will not burn away so quickly when they come to be used.

Cold asparagus placed on crisp lettuce leaves and covered with mayonnaise or French dressing is now a popular and refreshing salad.

When the collar of handsome linen or batiste blouses becomes slightly soiled, it may be cleaned with a little naphtha or benzine in the same manner as those of silk or satin. With this process the collar does not need pressing. Such waists never look as handsome after they are laundered.

To freshen stale rolls, wrap them in a wet napkin and place in the oven until the napkin is dry. Another way is to wrap them in a dry napkin and place in a steamer over boiling water. Do not let the rolls get too damp. Cake may be freshened in either of these ways.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

Is one of the best friends that any family has, but there are often sudden and acute attacks of some painful disease that require immediate treatment, such, for instance, as rheumatism, neuralgia, lame back, etc. Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil makes the calling of the doctor unnecessary. It will give relief before he could answer the call, and if faithfully used will cure the most stubborn attacks of rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago, pain in the chest or back, soreness, sprains or strains. It is a powerful, penetrating oil, that goes straight to the seat of the trouble and roots out the cause. It relaxes the stiffened joints, soothes the affected parts and allays the inflammation, which produces the torturing pain. It is, therefore, a valuable remedy not only for rheumatism and kindred diseases, but is equally good for croup, bronchitis and quinsy. One father writes that it cured his child of a violent attack of croup in five minutes. A mother writes that her boy was subject to quinsy and two or three times each year was confined to his bed and could not speak. When threatened with another attack this fall she rubbed his throat and chest with the Bone Oil and by three applications warded off the attack. The wonderful curative powers of this remarkable remedy are being talked about by everyone. A bottle should be in every home. For sale by all medicine dealers at 50c a bottle or will be sent prepaid on receipt of 50c by the Tuck Bone Oil Co., Limited, Smith's Falls. Money refunded if not satisfied.

LIVING ON STILTS.

People live on sixteen foot stilts in the remarkable turpentine growing country of France. They don these stilts after breakfast and do not remove them again till it is time for bed.

There are two reasons for the wearing of stilts in the turpentine country. One is the turpentine gathering. The other is the herding of the great flocks.

The turpentine comes from the maritime pine. This tree is tapped, a shingle is inserted, and from the shingle is hung a tiny bucket into which the turpentine drips. The tapping process is like that used on the American sugar maple.

Young pine trees are tapped low, but with each year's passage the incision is made higher, so that it is not long before most of the trees are tapped twenty or thirty feet from the ground.

Hence the huge stilts of the workmen. On these stilts they traverse the flat country, covering five or six yards with each stride, and quickly and easily they collect the turpentine that overflows the little buckets hanging high up in the trees.

It is for herding also that the stilts are useful. The country is very flat, and the herdsman unless he continually climbed a tree would be unable to keep all the members of his huge flock in sight. But striding about on his stilts he commands a wide prospect. He is always, as it were, upon a hill.

The stilt wearers carry a fifteen foot staff with a round, flat top like a dinner plate. When it is lunchtime or when they are tired they plant upright under them the staff and sit down on its round, flat top. Then in comfort, seated so dizzily high, they eat and rest and chatter—a strange sight to behold.

Unrecorded Dreams.

The subject of dreams is one of the most intricate and perplexing in the entire field of mental philosophy, and it has not yet met with that amount of attention which its importance would seem to demand. Sir William Hamilton, the great metaphysician, held that "whether we recollect our dreams or not, we always dream." To have no recollection of our dreams does not prove that we have not dreamed, for it can often be shown that we have dreamed, though the dream has left no trace upon our memory.

The Usual Way.

"What's the cause of the coolness between the Bilkins and the Pilkins families?"

"Young Bilkins became engaged to one of the Pilkins girls."

"Yes."

"And now each family thinks its offspring is getting all the worst of it."—London Lady.

The Peril of It.

A lady at whose house Leigh Hunt was dining solicitously said to him at dessert:

"Don't you ever venture on an orange?"

"I should be delighted to do so, my dear madam," the poet replied, "but I'm so afraid I should tumble off."

Stomach Troubles

Mrs Sue Martin, an old and highly respected resident of Faisonia, Miss., was sick with stomach trouble for more than six months Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets cured her. She says: "I can now eat anything I want and am the proudest woman in the world to find such a good medicine." To be had at R. Templeton and Co.'s Drug Store. Samples free.

MAKING MAPLE SUGAR.

The sugar season opens a busy industry in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. Buckets are loaded on to the ox sleds, boxes of spiles and axes, and away to the sugar orchard!

Sugar making nowadays is a science. Only in the extreme rural sections still remain the wooden buckets and cedar spiles, but there is still a sugar warmth, a bursting of healthy joy that breaks forth just as the swelling buds on the maples.

No longer are there the crude methods of an open fire, of the kettles strung on green forked poles. Possibly sugar-making has lost some of its genuine savor in the modern evaporators, but the product—and its commercial feature is of all importance—is finer grained, of purer color, freer from bits of bark and other foreign refuse.

Important changes in the sugar industry have lessened the work of the farmer. In the early days wooden buckets and handmade cedar spiles were used. That made bother in the orchard, for the bucket had to be placed on the ground, and the spile could not be far above it else the wind would blow the sap to one side and thus waste it.

As the snow melted the spiles had to be drawn, new holes nearer the ground made and the bucket replaced.

Nowadays the spiles are of metal and the pails are hung on them. The evaporator is a sample of the rapid strides in sugar making facilities. The modern orchard has tin or galvanized pails and metal spiles.

Occasionally a tree runs a bucket full every fair day during the season, an average of ten quarts, although the general run is about half that amount, unless the weather holds so the trees run during the night.

Good, honest sirup weighs eleven pounds to the gallon, and it takes a barrel of thirty-two gallons of sap to make a gallon of sirup.

THE MAGNETIC COMPASS.

First Used on European Vessels In the Twelfth Century.

Some Asian people, perhaps the Chinese, discovered many centuries ago that a kind of iron ore possessed a very peculiar quality. We call this ore magnetic ore, or, in more common language, lodestone, and it is very widely distributed, especially in the older crystalline rocks. It was found that if a bit of lodestone were placed in water upon a piece of cork or straw braid it would turn till the axis of the stone assumed a north and south position. A phenomenon of magnetism had been discovered by means of an ore that is peculiarly susceptible to magnetic influence.

It is an open question whether the Chinese utilized the directive power of the lodestone, but it is certain that the first rude compass was not used on European vessels before the twelfth century of our era. By that time the true magnetic compass had been evolved through the discovery that if an iron or steel needle were stroked on a lodestone it would receive the attractive and directive power of this ore. With this appliance placed at the service of navigation the vessels that had hugged the coasts soon dared to venture even out of sight of land. A new impetus was gradually given to cartography, for now the true directions of the coast lines might be charted with some approach to accuracy. It was the happy fortune of Italian sailors to make the surprisingly excellent surveys of the directions and lengths of the Black sea and Mediterranean coasts and along the Atlantic to British waters that have come down to us in the so called Portulan maps.—Cyrus C. Adams in Harper's.

Twins.

Talking to a physician about twins and commenting upon the marvelous likeness they sometimes bear to one another, he gave an interesting fact regarding them. "You can always distinguish one from the other," said he, "no matter how great the resemblance, for the elder invariably has the broader face. Notice twins hereafter, and you can say with certainty that the narrower faced one is the younger of the two. I have no authority for saying that fewer male than female twins are born, but I am of the opinion that the couple are more frequently girls or girl and boy than boys. Twin brothers are few and far between."

A Husband's Retort.

A man, accompanied by his wife, visited a merchant tailor to order a suit of clothes. The couple differed as to the material and the manner of making, and the wife lost her temper.

"Oh, well," she said, turning away, "please yourself. I suppose you are the one who will wear the clothes."

"Well," observed the husband meekly, "I didn't suppose you'd want to wear the coat and waistcoat."

Mistaken Idea.

"It may be laid down as a broad proposition," said the professor of political economy, "that you cannot get something for nothing."

"I once got the measles for nothing, professor," interrupted the young man with the wicked eye.

An Editor's Reply.

"Why didn't you retaliate when that fellow struck you?"

"I didn't know him, and it is our rule not to pay any attention to anonymous contributions."

To take for granted as truth all that is alleged against the fame of others is a species of credulity that men would blush at on any other subject.—Jane Porter.

FINGER FELONS.

There Are Three Varieties of These Very Painful Sores.

A felon, or whitlow, is an inflammation of the hand or finger, usually of the last joint of the finger. Its importance varies with the seat of it—that is to say, with the portion of the finger involved. It may affect the skin only, the tendons or sinews or the fibrous covering of the bone—the periosteum.

A superficial whitlow, where the inflammation is confined to the skin, may be extremely painful, but otherwise it is not a very serious matter. But this cannot be said of the other two forms.

In the tendinous whitlow pus forms in the fibrous sheath surrounding the tendon, and unless the inflammation quickly subsides or the matter is let out by the surgeon's knife the pus may burrow down through the sheath into the palm of the hand and result in a permanent crippling of the member.

The third variety—called by physicians the subperiosteal—is that in which matter forms beneath the membrane which covers the bone. As this membrane is tough and inelastic the tension due to the increasing volume of matter becomes very great and gives rise to a throbbing, maddening pain. The relief afforded by a deep cut into this inflamed finger, right down to the bone, is magical, although the cut hurts. This is the only treatment for this form of felon, and the incision should be made early, for if it is too long delayed the bone will be killed and a discharging sore will remain which will later necessitate a surgical operation even if it does not result in the loss of the last joint of the finger.

The superficial whitlow does not usually call for such radical treatment. A clay poultice often affords great relief. This may be made by making a paste of clay previously sterilized by baking in a very hot oven and adding glycerin to prevent too rapid drying, or the clay may be obtained ready prepared in the drug store. This protects the finger from injury, keeps it cool and, if applied early enough, may prevent the formation of matter. When once pus has formed, however, no matter what the variety of the felon, the safest plan of treatment is to cut into the inflamed finger and give exit to the confined matter and relieve the tension of the parts.—Youth's Companion.

CARE OF CANARIES.

A piece of cuttle bone is needed always, and now and then a lump of sugar.

Guard the cage from draft, from exposure to cold at night and also from too much heat.

Canary seed principally should be given, though now and then a little rape seed is beneficial.

Do not use a painted cage. The bird will peck the cage more or less, and the paint thus imbibed is very injurious.

The larger the cage the better it is for the birds, and if not new it should be scalded and well dried before putting them into it.

Avoid frightening the birds in any way. It is very easy to have them know you and welcome your coming, but they do not like to be handled.

The cage should be thoroughly cleaned every morning, placing a piece of clean brown paper, not newspaper, on the bottom. Perches should also be washed daily.

The Best Weight Guessers.

Butchers are the world's best weight guessers. The butcher's difficult trade gives him a skill in weight guessing that is almost incredible. It is a commonplace thing in a meat shop to see a butcher seize hold of a huge red round of beef and slash off with a great knife four pounds just, or two and a half pounds just, or six pounds just, according to the order. The buyer of meat wants to get the weight he asked for, no more and no less, and he wants this weight in one piece, not in one big piece and two or three little ones. To satisfy the buyer the butcher has been compelled to acquire extraordinary skill in judging just how much a certain portion of a round of meat weighs and in cutting off that portion smoothly and accurately.

Most Nutritious Food.

Taking all the ordinary foodstuffs, the one which would best fulfill the requirements of life and strength would be substantial slices of whole meal wheaten bread, eaten with crust and spread with good butter. Practically all the constituents necessary for the support of life and the building up of tissue are contained in this food. It has the further advantage of being extremely satisfying. If fresh milk or buttermilk were drunk with it an almost complete diet would be obtained, so far as the mere sustaining of physical health and strength was concerned.

Undermined Streets.

A modern city's experiences with undermined streets are not unique. More than three centuries ago Bristol, England, had to face a situation somewhat similar. On his visit there Pepys noticed that the only carts allowed in the streets were those that could be drawn by dogs, for Bristol had dug cellars beneath her streets and stored her wealth therein—rum, tobacco and Bristol milk, the sherry that is still mysteriously tapped.

The Love of Liberty.

That we should wish to see the people of other countries free is as natural and at least as justifiable as that one king should wish to see the kings of other countries maintained in their despotism.

He'd Be a Winner.

Mrs. Benham—You'll surely win baby's love if you carry him around in your arms. Benham—Yes, I'll win it in a walk.

Judgment in Case of King vs. Deshane.

MAGISTRATE FLINT FINES DEFENDANT $200, OR IN DEFAULT SIX MONTHS IN CENTRAL PRISON.

Magistrate Flint this morning rendered judgment in the case of King vs. Deshane, and, as the matter is of considerable local interest, we give the judgment in full:

The King vs. Wesley Deshane. —The defendant stands accused of obtaining $425 from James Shappee by false pretences. Defendant denies the accusation. The facts material to the case are not many. Shappee and Deshane were neighbors and friends. Shappee sailed for a livelihood, owning a schooner. Deshane was engaged in the manufacture and sale of ginger beer. After some negotiations, Deshane sold one-half interest in the plant and business for $425 to Shappee. What passed by the sale is set forth in a written agreement duly executed by both parties.

The money was paid to Deshane, and Shappee worked in the manufacture of beer for two weeks, when he left the business, and has done nothing in connection with it since that time. Deshane has continued the business. Shappee is the person who has laid this information, charging Deshane with the above mentioned crime.

Shappee, in his evidence, narrates representations made by Deshane to him relative to the business, and declares that he believed these representations to be true, and so paid over his money. Shappee declares that nearly all of the representations so made to him were false, and were made by Deshane to induce Shappee to purchase the interest in the business, and thus fraudulently possess himself of Shappee's $425. Shappee further declares that Deshane knew these representations were false when he made them. Shappee's statement of the representations is in the main denied by Deshane. So far as these statements are concerned, where the evidence of one party is in direct opposition to the other, I cannot take the evidence of either, and find in favor of the contention of the opposite party. But where the evidence of one of the two parties is satisfactorily corroborated by verbal testimony, and in some degree, by the logic of facts, I can then give effect to that testimony so corroborated, against the unsupported testimony of the other party. Mrs. Shappee was present on Sunday when Deshane and Shappee talked over this matter. The representations made at that interview are the representations upon which the Crown chiefly relies in endeavoring to convict the defendant. Mrs. Shappee was not present when Shappee deposed, but in giving her evidence, corroborated Shappee in all the material representations sworn to by him. The evidence of Mr. Shorey was objected to as being inadmissable. Upon an examination of authorities I am compelled to admit it. Shorey [illegible]quired a half-interest in this [illegible]me business and was in business [illegible] July and August, 1905. Shorey p[illegible] $425 to Deshane for a half-in[illegible]est. Shorey swore that Deshane tol[illegible] him it was a good paying busi[illegible]s, and that it would be worth $400 [illegible]r month, for the first two month[illegible] Shorey could not say if this s[illegible] included or excluded expenses. [illegible]ring the two months the entire s[illegible] paid Shorey less than $25. Ver[illegible] much disgusted at the result, Sh[illegible] told Deshane he wished to go [illegible] of the business, and Deshane pa[illegible] him back $200 and Shorey left [illegible] business. Shorey states that t[illegible] was less than $50 profit in the [illegible]iness for the two best months. [illegible] whole sales for these two mont[illegible]nly reached $365, including all ex[illegible]es. The sales would not pay a [illegible]ofit of $5 each per week.

Deshane denies a[illegible]tion of Shorey's evidence. Shor[illegible] disinterested. I do not see tha[illegible]e had any motive to perjure hims[illegible] Shorey's manner of giving evide[illegible] impressed me as truthful. I [illegible] accept Shorey's evidence as ag[illegible]t Deshane, who is interested, i[illegible]nying Shorey's inculpatory statem[illegible]s, and being contradicted by Shore[illegible] Shappee and Mrs. Shappee, I mu[illegible]find the weight of evidence against[illegible]m. Shappee and wife state that De[illegible] represented to them, that the [illegible]ness was paying him from $50 [illegible] $75 the year round, "That we co[illegible] make from $17 to $19 per wee[illegible] clear money and our living besides, and that he repeated this assertion. That Belleville business paid him $40 per week, clear of all expenses; that he had all the hotels, save two or three hotels in Belleville.

Deshane denied these assertions, and stated that if he had made them they would be untrue. Shappee worked two weeks in the business and found that the sales realized $55 and the disbursements $50. Shappee then offered Deshane to sell out to him for $300, losing the difference between that sum and the $425 paid. Deshane refused this offer, but later on offered to sell out his half of the business for $200. I find under the evidence offered that the representations so made by defendant were false to his knowledge. That the representations were made to induce Shappee to purchase one-half of the business for $425. That Shappee believed these representations to be true, and parted with his money to Deshane upon the faith of these representations. Mr. McMahon, acting for Deshane, has cited cases and taken many legal objections. The representations were made on Sunday. That fact does not prevent a conviction. A man may commit a crime on Sunday. There were no continuing representations. I think there is nothing in this point. The representations were not acted upon for a few days, and nothing intervened between those representations, and the payment of the money to prevent them being considered as continuing. Although an agreement was entered into, yet that fact does not prevent an indictment for a crime committed before the agreement was executed. The case I have to try is: Were there false representations known by Deshane to be false, made upon which Shappee acted, and paid over his money, believing them to be true? The representations were of existing facts, within the knowledge of Deshane. He knew his business. He had already had the Shorey transaction out of which he profited to the extent of $210. He knew perfectly well that Shappee was entirely ignorant of the business, and that he relied upon his representations. The money received by Deshane, did not constitute partnership funds.

A false pretence is a representation by words, or otherwise, of a matter of fact, either present or past, which representation is known to the person making it to be false, and which is made with a fraudulent intent to induce the person to whom it is made to act upon such representation.

The case of Reg. vs. Williamson is the strongest authority cited by the defence. I consider the learned judge held that representations there used were words coming under the head of "exaggerated commendation, which would not, under the English Act support an indictment. Our Code differs from the English Act. A more recent English case decided in 1872, Reg. vs. English, reported in 12 Cox, is the strongest case cited by the Crown. The trend of all our Canadian cases, as well as the text books, seems to follow on the line taken by the Court, in least above cited case.

I have given this case the most careful consideration, and have examined the authorities, and as a result, I must pronounce, under the facts, and law, the defendant guilty of the alleged offence. The defendant offered rather than go to law, to sell his half of the business for $200. The defendant knew the value of the business; he also knew whether he had done anything which would cause him to fear a lawsuit. I think, possibly, the value of half of this business may be the sum the defendant was willing to accept, namely, $200.

I do not wish to send defendant to jail, but if I do not, I must make the fine in some degree proportionate to the offence. Deshane certainly obtained fraudulently, at least $200 from Shappee. I therefore fine defendant that sum, two hundred dollars, and in default of payment imprisonment in Central Prison, Toronto, for six months. I believe it is in the interests of the community to punish with severity crimes of this character—where a man deliberately makes statements to another of certain alleged facts, knowing that said statements are false, with the intention of obtaining money or property, from the party relying upon such statements, and the superior knowledge of the party making them. Such a man when found guilty, must, in the interests of society, be punished—honesty and fair dealing must be enforced.

So far as these statements are concerned, where the evidence of one party is in direct opposition to the other, I cannot take the evidence of either, and find in favor of the contention of the opposite party. But where the evidence of one of the two parties is satisfactorily corroborated by verbal testimony, and in some degree, by the logic of facts, I can then give effect to that testimony so corroborated, against the unsupported testimony of the other party. Mrs. Shappee was present on Sunday when Deshane and Shappee talked over this matter. The representations made at that interview are the representations upon which the Crown chiefly relies in endeavoring to convict the defendant. Mrs. Shappee was not present when Shappee deposed, but in giving her evidence, corroborated Shappee in all the material representations sworn to by him. The evidence of Mr. Shorey was objected to as being inadmissable. Upon an examination of authorities I am compelled to admit it. Shorey acquired a half-interest in this same business and was in business in July and August, 1905. Shorey paid $425 to Deshane for a half-interest. Shorey swore that Deshane told him it was a good paying business, and that it would be worth $400 per month, for the first two months. Shorey could not say if this sum included or excluded expenses. During the two months the entire sales paid Shorey less than $25. Very much disgusted at the result, Shorey told Deshane he wished to go out of the business, and Deshane paid him back $200 and Shorey left the business. Shorey states that there was less than $50 profit in the business for the two best months. The whole sales for these two months only reached $365, including all expenses. The sales would not pay a profit of $5 each per week.

Deshane denies a portion of Shorey's evidence. Shorey is disinterested. I do not see that he had any motive to perjure himself. Shorey's manner of giving evidence impressed me as truthful. I must accept Shorey's evidence as against Deshane, who is interested, in denying Shorey's inculpatory statements, and being contradicted by Shorey, Shappee and Mrs. Shappee, I must find the weight of evidence against him. Shappee and wife state that Deshane represented to them, that the business was paying him from $50 to $75 the year round, "That we could make from $17 to $19 per week clear money and our living besides," and that he repeated this assertion. That Belleville business paid him $40 per week, clear of all expenses; that he had all the hotels, save two or three hotels in Belleville.

Deshane denied these assertions, and stated that if he had made them they would be untrue. Shappee worked two weeks in the business and found that the sales realized $55 and the disbursements $50. Shappee then offered Deshane to sell out to him for $300, losing the difference between that sum and the $425 paid. Deshane refused this offer, but later on offered to sell out his half of the business for $200. I find under the evidence offered that the representations so made by defendant were false to his knowledge. That the representations were made to induce Shappee to purchase one-half of the business for $425. That Shappee believed these representations to be true, and parted with his money to Deshane upon the faith of these representations. Mr. McMahon, acting for Deshane, has cited cases and taken many legal objections. The representations were made on Sunday. That fact does not prevent a conviction. A man may commit a crime on Sunday. I therefore fine defendant that sum, two hundred dollars, and in default of payment imprisonment in Central Prison, Toronto, for six months. I believe it is in the interests of the community to punish with severity crimes of this character—where a man deliberately makes statements to another of certain alleged facts, knowing that said statements are false, with the intention of obtaining money or property, from the party relying upon such statements, and the superior knowledge of the party making them. Such a man when found guilty, must, in the interests of society, be punished—honesty and fair dealing must be enforced.

HIGH SPEED THE CAUSE

Coroner's Inquest Into the Salisbury Railway Wreck.

Jury's Verdict Is One of Accidental Death, As Its Members Considered Railway as Well as Driver Was to Blame—Company Accepts Full Responsibility For the Accident—Train Was Running at a Speed of 60 Miles.

Salisbury, Eng., July 17.—The coroner's inquest into the cause of the wreck of the Plymouth steamer express, July 1, whereby 27 lives were lost, resulted in a verdict yesterday that the derailment of the train was due to the high speed at which it was running, and which was contrary to the company's orders.

It is added that drivers of trains not stopping at Salisbury should have their attention drawn to the regulations, which was not done in this case.

The jury allowed the verdict to be recorded as one of accidental death, saying they considered that a certain amount of blame attached to the company as well as to the engine driver.

At the resumption of the enquiry counsel for the London and Southwestern Railway announced that the railway accepted full responsibility for the accident and all the legal consequences resulting from it, adding that he hoped this statement would reduce the time occupied by the inquest.

The guard of the express, Harrison, testified that the ill-fated train was running at the rate of at least 50 miles an hour through Salisbury, whereas the proper speed is 30 to 40 miles an hour.

Harrison added that as speed was not reduced on approaching Salisbury he signalled to the engineer, but the train continuing at high speed, he applied the hand brakes and had just applied the vacum brakes when the train was derailed.

The company issued instructions in February regarding the speed at this particular point, but the instructions were subsequently cancelled.

Major Pringle, representing the Board of Trade, said his investigations showed that the speed of the train between Wilton and Salisbury was over 60 miles an hour.

Officials of the London and Southwestern Railway testified that previous to February trains were allowed to pass through Salisbury at the rate of 30 miles an hour, but in February they were ordered to reduce this speed to 25 miles per hour.

Superintendent Holmes of the railroad company said that the train was four minutes late at Salisbury, although it had been traveling between 64 and 70 miles per hour. The high speed alone was responsible for the accident.

Sympathy For Canadians.

London, July 17.—C. A. P.—Through Lord Strathcona the London and Southwestern Railway officially conveyed its sympathy to the relatives of the Canadian victims of the Salisbury disaster.

BOUGHT REVOLVER TO SCARE.

Windsor Man Says He Did Not Intend to Murder Wife.

Windsor, July 17.—Christopher Spindleman, who killed his wife on Saturday night, is now more composed, having recovered from his debauch. He says he never intended to kill his wife, and that he bought the revolver to frighten his sons.

He and his wife had a good deal of trouble over the title of the cottage in which they lived. The deed at first was in the wife's name, but she transferred it to their son, William. Spindleman claims that he believed that they were trying to get possession of the place and then drive him out.

He says drink was the first cause of all his troubles.

Spindleman was arraigned before the magistrate yesterday morning and remanded to await the result of the coroner's inquest on Wednesday.

J. H. Rodd, county crown attorney, held a short conversation with Spindleman after he was remanded. He told Mr. Rodd that he was sorry for the position in which his children are placed, and said that alcohol had been the cause of the trouble at first. He had brooded over his fancied wrongs and had finally decided to kill his wife.

The funeral of the murdered woman took place to Windsor Grove Cemetery.

CARDWELL BYE-ELECTION.

Writ Is Issued, But the Date It Not Yet Decided.

Toronto, July 17.—The announcement that the date for the nomination and polling day, respectively, for the Cardwell bye-election had been fixed for July 30 and Aug. 6, was premature.

The writ issued yesterday, addressed to William McDermott of Tecumseh Township, as returning officer, and it will be his duty to fix the date of the election. It is understood, however, that the foregoing dates are not satisfactory to the Conservatives of the riding, and that other dates will be named by the returning officer.

The bye-election is made necessary by the appointment of E. A. Little, M. P. P., who was the sitting member, as deputy clerk of the crown, clerk of County Court and Registrar of the Surrogate Court for the County of Simcoe to succeed J. McLean Stevenson of Barrie.

DR. SPROULE'S IDEA.

Toronto, July 17.—A federation of Protestant denominations the world over, dominated by one central head as is the Roman Catholic Church, was the suggestion of the address of Dr. Sproule of the Grand Sovereign of the Orange order of Canada, at yesterday's session of the triennal council now in progess in this city.

The duty of the Protestant Church to-day was to rally to the help of the Orange and kindred associations, to uphold the principles for which their fathers had fought. While the Roman Catholic Church was dominated from one central point—the Vatican at Rome—the Protestant Church was directed from many sources and lacked the unity which characterized the Church of Rome.

Gathered from all parts of the Dominions of Canada, Great Britain and the United States the 14th triennal council outranks in the number of delegates any hitherto held. Statistics presented by Grand Secretary James Rice show in the Grand Lodge of Ireland a gain of 19 lodges, and Grand Lodge of Scotland 29 lodges.

In British North America the gains are: Ontario West, 18 lodges; Ontario East, loss 5; Newfoundland, gain 39; Nova Scotia, gain 6; New Brunswick, gain 11; Quebec, gain 3; Prince Edward Island, gain 5.

In the United States the gain as reported by the Grand Lodge totalled 269 lodges.

From far off Australia came glowing reports of progress, in South Australia 30 lodges and in West Australia 39; in Queensland 4, and in Victoria 86. In New Zealand there was a gain in lodges of six, making a total of 40.

During the afternoon session brief addresses bearing on the work of the order were given by Hon. Bro. Mr. McFadden of Manitoba, Rev. G. T. Lennox, and Rev. G. M. Black.

At the evening session a number of routine matters were dealt with and advanced a stage. The session will reconvene this morning at 10 o'clock.

MRS. THAW VISITS SON.

Affecting Scene Upon Which Prison Keeper Turned His Back.

New York, July 17.—Mrs. William Thaw of Pittsburg paid a visit to her son, Harry K. Thaw, in the Tombs prison yesterday. The mother, not knowing the rules of the prison, upon seeing the door opened, rushed forward, and, in an instant, both arms were clasped around his neck, while he, with bent head, clasped his mother to his breast. Tears streamed from the eyes of both. There ensued a few minutes' silence, which was broken only by the cry of "My boy! My boy!"

Keeper Smith stood, with his back turned, for a short time, and then informed Mrs. Thaw that the prison rules allowed visitors to talk with prisoners only with bars separating them. The mother stepped out of the cell, while Smith turned the key once more on Thaw. Mrs. Thaw took her seat on the stool and continued talking to her son for about half an hour.

She then kissed him through the bars, and was taken downstairs to her carriage.

Lovelorn Torontonian's Act.

Detroit, July 17.—"If you don't love me, I'll kill myself," said Earl King, a clerk rooming at 308 East High street, to Florence Jefferson, 123 St. Antoine street, as they sat in Clinton Park, adjacent to the board of health building last night, at 10 o'clock. He put the threat in operation and swallowed a quantity of carbolic acid. King did not swallow much of the acid and will recover. His home is at 22 College street, Toronto, Ont.

Toronto, July 17.—There is no such address as 22 College street, city, nor does the name, Earl King, appear in the directory.

Zulu Chief's Head Not Exhibited

London, July 17.—The correspondent at Pietermaritzburg of The Daily Telegraph gives to that paper this morning what purports to be the official story of the decapitation of the Zulu Chief's Bambaata's body and its exhibition to the natives. According to this version the doctor severed the head from the body and took it to headquarters, where it was identified, photographed and then returned and buried with the body. The correspondent denies that the head was exhibited.

There are Teas and Teas

There is what we might call the up-grade and the down-grade. Most teas come under the latter heading—not that they were'nt once good, but the average dealer buys a box of tea that he keeps under the counter where it gets stale and loses most of its goodness. Stroud's teas are of the up-grade variety. We receive our teas fresh every week from our headquarters in Montreal, and while we have them in our store we keep them in tins that are practically air tight, but we don't have them long enough for them to get stale.

Cornell, Ont., July 18.—Frank Millard of Port Burwell, a teamster on the new double track of the Michigan Central Railway, about one mile west of Cornell, lost control of his team yesterday morning and in trying to hold them by the bridles was thrown on the track in front of a train which was passing, and had his left leg cut off above the ankle and his right foot injured. He was taken to the railroad hospital at St. Thomas.

The left side of the face is usually considered by artists to be more beautiful than the right.

Architect E. J. Lennox Pleads Not Guilty In Police Court.

Toronto Civic Scandal In Police Court—Magistrate Will Hear Evidence In Dr. Lynd's Case on Thursday and In Mr. Lennox's Case on Tuesday Next--All the Contractors' Cases Remanded For a Week.

Toronto, July 18.—The unusual sight of a score of prominent business men facing the police magistrate on various charges of conspiracy, and in one case perjury, and another accepting a bribe, was witnessed in Toronto police court yesterday morning, as the outcome of the recent civic investigation. They were all in the room early, but the regular docket had to be disposed of before their turn came, so they had to wait for about an hour and a half, during which time they had lots of company, the customary courtroom crowd being augmented by the presence of well-known citizens and a brigade of lawyers representing the accused contractors.

The most interest centred in the appearance of Architect E. J. Lennox and ex-Ald. Dr. Lynd. The case against the latter will be resumed to-morrow, while that of Mr. Lennox and the various contractors, will go over till next Tuesday afternoon, at a special sitting of the court.

TRIENNIAL COUNCIL DOINGS.

Opposes Giving Ireland Home Rule—Finance Report Discussed.

Toronto, July 18.—Yesterday's session of the triennial council of the Orange Order, at the morning meeting, was devoted largely to a discussion of the report presented by the finance committee.

State Grand Master Doig of Michigan objected to the finance report presented by Rev. G. M. Black, saying that his state would be disfranchised. William Johnston, Belleville, P. G. M., Eastern Ontario, took the same objection, saying that provincial lodges must be represented. There would have been no triennial council had it not been for these lodges.

During the afternoon the members and delegates were driven around town, and subsequently taken to the Island where they were entertained to luncheon.

A feature of the afternoon session was the splendid reception accorded Bro. Sir Mackenzie Bowell. In the course of a brief, but vigorous, address, he stated that it was 63 years since he had first allied himself with the Orange Order.

At the evening session, considerable discussion took place respecting the question of home rule for Ireland. Grand Sovereign Dr. Sproule, Rev. G. M. Black and Rev. Mr. Lemon, past grand master, N. S., expressed sympathy with the members of the Orange Order in Ireland in seeking to preserve intact the unity of the British Empire.

At midnight the council adjourned.

ARMISTICE AGREED TO.

Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras Stop Fighting to Settle Differences.

Washington, July 18.—The evening of July 18 probably will be fixed as the time fixed for an armistice in Central America pending the settlement of the dispute involving Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras. The State Department received despatches yesterday from the City of Mexico, from Guatemala City and from San Salvador indicating that all the powers involved in the war are willing to agree upon an armistice, but some difficulty in fixing the time when it shall begin has been encountered because of the scattered condition of the warring troops.

Agree to Armistice.

San Salvador, July 16, 6 p. m.—(Delayed in transmission.)—The belligerents to-day agreed upon an armistice. It is claimed that the Guatemalans during the recent fighting used explosive bullets, notwithstanding the fact that Guatemala signed the Geneva convention.

Allied Against Guatemala.

New Orleans, July 18.—An alleged coalition of the Central American Republics against Guatemala is reported in a special despatch from Mexico City.

KING UNABLE TO COME.

But His Majesty Warmly Appreciates Canada's Invitation.

Ottawa, July 18.—In a despatch received yesterday from Lord Elgin the information is conveyed that His Majesty the King will be unable at present to entertain the idea of a journey to Canada.

Brakeman Badly Hurt.

Toronto Junction, July 18.—Yesterday afternoon as Extra 1,483 was pulling out of the yard for London, Brakeman A. N. McDonald was thrown off the top of the train and struck the ground, head first. Dr. Clendenan was called and found that the man sustained a fracture at the base of the skull. He was unconscious at the Western Hospital at a late hour this morning.

Peace In Persia.

Teheran, Persia, July 18.—An Imperial order for the formation of a new Ministry of Justice, with full details for its organization was gazetted yesterday. It is hoped that this will satisfy the malcontents. The bazaars have re-opened and the troops have been withdrawn.

Hon. Edward Blake Coming Home.

London, July 18.—(C. A. P.)—Edward Blake and C. R. Devlin sail for Canada on the Virginian on Thursday.

The Postmaster-General has been officially informed of the cancellation of Moville as a port of call for Canadian mails after Aug. 3.

Terribly Scalded.

London, July 18.—Willie, the 9-year-old son of William Quick, is in a serious condition, the result of a terrible scalding. The lad's life was almost despaired of for a time, but he will recover. The little fellow's eye sight is also in jeopardy.

Husband a Bigamist.

Detroit, July 18.—A woman who says she is Mrs. Theodore Marcey of Hamilton, Ont., where she was born and lived until her marriage in June, 1902, to Marcey, yesterday swore out a warrant charging him with bigamy. She says Marcey disappeared after their marriage, and she recently found that he had married a Detroit woman and was living here.

The Late Mr. Pipon.

Toronto, July 18.—The funeral of the late Charles E. Pipon was held yesterday from the family residence, and was largely attended by both steamship and railway men.

Body Found In Water.

Kingston, July 18.—A body unrecognizable from decomposition was found in Big Creek, South Fredericksburg. He is thought to have been an Irish emigrant.

Government by Party and What It Means.

The esteemed Toronto News, which is extremely handy and clever at pointing out the motes in other people's eyes, and which is always preaching idealism and forgetting to practice it, in a recent issue dealt with partyism in Ontario, and what our esteemed contemporary was pleased to call some of the evils in connection with it. It used to be said that the reverend editor of The Globe penned his "barnacle" articles on a Sunday evening—at all events they always appeared on Monday morning's paper. That being the case, it may, perhaps, be taken for granted that the editor of The News penned the following after coming from Sunday school:

> "The party worker has no more claim upon a public office on account of his party services than the Sunday school teacher has a claim upon the church collections."

To the above goody-goody platitude the Guelph Herald makes the following dignified and sensible reply, which will commend itself to all fair-minded people, though it may be lost on such a chronic fault-finder as the editor of The News: "It might be more profitable," the Herald says, "were the News to abandon the idealistic and consider this patronage question from a practical standpoint. Under our party system of Government appointments have been, are, and will continue to be, largely on the score of party service. This rule is not peculiar to one portion of the Empire more than another. It is recognized in the Old Land as cordially as it is recognized here. It applies to appointments high as well as low The Governor-General, sent by the Imperial Government to represent the Sovereign at Ottawa, is invariably chosen from among the supporters of the party in power. Here in Canada, our Lieutenant-Governors are selected from among the men who have done faithful service to the dominant party. The same unwritten law can be recognized in the appointments to the Bench, and to every office of emolument in the gift of the Government, Federal or Provincial. Occasionally, there has been an exception. Sir John A. Macdonald elevated lawyers to the Bench who were his political opponents. The appointment of Mr. Wallace Nesbitt to the Supreme Court by the Laurier Government was non-partizan. These exceptions, however, only prove the rule—a rule that is followed pretty religiously by every party in office, and is rarely, if ever, complained of by the party out of office. Ethically the party worker may have no stronger claims to a position than the non-partizan: practically his claims are paramount, and the recognition of his claims is essential to the maintenance of the party system Not that the selection of a dishonest or incapable official can, under any circumstances, be justified. But, honesty and capacity being secured, a supporter of the Government must naturally have a preference over an opponent. Were it otherwise, we should have the political party assuming all the burdens and responsibilities of administration without its honors and emoluments. Surely the man who devotes a great deal of his time to politics and the success of the party and the principles that he supports is more entitled to recognition than the one who never bothers his head about public affairs. So long as good and worthy men are placed in positions, the public has no ground for complaint Nor, as we said at the beginning, is there much profit to be derived from such impractical comparisons as that drawn by the Toronto News."

"A singular figure is that of Mr. Edward Blake, ardent Liberal and Protestant, in the debate on the Education bill, striving virtually to keep popular education in Ireland under the control of a Catholic priesthood, whose attitude towards popular education everywhere is seen in Spain, Italy, Austria, and all other countries where it has power. Mr. Edward Blake was a powerful advocate and might have been an eminent jurist. He was also an able speaker, though rather in the forensic than in the political style. A leader of men he was destined to be. Want of magnetism, with which he was taxed, would not have been fatal. Pitt and Peel were cold; yet they inspired confidence and attachment. Mr Blake's early promise, and the bold line taken in his Aurora speech drew round him an enthusiastic following of young men with generous aspirations, who revolted against the narrow and reactionary tyranny of the Browns, with the organ of their despotism, The Globe of those days. With the aid of his admirers, he set up The Liberal in opposition to the Globe. Suddenly, and without visible cause, he passed over to the Brown camp and took office in the Mackenzie Government, leaving The Liberal to its fate and his enthusiastic following to the tiger. He superseded Alexander Mackenzie in the leadership, but was unsuccessful as a leader, and resigned in favor of Mr. Laurier, launching, however, as he retired, a bolt in the form of a public letter on the political situation, which, had it been published at once, as he desired, on the eve of a general election, would have been utterly fatal to his party. Then he was seized with a sudden desire of heading a crusade of Home Rule, which would draw with it Catholic ascendancy for Ireland. As an advocate before the Privy Council he still shines in his proper sphere.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Glorious weather.

If the weather of yesterday and today would only continue, Belleville would be the finest summer resort between Halifax and Vancouver,

Among those present at the band concert last night were Mr., Mrs. and the Misses M. G. Squito.

It's about time Ald. Knox came home and attended to his duties. If those mosquitoes on the park had been fed properly yesterday they wouldn't have been in such a hungry and savage mood last night.

• • •

It seems rather a pity something couldn't be done to quieten those youngsters who yell and scream round the band stand when the band is playing. Sometimes, last night, the band made noise enough to drown the kids, and sometimes it didn't.

A WIRELESS SPECIAL.

The Canadian Associated Press, as you may have noted, gentle reader, only mentioned the names of seven out of the thirty delegates to the Congress of Chambers of Commerce who were presented to King Edward There was, naturally, considerable curiosity as to the personnel of the other twenty-three, and being anxious to find out, The Topics man instituted proceedings looking to some Macaronigrams from London, letting us know the part taken by our own Belleville delegates in the great reception by the King. It seems that every one of the Belleville men was introduced to His Majesty, and as the King shook hands with R. J. Graham, he said;

"Bob, old boy, can it be possible that you have been eating onions, or is it only the joyous scent of the evaporator still hanging round your garments? Well, and what's new in Belleville?

"The police force, sire," said Mr. Graham.

"Ah! yes," said King Ned, "to be sure, I read of your new police force Sorry for the old boys, of course, but when a man gets so he can fill out my clothes he's hardly fitted for a sprint after wrongdoers Let me see, Bob, didn't I hear of considerable building in Belleville lately? Tell me something about it."

"Your Majesty," said Mr. Graham, "will be delighted to hear that we have turned the old Severn brewery into a vinegar factory, and have erected a magnificent new brick chimney."

"Perhaps 'twas best," he said, "but I always hate to hear of breweries going out of commission. But whom have we here? By his martial bearing I judge him to be a military man. Colonel Ponton, did you say? Why, to be sure, the Duke of Argyll and Sir Gilbert Parker have often told me about him.

"Col. Ponton, sire," said Mr. Graham, "is known as the good friend of every South African veteran and the backbone of the Belleville Board of Trade."

"Backbone!" said the King, "why I thought your Board of Trade was composed principally of jawbone! Glad to meet you, Colonel. I heard you had five members at a meeting the other night. Shades of King Charles, where did you get the odd man? And how, Colonel, is the old Fifteenth? Happy, no doubt, in their new drillshed,"

"What!" shouted the King, "has that caitiff Hurley failed to build it? What has he been doing? Hasn't been another census lately, has there? But who, Colonel, pray, is your distinguished companion? Ex-Mayor Johnson! Not the man who discovered Queen Victoria park! Well, by the Mass, this is a joyous day for our Court, What ho! Slave. Go and tell Queen Alexandra to come hither with all speed. Allie, my dear, allow me to present the man who discovered Queen Victoria park, in that dear little city of Belleville, Canada. You remember the place where the Prince of Wales told us he saw all the weird hats! And how, my dear sir, is the Corby park and Ald. Knox? Well, Glad to hear it. So the dog owners haven't killed him yet."

"Where is the address?" he said. "Have you no address to read to me? What's the matter? Has Mikel been in Toronto so much that he couldn't find time to draft one? It was sent by mail, you say. Ah! I thought so. Stuck in the Belleville Post Office, no doubt. Well, good-by, gentlemen, remember me to the man on the next block." And so ended the audience the Belleville delegates had with good King Edward.

People who are looking for fresh air and recreation these evenings will be glad to learn of a new park, situated in the classic precincts of "Irishtown." It is known as "Emerson Park," and a gentleman tells us that Mr. Tom Emerson, the well-known fife virtuoso, is prepared, with fife, graphophone and cornet, to entertain all who pay the park a visit. It must not be supposed, of course, that Mr. Emerson plays all three instruments at one time, but those who have heard him say he can play "Lillibullero" in a way to charm the heart of a wheelbarrow.

Andrew Carnegie Contradicts Tupper.

London, July 16.—Andrew Carnegie writes to the Times, declaring that not one word of his recent speeches in Canada would justify the construction recently put on them by Sir Charles Tupper, that they contained a palpable proposition for unity with the States instead of England. He says:

"Never did I utter a word in Canada or elsewhere about drawing closer our race that did not embrace giving first place to the motherland. I don't think either Canada or America in future is to need the support of the motherland. I do believe some day the motherland will find an alliance or union with her children across the Atlantic her refuge and her strength. During the lifetime of many now living, 300,000,000 of English-speaking people are to dwell there.

"Canada to-day is intensely loyal to Great Britain. If any change is made it will be that of the fond daughter leaving her mother's house, with her consent, to create a home for herself, followed by the mother's love, which is fully reciprocated. Britain has nothing to fear from American rivalry politically."

SPORTING NOTES.

Angus Pointer won the free-for-all at Utica, N. Y., on Saturday in straight heats. Time, 2.13 1-4, 2.09 1-4, 2.07 3-4.

A team composed of cricketers from Eastern Canada will go to Philadelphia for a week's cricket from the 30th of July to the 4th of August. H. B. McGiverin will captain the eleven.

A matched race for $200 a side has been made between Dr. Johnson's Harry Direct, Peterboro, and Robert Coyle's Muriel Wilkes, Colborne, to be trotted at Napanee park. The race is mile heats, best three in five.

Twenty thousand dollars in one week for three baseball players is going some. This is the record made by the New York ball club last week. Cy Seymour cost $10,000 and Spike Shannon cost the same price, and in addition to the coin the St. Louis people got Sam Mertes and Doc Marshall. It was given out at first that the St. Louis deal was an even trade, but last night Fred Knowles showed the contract between Stanley Robison and Mr. Brush, and it read that in return for Outfielder Samuel Mertes, William Marshall and $10,000 in cash the St. Louis club agreed to release to the New York club Danny Shay and William Shannon.

THE ICE BOX.

New York Sun: This is the time of year when the ice box adds to the worries of the average housekeeper, and in the face of a threatened advance in the price of ice the question of the best way to economize is urgent. Almost every housekeeper owns an ice box of some kind, but few understand the science of running it to the best advantage.

It is a mistake to suppose that an ice box must be set in a cool place, because the box does not absorb heat from the outside if it is properly made. It is only when the box is not absolutely air-tight or is too frequently opened that it is affected by being kept in a place where the air is warm. In other words, if it is not a good box you must keep it in a cool place to help it along, as it cannot do its work without coddling.

The principal thing about the ice-box is to have it perfectly airtight. Most of the trouble comes from letting warm air stream into the box through the drain pipe. There should always be a tap under this drip pipe, which the melting ice can keep filled with water. This water trap keeps out the air.

Every ice box should have the ice chamber rinsed out with boiling water at least once a week, to get rid of the accumulated slime at the bottom, and the edges of the doors, where they bind against the casing, should be thoroughly wiped off, because that is where germs accumulate, even in the most expensive boxes. No matter what a box may be lined with, the airtight casings must be watched.

There is a continual discussion among housekeepers as to the proper quantity of ice to take so as to get the best results for the least money. One person will tell you to get a big lump at a time, while another will recommend little and often.

There is no economy in taking 100 pounds one day and letting it run down until you want another 100 pounds. Neither is there any in having only just enough to be able to say there is ice in the box all the time.

The trick is to keep the ice chamber full. The more ice there is in it, the colder the box, without any extra cost of the ice itself, because the same quantity fed into a full box day by day will give you twice as much cold as if it were fed into a half empty ice chamber.

It is a great mistake to put anything in the ice chamber with the ice. it is no colder here than in the box itself. Keep the ice chamber for ice and keep it full.

Always scald the ice chamber and wipe out the box before putting in Saturday's double supply, and pack the little pieces together as closely as possible. Open the box as seldom as possible and be sure to shut the doors tight when you close them and you will have no trouble.

The secret of economy in ice is an absolutely airtight box with the ice chamber always filled as full as it will hold.

KILL THE DANDRUFF GERM.

Or Your Hair Will Fall Out Till You Become Bald.

Modern science has discovered that dandruff is caused by a germ that digs up the scalp in scales, as it burrows down to the roots of the hair, where it destroys the hair's vitality, causing falling hair, and ultimately, baldness. After Prof. Unna, of Hamburg, Germany, discovered the dandruff germ, all efforts to find a remedy failed until the great laboratory discovery was made which resulted in Newbro's Herpicide. It alone of all other hair preparations kills the dandruff germ. Without dandruff hair grows luxuriantly. "Destroy the cause you remove the effect."

Oldest Oddfellow On This Continent Dead

Montreal Witness: The oldest Oddfellow on the continent, and possibly the oldest in the world, passed away this morning in the person of Mr. George Outram, of No. 484 Magdalen street, Montreal. Mr. Outram was in his ninety-third year, and owing to the infirmities of age, had been confined to his residence for some time. Within the last week or two he had become much weaker, and his death this morning was not unexpected.

Mr. Outram was born at Drumfield, Derbyshire, on May 3, 1814. On the twenty-fourth of the present month it will be exactly 74 years since he was made a member of Manchester Unity Lodge, No. 312, I.O.O.F., Sheffield district. He filled all the minor offices in his lodge, was Noble Grand six times and Grand Master seven times. He subsequently joined Mechanics' Lodge, Outercliffe, No. 1107, I.O.O.F., M.U., of which but four members remained at the time, but which had a membership of over forty when he left. In 1836 he was presented with a silver medal in recognition of his services to the lodge.

Coming to Canada in 1863, Mr. Outram bought a farm of two hundred acres near Kincardine, Ont. Agriculture claimed him but a short time, however, for he soon sold out and went to the United States, where he started a file factory. He remained in this business until 1869. In the following year he returned to Canada and established himself in business in Montreal as file cutter.

Mr. Outram was a man of great vitality, and was hale and hearty until after he had passed his ninetieth year. The word "tramway" takes its name from Mr. Outram's great uncle, who owned large iron works at Butterley, and was the first to use carriages running on grooved rails to convey coal from the mines seven miles distant from his works. It was locally known as the Outram way, the name being afterwards contracted to tramway.

Mr. Outram's wife passed away many years ago. He leaves a daughter, who kept house for him, and a son, who went from Montreal to establish a file business in Port Hope, and now lives, retired, in that place.

May Take to the Right.

"Keep to the right" may become the rule of the railroad as well as of the road. The Grand Trunk Railway is said to be contemplating the adoption of the American system of running trains on the right hand track instead of the left hand, as has been hitherto the Canadian system, following the European system. The latter gives engineers a better chance to see both tracks and to signal if need be to each other, hence the reason for the change is not apparent, nor has it been made known.

JOKE ON WHITNEY.

Toronto News: Quite an amusing incident, not without a significant flavor, is told of a happening at the Provincial Parliament Buildings on the 4th inst.

A couple of American lady tourists, evidently of the egotistic and newly-rich variety, drove to the Buildings and while the carriage waited at the entrance, proceeded to inspect the halls. After a haughty look or two at the party of tourists being shown around by the attendants, the few pair separated themselves with considerable ostentation and dignity. "We wish a special guide for ourselves," observed one of them with some dignity.

As the attendants were all engaged they waited in the upper hallway examining the pictures.

At this eventful moment Premier Whitney came swinging down the hot hall, coat off, vest unbuttoned, and arms full of papers.

"One of the servants?" queried the American in an audible whisper, training her eye-glasses upon him.

The Premier in passing caught the comment.

"Yes, madam," he said, swinging suddenly toward her in most typical and emphatic style. "I am one of the servants here — perhaps the chief public servant."

And swinging back into his stride he passed on.

The imperious Americans wilted under the manner, more than the words, of the Premier, and those who witnessed the incident enjoyed hugely the more quiet and courteous way in which the ladies subsequently secured an attendant and "tipped" him handsomely.

Elevating the Civil Service.

SOME FACTS CONNECTED WITH THE BASTEDO DISMISSAL.

(Toronto World.)

According to the most virulent of Premier Whitney's censors, the civil service of Ontario is degraded when a public official is disciplined for violation of duty. It has no word of censure for such grave breaches of duty as were involved in the charges made against Mr. Bastedo, though these included the mutilation of letter books the secretion and suppression of official letters and documents, interference in elections, contributing to the Liberal party's election fund and exercising political discrimination in the issue of fishery licenses. These are not light offences, and the only excuse offered in Mr. Bastedo's behalf is that they were done on the instructions of his political chief or were practically compelled by the general policy of the Liberal government.

Here, then, is the situation as propounded by Mr. Whitney's press critics, who profess to have at heart the purity and efficiency of the civil service and the protection of officials of capacity, intelligence and integrity. No degradation of the civil service was involved when ministers in the late administration ordered or sanctioned flagrant violations of public duty on the part of civil servants, but degradation comes when a serious effort is made to purify the service and to restore to provincial officials the sense of personal honor and self respect which the Liberal government had so outraged. And the citizens are asked to believe that this will deter young men of ability and self-respect from entering the service. Rather will it encourage them when they know that what will be expected from them is strict adherence to their proper duties.

To Sell 300 Islands.

Ogdensburg Journal: Three hundred of the islands in the St. Lawrence river which were won by the late Henry Yates in the lottery for the benefit of the colleges of the United States, which was managed by Dr. Eliphalet Nott, the first president of Union College, Archibald McIntyre and Henry Yates, then a resident of Schenectady, will be sold at public auction in Watertown on Aug. 11th. It is expected that about $50,000 will be realized by the sale.

Henry Yates was a notable character during his residence in Schenectady. Although he never lacked money, he became immensely rich as a result of the lottery, and the islands in the St. Lawrence were a portion of the property he acquired. Mr. Yates was one of the men most prominently connected with the lottery.

The islands vary in size from about thirty acres to small pieces of land hardly fifty feet long. There has been a demand for their sale, and it has been decided to offer them at auction.

Henry Yates lived in Schenectady until about 1847, when he took up his residence in Albany and lived there until his death. He was a brother of Governor Yates and was at one time a United States Senator for this State. There are about twenty heirs to the estate, among whom are Bishop Satterlee, of Washington.

RELIC OF 1812.

Copy of a Document Recently Found by Francis Janisse of Windsor in Late Father's Papers.

Francis Janisse, a Windsor undertaker, while looking through the papers left by his father, the late Henry Janisse of Sandwich East, come upon a number of documents bearing upon the stirring times along the border during the war of 1812.

Among these documents was the copy of a petition which was sent to George Murray, K. C. B., Secretary of State for the Colonies. It is written on parchment paper, and the ink, although somewhat faded, is still distinct. The writing is like copper-plate and shows that the person who penned the petition was a splendid penman.

"The memorial of Billy Caldwell, Matthew Elliott, John Wilson, William Elliott, Alexander McKee and William Caldwell, captains, and Thomas Caldwell and Edward Seyers, late lieutenants of the Indian Department of Upper Canada, on behalf of themselves and the other reduced officers of the said department, humbly sheweth:

"That your memorialists, during the late contest with the United States, having been known to be conversant with the current language spoken by the different Indian tribes attached to the British standard, and also to exercise great interest over them, were appointed to their above specified ranks in the Indian Department, and served throughout the arduous struggle in the upper frontier. They were engaged in the taking of Detroit and Niagara, in the battles of Queenston Heights, River Raisin, Fort Meigs, Sandusky, Beaver Dam, Chippowa, Lundy's Lane, Fort Erie and various skirmishes, in which some of them were severely wounded.

"That many of your memorialists pursued a lucrative traffic with the Indians in the American territory prior to the war, yet they abandoned all their promising expectations, spurned the alluring offers held out by the republic, and chose rather poverty with a firm adherence to the cause of their King than riches purchased at the expense of honor. The treaty of Ghent obstructing the commerce they formerly carried on with red men, most of them are reduced to hopeless indigence, with their unhappy families.

"There remains to them, however, this cheering consolation, which helps to sustain them in the midst of misfortune, that they sacrificed everything but honor for the sake of their country, and on the generosity of that country, which never yet abandoned a friend in distress, they cast themselves, fondly hoping she will no longer suffer them to lament over the melancholy effects of their patriotism.

"Although no mercenary motives influenced your memorialists to join the sacred ranks of liberty in service of their Sovereign, yet they respectfully assert their exertions were of as great moment to the cause they supported as the officers of the Indian Department in the first American war, who by an order from the Lords of the Treasury, dated Aug. 31, 1786, had half-pay conferred on them. Your memorialists trust that the gracious Sovereign will make the same provision for them, and they urge this request the most earnestly as their number is now reduced to 13, whereas the officers of 1786 amounted to 35.

"Your memorialists beg to be permitted to repeat the saying of the late gallant Gen. Brock, who attributed the salvation of the province to the exertions of the Indians, whose terrible warwhoop the enemy never yet failed to tremble before."

THE SHOCK OF 1663.

When Canada, New York and Pennsylvania Were Shaken Up.

Canada, New York and Pennsylvania experienced a terrible shock on Jan. 26, 27 and 28, 1663. A quaint description of the occurrence, published at the time, says: "The heavens being serene, there was suddenly heard a roar like the noise of a great fire. Immediately the buildings were shaken with great violence. Doors opened and shut of themselves with fearful clattering. The bells rang without their ropes being touched. Cracks appeared in the walls of buildings and floors separated and in some cases came down. Chasms appeared in the fields, and the hills seemed to be in motion. The fright of the inhabitants was shared by the beasts and birds, who sent forth fearful cries, howlings and bellowings.

"The duration of this earthquake was very uncommon. The first shock continued half an hour before it was over, but it began to abate a quarter of an hour after it started. Three other shocks occurred the same day. The second day there was a more violent shock, which lasted a long time, and that night some counted no less than thirty-two shocks, of which many were violent. The tremblings of the earth did not cease till July. Many trees were torn up and the profiles of the mountains seemed to be much changed. Springs and small streams were dried up. Waters once sweet became sulphurous and the channels in which rivers formerly ran were so altered as to be unrecognizable.

"Halfway between Tadousac and Quebec two hills were thrown down and formed a point of land which extended an eighth of a mile into the St. Lawrence River. The Island of Aux Coudres became larger than it was before and the channel of the river was greatly changed."

The Cultivation of Style.

The cultivation of style is very justly made a part of education. Those works are the best which have longest stood the test of time. We may still borrow descriptive power from Tacitus; dignified perspicuity from Livy; simplicity from Caesar, and from Homer some portion of that light and heat, which, dispersed into 10,000 channels, have filled the world with bright images and illustrious thoughts. We must still learn from Virgil to be majestic, and from Tibullus to be tender; we might not yet look upon the face of nature, as Theocritus saw it nor might we reach those springs of pathos with which Euripides softened the hearts of his audience.

Christian Brothers' Case.

London, July 18.—(C. A. P.)—The Privy Council has dismissed the petition for right of appeal in Kendrick vs. Wade, North Sydney vs. Leahy. Argument is proceeding in Christian Brothers vs. Ontario Minister of Education.

The Christian Brothers' case is a stated case, arising from the claim of the Christian Brothers to the right to teach in Ontario schools without qualification.

Money Is Coming In.

Why everybody likes Abbey's Salt.

It is so pleasant to the taste that even children take it with pleasure.

It does not "cake" or flake on top of the water.

It effervesces slowly—may be drunk leisurely, without choking or blinding the user like seidlitz powders.

The granules all dissolve—thus the full benefit of the salt is obtained with every dose.

It is the ideal laxative and tonic to purify the blood—regulate stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels—and build up the system.

TIMELY TOPICS.

IT'S ALL RIGHT NOW.

She wept.
Her red lips quivered, and adown her cheek
The slow tears crept.
She looked at me, and strove in vain to speak;
Her grief
Choked back the words she would fain have said,
She bowed her head
And groped out blindly for her handkerchief.

She wept.
Not then alone, but for whole days she cried.
Her anguish slept,
But woke again with her desire denied.
Her face
Grew pale; her eyes reproachfully would look
And then once more her form with passion shook.
And I—to think that I could be so base!

She wept.
Until my bosom softened, I implored
Her to accept
The gift she craved; and peace was straight restored.
Our spat
Was over; as a storm the heavens clears
So did her tears
Clear the domestic sky. She got the Hat.

The Montreal Gazette, discussing the visit of the Black Dike Band to that city, institutes a comparison between British and American workingmen which makes interesting reading. The Black Dike Band, by the way, is an English organization, the members of which are mechanics and amateurs. The critics, in cities where they have played in Canada, give them unstinted praise. After pointing out that the results obtained by this band mean the possession of a high degree of intelligence, and that there are scores of others in Great Britain, with the exception of half a dozen or so perhaps not as good as the band in question, but of real ability, organizations capable of rendering and who do play the better class of music, and to whom the works of the greatest composers, classical and modern, are familiar, the Gazette says;

"These bands are not composed of professional musicians, but of workers in the mills and factories, the men whom some people believe are too stupid and drunken to learn. Behind the men who make up the actual membership of these bands, there are hundreds of others in training in the hope of some day being taken on, and there are thousands of others keenly interested. In how many American mill cities or towns could as keen a taste for all that is good in music be found? How many of the big industrial establishments on this continent have existing in the ranks of their workers a musical organization which could play alongside of the best professional organization in the land without fear of criticism? There is not one. Why? Because it is the American workingman who is the machine, the man who is more interested in his drink than his work, who is so hopelessly in the rut that he has lost the power of appreciating anything which might elevate him morally and physically. This is too harsh, but it is no harsher than the somewhat prevalent opinion of the British worker's mental status, and it possesses more justification."

The N. Y. Herald, says; Who says the automobile industry is not growing? There are eighty-two thousand cars at present in use in the United States and about fifty thousand more practically out of commission. Of course New York leads, with a registration of nearly thirty-one thousand machines, New Jersey being second, Massachusetts third and Pennsylvania fourth. The horse may not be going, but it cannot be denied that the automobile has come to stay.

There have been compiled in Paris statistics to show that 150,000 persons die each year in France from tuberculosis. This represents 39 deaths out of every 10,000 inhabitants. Prof. Albert Robin has established from the statistics of 1901, 1902 and 1903 that tuberculosis increases in an almost regular proportion to the density of population. In Paris, for example, the percentage of deaths from tuberculosis is 45.2; in cities of 100,000 to 492,000 population, 34.4 per cent.; in cities of 20,000 to 30,000 inhabitants, 30.8 per cent.; in cities of 5,000 to 10,000, 23.4 per cent., and in cities of 1,000 to 5,000 20.4 per cent.

Just what useful part in the economy of nature the common housefly plays it is not easy to discover, unless it be to set a supreme example of what may be accomplished by unbounded impudence, but as a carrier of disease and death it ranks but little if at all inferior to that dangerous pest, the mosquito. The housefly, by way of return for the hospitality that it demands and takes without waiting for the ceremony of invitation, makes itself such an unmitigated nuisance that the most universally tolerant and sympathetic of human beings is unable to harbor a kindly feeling towards it, and with the average mortal the prevailing condition is one of constant warfare.

ABYSSINIAN APES.

They Have Chiefs, Guards and Sentries When on the March.

Very similar reports are made from different parts of north Africa in regard to the monkey tribes that occupy that continent from Morocco to Abyssinia. Just how far tribal relations may have tended to vary the species is a question quite as important as that of language. Some points of interest are found in an English book, "A Visit to Abyssinia." Says our author:

"I have mentioned that large numbers of monkeys frequent these hills. They move about in organized bands, and their proceedings are arranged in the most orderly and tactical manner. They are difficult to approach unless it is gradually and cautiously done, but mounted on a camel I have succeeded in getting within a few yards of them when they were crossing the path ahead of me, about fifty in single file following their leader and looking with their manes like small lions.

"Their movements are full of interest and well repay observation. They have chiefs, sentries and advanced and rear guards on the march. The mothers carry their children on their backs exactly like the larger human creatures in these countries. They talk and chatter, the females being especially loquacious, quarrelsome and combative. These are clearly under the command of the elder males, whose gesture alone is sufficient to reduce them to obedience. They live in small caverns among the hills, but will most certainly avoid a direct return to their haunts if followed.

"They are less timid of men when these are mounted on camels than when on foot, experience having doubtless taught them that the former is usually traveling to a destination and that his steady, jogging pace is rarely interrupted by his curiosity. On one occasion, seeing a whole family tribe on the road home after a foraging excursion, I successfully tempted some of the younger ones to leave their ranks by quietly rolling pieces of bread and sugar at them, but the older members were above such weakness and went on in a stately way up the hill, disappearing over the ledge and reproving the youngsters as they retired."

The Wrists.

In spite of the fact that doctors always take the pulse of a patient from the wrist few persons know what important parts of the body the wrists are and how much may be accomplished by treatment of them. When one has fainted water should be applied to the wrists as freely as to the face and temples. In cases of severe illness doctors frequently order the wrists to be bathed with milk and with beef tea. Athletes learn that the wrists must be kept cool in summer and warm in winter. You all know the relief experienced from removing a tight glove, especially when you are overheated. The relief comes not from the hands being uncovered, but from the wrists being unconfined and kept cool.

Don't Cross Your Legs.

"The prevalence of appendicitis is an admitted fact," said a surgeon. "I have myself operated on 719 persons for the disease. Crossing the legs is responsible for a good deal of this trouble. That sounds strange, doesn't it? Nevertheless it is a theory advocated by more than one great surgeon. Indeed I know some men who say that if people never crossed their legs appendicitis would quite disappear. You see, crossing the leg squeezes and cramps the delicate vermiform appendix. Squeezed and cramped, the appendix becomes irritated. Inflammation sets in. Intense pain comes. Then—presto—you are on your back, the sweet and heavy fumes of chloroform are choking you, and the appendicitis specialist bends over you with a sharp knife."

He was surprised at how the sores healed—"I took your New Method Treatment for a serious blood disease with which I had been afflicted for twelve years. I had consulted a score of physicians, taken all kinds of blood medicine, visited Hot Springs and other mineral water resorts, but only got temporary relief. They would help me for a time, but after discontinuing the medicines the symptoms would break out again—running sores, blotches, rheumatic pains, looseness of the hair, swellings of the glands, palms of the hands scaling, itchiness of the skin, dyspeptic stomach, etc. I had given up in despair when a friend advised me to consult you, as you had cured him of a similar disease 8 years ago. I had no hope, but took his advice. In three weeks' time the sores commenced to heal up and I became encouraged. I continued the New Method Treatment for four months and at the end of that time every symptom had disappeared. I was cured 7 years ago and no signs of any disease since. My boy, three years old, is sound and healthy. I certainly can recommend your treatment with all my heart. You can refer any person to me privately, but you can use this testimonial as you wish." W. HEALTH AND HABITS.

Tissue Income and Expenditure Must Be Made to Balance.

The day must come at some future period of sociological development when the instinct of self preservation will overrule the pernicious habits and customs of the present day fashions and necessity. Men will come to learn that tissue income and expenditure must be adjusted to a better balance if the human machine is to be kept in smoothly working order; that excess of either is a physiological sin which nature will surely avenge either on the individual or on his descendants; that sustained work of the best quality can only be performed when effort is kept well within the margin of accomplishment; that luxurious idleness and artificial excitement, when carried beyond the limits of a healthy counterpoise to the daily routine of active duty, bring about their neurasthenic nemesis as surely as overstrenuous endeavor, and that the coming generation can be fitted to battle with the increasing complexities of life only if endowed with bodies that are structurally perfect and with nervous centers capable of producing throughout an average duration of life sufficient energy to enable the machine to perform satisfactorily the work whereto it has been set.

A more vigorous public sentiment, fostered by an example of greater self denial and more rigid adherence to simplicity of life on the part of those who set the pace and lead the fashions of the day, would do much to arrest the downhill rush of the multitude; pronounced social disapproval of the immoderate use of alcohol and tobacco and the stern forbidding of both under the age of puberty would shield the nervous centers from two of their most deadly enemies, and, though it might at first grate against popular feeling, the introduction by the legislature of an enactment whereby some form of compulsory military service was exacted from every healthy young man would materially contribute to the preservation of active minds in vigorous bodies to those who are destined to make or mar the future history of their fatherland.—Guthrie Rankin, M. D., in Detroit News-Tribune.

Arabian Snuff.

Snuff in Arabia is not used as it is with us, although one occasionally sees a snuffer, but the snuff is ordinarily made into a pill of about the size of a robin's egg and is placed between the lower front lip and the teeth. This manner of using snuff is common among the laboring class, and almost every cooly that is met in the street has his lower lip puffed out by a ball of snuff behind it. Arabian snuff is prepared out of the ordinary powdered tobacco, unrefined sugar and potash.

Sneezing.

Sneezing is the best brain clearer known. Many persons conclude an attack of faintness or fainting with a violent sneeze. Our ancestors took snuff from a belief in the efficacy of sneezing. But tobacco so taken is in part absorbed into the blood and hurts the system. Tickling the nostrils with a feather or straw will act as well as taking snuff. Try it when you feel faint. It cannot do harm.

HAMLIN GARLAND

COPYRIGHT, 1903, BY HAMLIN GARLAND

The man's voice was gentle as he said: "You see, lady, the camp is in a terrible excitement. We heard today that the sheriff was coming with a posse, and the boys kind o' hold five or six o' those one lungers in the Springs responsible. They are particularly down on Barnett for putting Mackay up to that trick. But you'll be perfectly safe at Kelly's."

At length Ann's leader turned toward a dark, high point of rocks, the trail began to descend and a few minutes later they came to a warmly lighted cabin, on the door of which the guide resolutely knocked. The latch was immediately lifted, and a small, pale woman with a blur of yellow hair about her head appeared in the light.

"Mrs. Kelly, I've brought you a boarder," began the vedette.

With a whoop the boy rushed from the cabin and flung his arms around her.

"Oh, Ann, but I'm glad to see you! Where is Cousin Don? Which way did you come? Rob has gone down to Bozle to meet you."

Ann turned to thank her guide, who was looking at her with undisguised admiration.

"It was a great pleasure," he replied, with an assumption of grand manner. "Introduce me, please," he said to Mrs. Kelly.

"I must introduce myself first," said the little woman. "I am Mrs. Kelly, and your guard is Mr. Jack Munro."

Ann gave him her hand. "I thank Mr. Munro, but I think he should have allowed Mr. Barnett to come into shelter. It seemed cruel to send him back on that long, cold drive."

Munro remained unmoved. "Oh, he'll stay at Clayson's overnight."

Mrs. Kelly put in a word. "I think you better come into shelter. You must be cold and hungry. Won't you step inside, Mr. Munro?"

"No, thank you. It is a great temptation, but I've work to do."

And so, chilled and hungry, Ann entered the pleasant home of the Kellys, and the terror of the dark ride became a part of the outer world, shut away by the strong, rude door.

"Rob has gone down to the stage office," explained Mrs. Kelly. "We thought you'd come that way."

Mrs. Kelly put Ann down to some tea and cold meat, and while she was still at the table and in the midst of her story Raymond flung open the door.

"Here she is!" he called to some one behind him, and his white face and glowing eyes testified to his great anxiety.

Ann rose to meet him with a rush of trust and confidence that filled her throat and rendered her wordless, but she held her hand toward him.

He seized it. "I was greatly alarmed when I heard that you were coming alone. How did you come? How did you find the way?"

Ann then said, "Your friend Munro met us, turned Don back and piloted me up the hill."

Raymond turned to a big man who stood waiting. "Miss Rupert, this is Matthew Kelly, my mining partner."

Ann gave her hand into Kelly's enormous palm with a look of admiration. "I am glad to know you, Mr. Kelly. I have heard Louis speak of you very often."

In the presence of these men Ann lost all sense of fear and weakness. They were possessed of something which Don, loyal as he was, lacked.

Raymond's eyes hardly left her face, but she no longer resented his interest. On the contrary, she studied him closely. There was a subtle change in him. He seemed older, gentler, but more manly and handsomer than before.

"It is a rude place for you to live, Miss Rupert," he said, "but there is no danger. The strike has not involved us. We are as peaceful as a farm here."

She smiled back into his eyes with more of liking than she had ever expressed.

"I am not afraid," she replied. "I am going to find the camp interesting. At any rate, so long as Louis is settled in his determination to be a miner, I must keep him in sight."

"It is a great pleasure to have him with me, and I am glad to be of use to him, for his own sake as well as for what you have come to mean to me."

Ann's lashes fell before the glow of his admiring eyes, and with this sign of weakness a flush of resentment again passed over her. "He must not look at me in that way," she complained to herself.

When Raymond left the house to walk back to his own cabin he resented for the first time the presence of Louis. He wished to be alone with the mysterious emotion which had swept back upon him at sight of Ann. He faced the night, out of which every shred of vapor had vanished, and the blue-black vault, blazing with innumerable jetting globes of light, invited to high thoughts, to serious imaginings.

His duty plainly was to lay hands upon the lad and hustle him back to Valley Springs and so put both brother and sister out of his life; but this was not easy. He argued that she was in no danger and that the change of air would do her good. "She will be interested in the mines," he went on in formless debate with himself. "The scenery is magnificent; and then, of course, she can go down at any time we think wise."

CHAPTER XIII.

THE little room to which Mrs. Kelly conducted Ann was hardly larger than a steamer stateroom and was very primitive as regards its furnishings.

"It's a small place and a rough place for such as you, but it's the best we have," said Mrs. Kelly.

Ann responded to the humility which shaded the hearty voice of her hostess, and, though she shivered in the chill air, answered cheerily: "I'm sure this is very nice. The bed is tempting."

Hesitatingly, with many misgivings, Mrs. Kelly withdrew, and Ann hurriedly disrobed and leaped into the bed, which was white as snow and almost as cold. It was like a plunge into the breakers at Magnolia; it fairly took her breath away, and there was no escape from this icy contact, for the air was as bitter as the sheets.

But the joy of the meeting with Louis and the unexpected glow of confidence and pleasure with which she met Raymond's anxious, piercing eyes came back to warm her heart.

How changed Raymond was! How deeply brown! He looked as vigorous as she saw him first at the ranch, and yet different—years older; and with his strength, his resolution, something new was mingled—something graver and sweeter. He was handsomer in the miner's heavy boots than in the cowboy's spurs and kerchief.

Her mind took up again the singularity of her position, lying there in a frosty bed in a miner's cabin. She laughed. "Am I to meet my death by freezing?" But at last a glow of comfort began to steal over her, a delicious languor, and then—she was awakened by a grinding sound and by the shouting of cheerful children, and a few minutes later the gentle voice of Mrs. Kelly sounded at the door.

"Are you awake?" Ann threw back the coverlet to find the room full of sunshine. "May I come in?" asked Mrs. Kelly.

"Certainly," said Ann, and the pale and pretty little housewife entered with a pitcher of warm water.

"Good morning. How did you sleep the night?"

"I don't know. I haven't the slightest idea where the night went to."

After her hostess left her Ann lay staring at the rough walls and the still more primitive ceiling in wonder. "It must be real," she thought, "for I couldn't possibly dream it." With a realization of her own sloth, she sprang out upon the cold floor and began to dress with a vigor and celerity she did not know she possessed.

During breakfast she studied Mrs. Kelly and began to understand at last that the little mother had not merely washed and dressed the boys and cooked the breakfast, but had served as waitress and maid of all work, and now, calm and sweet and self contained, was presiding over the table. If any dish needed replenishing, she sprang up to get it, and this put the robust daughter of wealth to shame.

"Don't you feel tired some mornings and lie abed?" she asked.

Mrs. Kelly smiled. "Indeed I do, but I can't afford to lie abed. When Matt makes his next strike, sure I'm going to hire a girl and sleep till I'm weary of it, if it takes a week."

"You must let me do something while I am here," said Ann. "Let me provide a maid for you."

"Oh, no; I was only jokin'. Sure, you couldn't hire a girl on the hill to do housework. Besides, the best of them are not fit company for you, and in a small hut like this you're cheek by jowl with your help."

Ann had not thought of them as company, but she gravely replied: "I might bring a maid from my cousin's house. At any rate, you must let me help this morning. I can sweep and dust—indeed I can."

"Mighty little dusting the shack needs in this air," said Mrs. Kelly. "Good luck to me, it's tiny."

"I must help or I will not stay," insisted Ann. "At least I can amuse the children."

Louis shot through the door like a stone from a sling. His eyes were dancing. "Good morning, everybody!" he shouted. "Haven't you breakfasted yet? Why, we've been done ten minutes. Isn't this bully—this life up here? How do you feel this morning?"

Ann laughed to see him so elate, so vigorous. "What a child you are!" she exclaimed in wonder.

Raymond followed at a little distance. "Good morning, Miss Rupert. Good morning, Nora. Hello, younkers," and he gathered a boy under each arm. He looked very capable and entirely self contained as he put the lads down and addressed himself to Ann. "I suppose your baggage went to Bozle, but we will get that today. And, Mrs. Kelly, if you need anything to make Miss Rupert comfortable let us know. To the limit of our resources command us."

Ann, with unaccountable lightness of spirit, quickly protested. "Now, please don't make company of me. I am going to earn my living by helping Mrs. Kelly about the house. My bed was very comfortable and my breakfast delicious. What else do I require? One needn't ask how you are. You look to be perfectly well again."

Louis stared at his sister and was about to make some revealing remark when Raymond intervened. "We are very glad to have you in camp, but you must not suffer inconveniences."

"I've been thinking perhaps it would do me good to suffer hardship," she answered, with a reflective glance.

He considered a moment before changing the subject. "Everything seems quiet up street this morning, so our trouble may blow over. I am going up by and by and will report on what is brewing in the saloons. They are the storm centers. I'm sorry Don started to come in, and I hope he will go quietly back and forget the whole incident."

"Tell me about the camp. What is the trouble all about? I can't understand," she said.

"It's quite simple," replied Raymond. "The county is about equally divided now between the miners of the peak and the citizens of the plain. The peak's interests are not those of the Springs, and it has resented for a year the domination of the Springs. The owners of the mines are either residents of the plain or of the east and violently opposed to the politics of the camp. Barnett's man, Mackay, attempted to reorganize the working hours of the camp and failed. You know of the mishandling he received."

"What are they going to do now?"

"I don't know. As the case stands, the camp is hot against any invasion by the sheriff and 'a mob of hirelings,' as they call his deputies, and his attempt to overawe the camp only created more furious resistance. I will be able to tell better what the outcome will be when I learn what the union has decided to do. Thus far it has been a game of bluff on the part of a dozen men who are not strictly miners at all, and the question of wages has had little attention. I am going up now to see what is going on."

As Raymond entered the street the peace and beauty of the Kelly home and the vision of the two women bent peacefully above their sewing stood away in radiant contrast above the reeking saloons, the reckless crowds and the rows of drink inflamed men lounging along each bar.

The lover's senses, sharpened by Ann's presence in the camp, detected a more sinister change in the temper of the men. Up to this time all that had taken place had been jocular, at least on the surface, but the sheriff's threatened invasion with a hundred hired thugs stirred the red fires of wrath in men like Hanley, Brock and Collingwood, who had hitherto been but onlookers, and they were now the inciting centers of men talking loudly and with undisguised fury.

Hanley, perceiving Raymond at the door, approached to say: "One of Munro's vedettes intercepted that kid of yours last night and got word that Don Barnett was on his way up here. You better warn him off."

Raymond resented his tone, but coldly replied: "The boy was mistaken. Barnett turned back at Grand View."

Some one plucked him by the arm, and, following his guide, Raymond entered the room used as the office of the union, where he found Carter, the president, and Larned, the organizer, in the midst of a hot argument with Munro, Smith and a group of others of their sort. Larned was shaking with excitement and rage, and Carter, the little president, looked white and scared.

Munro, with a grin, said: "Come in, Rob. This is a council of war."

Raymond entered calmly, his head a little bent, his keen eyes studying every face. "What's it all about?"

Larned explained, his hands quivering, the veins on his forehead bulging, his eyes restless and fevered. "If they do it," he said, "I leave—I get out. I will not countenance lawlessness of this sort. I'm not a fool. I know what the effect will be. If they turn back this posse the state militia will be called out. I came to organize a union to meet the coming question of labor and capital. I did not come here to form mobs. I refuse to sanction it. I will not have a thing to do with it. If you make this raid I leave the camp."

Raymond spoke. "I'm not involved in the present disagreement, so that my advice is disinterested, but as you've ridden up and asked me I give it as my opinion that Larned is right. You can stand off a sheriff once or twice, and you might even stand off a regiment of militia, but you can't stand off the United States army, and that's what you'll run up against in the end. Jack, you ought to have sense enough to keep out of this."

Munro smiled. "I'm only the military arm of government. I'm not making laws; I execute them."

"Why not call a meeting and put it to a vote?" asked Smith.

"I know why," replied Brock. "Larned is afraid it will carry."

Larned leaped to his feet. "I admit it! I don't want the word to go out that this raid has been voted on by the union. With the camp boiling with excitement, it might carry. Outsiders

BOBBY'S GHOST

By Colin S. Collins

Copyright, 1906, by Beatrix Reade

Carter threw down the pamphlet with an exclamation of disgust. "You'll never get ahead if you read that sort of trash," he admonished. "Why don't you get good books, Bobby?"

"These is good," protested Bobby. "They're first rate. I'll let you have it to read after I've finished if you don't believe it."

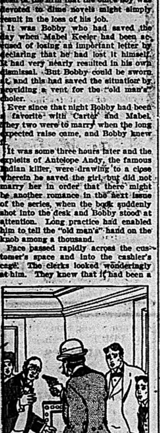
Carter fled. It was not the first time he had sought to correct Bobby's literary taste, and it generally ended in his defeat. Once he had thought of appealing to Thomas Pace, but he had a liking for the lad, and to report to the head of the firm that the office boy was devoted to dime novels might simply result in the loss of his job.

It was Bobby who had saved the day when Mabel Keeler had been accused of losing an important letter by declaring that he had lost it himself. It had very nearly resulted in his own dismissal. But Bobby could be sworn at, and this had saved the situation by providing a vent for the "old man's" choler.

Ever since that night Bobby had been a favorite with Carter and Mabel. They two were to marry when the long expected raise came, and Bobby knew it.

It was some three hours later and the exploits of Antelope Andy, the famous Indian killer, were drawing to a close wherein he saved the girl, but did not marry her in order that there might be another romance in the next issue of the series, when the book suddenly shot into the desk and Bobby stood at attention. Long practice had enabled him to tell the "old man's" hand on the knob among a thousand.

Pace passed rapidly across the customer's space and into the cashier's cage. The clerks looked wonderingly at him. They knew that if had been a memorable day on the street, and Pace's appearance bore the marks of the storm.



"TOO LATE," SAID BRACE. "I AM GOING TO KILL YOU."

"Carter," he said hurriedly, "you may let the clerks go, but I wish you would stay yourself. I shall be busy for some time and may need you. Miss Keeler, please get your book."

With a sigh Mabel picked up her stenographic book and followed her employer into his private office. Carter dismissed the other clerks and returned quietly to his books. Bobby made himself comfortable and reached for his beloved literature. He must wait to copy the letters Mabel was taking down, but he had a new issue of "The Young Pioneers" and a delay did not worry him.

For an hour or so the outer office was quiet, the stillness broken only by the scratching of Carter's pen and the indistinct monotone of Pace's voice as he dictated steadily. Then with a crash the door was thrown open and Frederick Brace burst in.

Bobby sprang up in surprise. Brace was a broken down operator—a "ghost," in the slang of the street; a ghost of the past, who now and then came into the customers' room to beg a "stake" from some old timer who could remember when Brace was one of the leading operators on the street and not a broken down hanger on, playing an occasional tip in the bucket shops on money borrowed from some sympathetic and prosperous acquaintance. He could have no business with Thomas Pace.

Brace brushed him aside and strode through the wicket gate. Carter sprang to interpose, but was thrown roughly to one side, and followed, expostulating, as the excited man forced his way into Pace's office.

"I've not come for a loan," laughed Brace wildly. "I don't want your charity, Tom Pace. I want justice." He swayed unsteadily, the light of madness gleaming in his eyes. "I want you to give back what you have stolen from me."

Pace held out a bill. "You are excited, Brace," he said quietly. "Come in in the morning and talk it over. I am very busy now. This will fix you up for the present, won't it?"

Brace snatched the bill from his hand and tore it in shreds. "Five dollars!" he laughed wildly. "You think you can get off with $5? Why, I want a million. You've got it—there in the safe."

"You should know better than that," protested Pace. "You know we send everything to the safe deposit at 5."

"You've got it tonight," raved Brace, "I know— Come back!" he broke off as Carter tried to leave the room. The bookkeeper paused for a second, irresolute. Brace drew a revolver from his pocket. Carter motioned him to return it and stepped back to the desk. The incident seemed to fan Brace's fury. He stared wildly about the room.

"You ruined me!" he shouted. "You stole from me! They tell me you broke the G. and W. pool. Don't deny it. The papers are full of it." He drew out an extra of one of the afternoon papers and waved it in front of Pace.

"What of it?" demanded the broker.

"Brady gave me a hundred to play on the pool. One hundred dollars on a two dollar margin. Fifty shares—and you broke the pool."

"I found that the others had broken their agreement, and I had to get out to protect myself," explained Pace. "I had no knowledge of your operations. It was purely self defense."

"You lie," snarled Brace. "You did it to throw me. You knew that with such a start I could have won back to the Exchange. You were afraid of me and you ruined me."

For the first time Pace showed impatience. He must get certain letters out in time to catch the night mail. "Come in in the morning and argue the matter," he said. "I cannot spare the time to talk tonight."

Brace leveled his revolver. "Unless you give me back the money you stole from me," he said impressively, "I shall shoot you down like a dog, you and these others too. Then I shall take the money that is really mine and flee. I have it all arranged. I will count ten."

Pace's face was beaded with perspiration. No help was at hand, and this man, driven mad by the excitement of the panic, had them at his mercy. "I will give in," he said weakly. "Come over to the safe."

"Too late," said Brace, his brain taking a new impression. "I am going to kill you anyway. One, two, three"— He sank to the floor with a groan. A huge commercial report had knocked him senseless, and Bobby stood triumphantly over the prostrate figure.

"I thought it was just a row," he said, "until the 'Ghost' begun t' count. Then I remembered that was the way they did with Antelope Andy." He fished the book from his hip pocket. "'Quick as a flash,'" he read, "'Antelope Andy, with herculean strength, seized the chest and brought it down on the head of his antagonist, felling him like a log.' I guess them half dime books ain't no good."

He turned to Carter, who explained to the mystified Pace.

"I think, Robert," declared the broker, "that there is good in all things. We shall have to raise your salary to enable you to increase your library and so be provided against all emergencies."

"I don't want no raise," protested Bobby. "Give it to Carter or Miss Mabel. They want it to get married on."

"I guess that can be arranged, too," laughed Pace. "And as soon as we can get an ambulance here to take care of poor Brace we'll go uptown for a celebration dinner."

"At a real restaurant?" demanded Bobby.

"At the best," laughed Pace.

"Gee!" sighed Bobby. "I'm glad I saved yer. I'm hungry. I only had a cream puff and a pretzel for lunch."

On the way up in the street car—the cabs had all gone uptown at that hour—Bobby sat between Carter and Mabel.

"Them books is good," he suggested, his mind harking back to the discussion of the afternoon.

"I bet you'll let your boys read them," Bobby added.

St. Columba's Stake.

On one occasion, so the legend goes, St. Columba blessed a knife so that it never could hurt any creature afterward. His blessing produced exactly the opposite effect on the stake. A very poor peasant brought it at the saint's bidding. St. Columba sharpened it with his own hand and then blessed it. "Keep it," he said. "It will hurt neither man nor beast, only wild animals and fish. So long as you keep it you will never lack flesh food." The peasant fastened it in the ground and the very next day found a very fine stag impaled. Not a day passed without some wild creature being thus captured. The wife was frightened. "Some one will get hurt," she said. "Then we shall be either killed or sold as slaves." The peasant removed it and laid it by in his house. The next day his dog was killed by it. He put it in the river and found a marvelously big salmon on it. The next place was on the roof, where it proved fatal to a crow. Persuaded by his wife—"per sociam, ut Adam," says the biographer—he cut it up and burned it and was as poor as ever all the rest of his life.—London Spectator.

Whiskers as Toothpicks.

Nature has armed the walrus with a growth of whiskers which extend three or four inches from its snout, with the apparent motive of enabling it to detect the presence of an iceberg before actual contact has resulted. These whiskers are quite stiff, and this quality improves with age. When a walrus is killed the natives proceed to pull out, with the aid of rude pinchers, each separate whisker. After a thorough drying they are arranged in neat packages and exported to China for use as toothpicks.

THE PINY WOODS.

'Tis there hepatica buds sleep
Beneath dead leaves and grasses deep,
Awaiting spring's bright sun and shower
To woo them worth to deck the bower.

E'en now winds whisper in my ear
That fair wild flowers will soon appear,
Hepaticas, of turquoise blue,
With leaves of hazy, pinkish hue.

Gently those flowers will pierce the moss,
And soon their tiny heads will toss
O'er cones and mosses at their feet,
Awaiting lily buds to greet.

What joy! to roam those woods in June
And listen to the linnet's tune,
And see the blooming rose-pink vine
That sweetly doth embrace the pine.

Oft in those woods have I pursued
My path and sought sweet solitude,
And whiled away the fleeting hours
By watching springing, fragile flowers.

USE OF THE LEECH.

Said to Be Growing in Toronto—What Druggists Say.

The use of leeches is said to be growing in Toronto. Leeches are mostly bought by people who have had a blaw or fall, causing a blue spot to appear where the blood has congested. They apply leeches to take out the blood from these spots.

The best leeches are known as the Mediterranean leech and come from San Guiguela, Spain. They are about three inches long, with a soft smooth body tapering to each extremity, and are marked with from ninety to one hundred fine annulations; their backs are olive green with six rusty red longitudinal stripes. The ends are terminated by suckers.

A peculiar medical law provides that a druggist must not apply a leech. He may sell them to persons, but only a doctor is allowed to apply it. One well-known druggist says that he once applied a leech to an abrasion on a man's forehead, because a doctor could not be got as the hour was late. "After the leech had gorged itself and rolled off the mark left by the leech bled so profusely that it took me over four hours to stop it; and then the man's face was ten times worse with the acids I had to use."

Some druggists state that the application of leeches is not to be recommended; the cure is almost as bad as the disease. The leech has three small, sharp, semi-circular teeth that radiate from a centre. They cut deep, and always leave a scar of the same shape as themselves. On the common leech the mouth where the cutting teeth are found is at the anterior sucking disc. Just back of this, and on the upper side, are ten small black spots that serve as eyes. The usual quantity of blood drawn by an average leech averages from one drachm to half an ounce. It is digested very slowly, and after being gorged in this manner, the leech lies for several days before it regains its normal size and appearance.

Lord Mount-Stephen's Career.

Seventy-seven years ago, on June 5, there was born to a humble Banffshire villager a son who was destined to do great things. The villager's name was Stephen, and his boy was christened George, and when George Stephen was old enough he became a herd boy. His great crony in those days was his cousin Donald Smith, and for a good many years, as years are counted by youth they were inseparable. The herd boy in course of time went to Aberdeen, where he became a draper's apprentice, and a few years later tried his fortune in London, where he found an opening at Pawson & Leaf's, in St. Paul's Churchyard. His ambition still unsatisfied, he went out to Canada in 1850, and entered a woollen business in Montreal, in which he presently became a partner. A little later on he met the friend of his boyhood days, Donald Smith, and they, along with others, built the Canadian Pacific Railway. George Stephen, who celebrated his birthday lately, is now known as Lord Mount-Stephen, and his friend, Donald Smith, as Lord Strathcona. Both are millionaires, and between them have given away over a million pounds on behalf of various philanthropic objects, not the least of which is King Edward's Hospital Fund, which benefits to the tune of £11,000 a year by Lord Mount-Stephen's generosity.

A Bluenose on New Ontario.

Matthew Lodge, Jr., who was with the Temiskaming survey party last year, on returning home to Moncton, N. B., said of the district west of Lake Abittibi: "The country is extensively timbered, except here and there in burnt stretches and muskeg, but it is more of the pulpwood class than other lumber. The pulpwood forests are practically inexhaustible, and pulpwood, you know, means money. The forest which was despised 50 years ago by lumbermen, is now worth more than the forest of 50 years ago. It is practically a country of extensive waterfalls, and these waterfalls will become invaluable in the development of the pulp-making industries. On the Black River within a stretch of fourteen miles there are no less than ten falls of industrial value and utility. The Black River is not a very wide river, but it is a very deep river, with a considerable flow of water."

Saving Sense of Humor.

In his recent lecture in Toronto on Victor Hugo, Prof. E. Howard Griggs said: Hugo was singularly without a sense of humor, the deeper, graver humor of character which Shakespeare possessed. It is impossible, said Mr. Grigg, to live a moral life without a sense of humor. One cannot appreciate moral incongruity without it, nor consequently congruity. Everything is taken on the same plane. The personal whim is mistaken for a matter of conscience.

"Blessed is the man who can laugh at himself. Cursed is the man who laughs at himself all the time. He who does not take himself seriously at all, and he who takes himself abjectly seriously, are in the same class." Such people, continued Mr. Griggs, waste all their ammunition, and nobody pays any attention to their blank shots.

SIR JOHN MACDONALD.

Although on June 6, 1906, only fifteen years had elapsed since the death of Sir John Macdonald, it seems much longer since the political battle raged about him as the central figure. So seldom is his name mentioned to-day that it might be hastily supposed that he is forgotten. But this is not the case. He is in the period of transition; he has almost ceased to be the subject of partisan controversy, and is taking his place as a figure in history. His name reminds us that young as this country is it has a history, says The Toronto Star.

When Mr. John A. Macdonald, a young man not yet quite thirty, first presented himself as a candidate for Parliament, the stage coach and the boat were the only means of communication between Toronto and Montreal, and there is an antiquated flavor about his election address. "No exertion will be spared by me in forwarding the settlement of our rear townships, by the formation of public roads, in assisting and concentrating the trade of this port." But, although this was in some respects the day of small things, the issue in 1844 was not less important than any question that has since demanded the judgment of the electors. The rebellion of 1837-8 was then fresh in the minds of the people, and its embers were still glowing and threatening to burst into flame. Responsible government was a novel, and to many persons a terrifying, idea; its champions were denounced as rebels, and Governor Metcalfe swept the province with the loyalty cry. As a good Tory, Macdonald ranged himself under that banner, and his first experience as a Minister was in one of the Ministries formed in the vain effort to maintain the old order. But he saw the new order coming, and when he entered a Ministry again it was as one who recognized and accepted the facts, and was ready to give the people what they wanted.

From 1854 onward he was the real if not always the titular leader of the reconstructed Conservative party. The next ten years were full of small politics, of intrigue and furious faction, any many things that were discreditable. Yet they brought forth some strong men, and none stronger or more alert to seize an advantage than John A. Macdonald. When in 1864 Confederation emerged out of chaos, he appeared in the front, as he had appeared in 1854, snatching victory out of defeat. He had opposed Confederation, yet he carried the project through its final stages, and led the first Government of United Canada.

His character was a curious combination. He shared fully in the faults of the day of small politics. Yet he had the faculty of growing and broadening with the growth of the country, and he made a better appearance in great than in small things. He fell in 1873, apparently never to rise again. But once more, as in 1854 and in 1864, he was quick to see what the people wanted, and his insight once more carried him to victory. The years from 1879 to his death are probably those by which his admirers would prefer to see him judged; though he himself often said that his greatest triumphs were won before Confederation. He was the most adroit of politicians; yet when all the events in which he moved are seen in their true historical perspective, it will be recognized that he was something more than a mere politician.

DREADED LOUP-GAROU.

Bob's natural young voice broke the strained silence. "That fellow is a blamed good howler," he observed, and the frightened guides drew a long breath, and Vezina showed his access of courage by getting up to throw a handful of birchbark on the fire. Bob chuckled a bit, unconscious of the bad moment he had averted. "Vezina, did you think that howling was a loup-garou?" he asked.

And with that something happened which, fitting as it did to the strained tension of the superstitious men, was extraordinary and uncomfortable.

The blaze of the birchbark just thrown on went out quickly, and a log fell away at the moment, scattering the others, leaving us suddenly in partial darkness. Coming after the intense light, it seemed more profound, and it was as if the firelight had been turned off and moonlight turned on at a touch, for the whole breeze swept forest stirred with mystical white fingers. An opening of an old windfall ran from us to the river, and there came from this glade a loud, sharp crash of a broken limb. Every eye turned to the spot. In the path of the moon, black against the white-lighted river, high on pedestal of storm-felled tree trunks, stood a big wolf. Still as death the wild thing regarded us, and still as death we stared back, and then with a spring I was in my tent, and with another I was back rifle in hand.

I cannot remember loading or cocking, but I remember seeing the dark mass at the end of the barrel and I remember the shot dying in the hills. If I had hit, if we had dragged a dead animal into camp, all would have been simple. But I missed. Without sound, or so the men said, the creature melted into the silver forest, and left me a set of frightened children to handle. Josef, indeed, was reasonable, but the others were in a pitiable state.

"It was—it was," Vezina stammered through clicking teeth, "it was the—loup-garou." And he gazed at me with big childish eyes as if begging me to contradict.

Canada Got $17,408,000 in 1905.

The Insurance Press of New York has issued its annual statement of the amounts paid by life insurance companies in the United States and Canada. Life insurance organizations distributed in the United States and Canada, in 1905, $307,019,972. The total payments in Canada were $17,408,173, and this sum was exceeded only in the great commonwealths of New York, where $62,473,353 were paid; Pennsylvania, where $31,341,090 were paid; and Massachusetts, where $20,773,947 were paid.

WISDOM OF "JIM" HILL

GIVE LAND ONLY TO THE ACTUAL SETTLER UPON IT.

Railway Magnate Gives Some Good Advice to Canada—Lack of Ostentation Amazes Many People at the Capital, and Everybody Found the Great "Jim" Hill Kindly and Democratic—Wellington Old Boys Were Proud.

James J. Hill visited the Canadian capital, Ottawa, a few days ago. He spent twelve hours in the city, and during that time familiarized himself with people and conditions to an extent that would have taken a long time on the part of an ordinary individual. At the Canadian Club luncheon scores of citizens pressed for an introduction, and the great railway builder met them all in a kindly, democratic spirit. To "old boys" from Guelph and Wellington County he was especially cordial. As he was piloted from group to group in the Russell House rotunda one would almost have thought he was a Parliamentary candidate looking for votes.

The Great Jim Hill.

His lack of ostentation and his friendliness amazed many people, who asked when they saw a powerful figure dressed in grey tweed leaning up against a pillar and exchanging conversation with admirers, "Is that the great Jim Hill?" It was the same in the House of Commons, where Mr. Hill spent most of the afternoon. Parliamentarians were eager to make his acquaintance, and all were received in the most fraternal manner. Mr. Hill is somewhat older than most people expected, with a full face and grizzled grey beard. But his countenance expresse indomitable resolution, and his glance, which roves everywhere, is keen and penetrating. He pleased everyone by his address to the Canadian Club. His delivery is poor, but his sentences are crisp and epigrammatic and carry conviction.

The Two Northwests.

Mr. Hill was received with round after round of cheers. He said it would be fifty years next July since he went to the United States northwest, where, like other ambitious young Canadians, he had gone to try and carve out a career for himself. Then Canada had no Northwest, but now it had almost all the available space for population that was left.

"You have in the Northwest," said Mr. Hill, "all that is left of the unoccupied land where a man can make a comfortable home for himself and family. There is no difficulty in your settling your Northwest. Do not be in too great a hurry to settle it. Select the population. Wherever the sun shines population without land is a mob, and land without population is a wilderness. You want both. The quality of the soil is of less consequence than the quality of the man who lives on the soil. As far as you have gone in Canada, your educational institutions, the general standard of business integrity, are such that you have no apologies to make. Keep that clean. Hold your standard up. Preserve your unoccupied land for those who will make intelligent use of it." (Applause.)

Fifteen Millions a Nice Start.

Mr. Hill said the mineral resources of British Columbia would support a population of a million. The Canadian Northwest would support a population of twelve or fifteen millions, but he advised them not to be too extravagant, as a population of fifteen millions would give them a nice start. On the 23rd of next month it will be twenty-seven years since the old St. Paul & Pacific carried $1,280,000 worth of grain. This year the line carried $105,000,000 worth and there were a great many areas from which they did not carry grain.

No Proxy Settler.

"You have a great heritage in the Northwest," he declared. "Do not give it away. Keep it for the man who is going to live on it. Do not let a man live on it by proxy and then secure a title and walk away. Let him wait until he has earned the right to it by living on the land and fulfilling his obligations. That will do you the most good."

In railway construction he said the great problem was to overcome the law of gravitation. The nearer the level one got with a railway the easier the law of gravitation was overcome. The grade of a railway fixed its ability to earn money, and it was of just as much importance to the public to have a railway with a low grade as it was to have the St. Lawrence River dredged or to have a harbor deepened enough to float a large ship.

Big Haul, Low Profits.

Reverting to British Columbia, Mr. Hill said the mountains there were filled with low-grade ore. When his company went into Granby a year and a half ago they handled five hundred tons of ore a day. Now they are handling twenty hundred, and in five years they expected to handle ten thousand tons. That could only be done by bringing low-grade ores to a point where it could be handled at low prices. The ore must be transported at such a rate as to enable the producer and the railway to make a fair profit.

"What we expect to do in the Canadian Northwest," continued Mr. Hill, "is to furnish railway accommodation to that part of the country between Winnipeg and the Rocky Mountains, because, bear in mind, the bulk of our road is already built or building from Vancouver to Fernie, and we are constructing it in such a manner that I hope we shall be able to retain the title to it, because we have no bonds and the Sheriff cannot get it. From the mountains to Winnipeg is not so far a cry, and Winnipeg is the gateway of the Canadian Northwest."

The Invasion of Canada.

Continuing, Mr. Hill said they would do for the Canadian Northwest what had been done for the country to the south. They would not take away any existing market, but would bring the country adjacent to the railway into touch with Winnipeg. "The man who owns the product," observed Mr. Hill, "says where it has to go. We do not. (Applause and laughter.) If we invade Canada we cannot come away with more than our lunch. The rest belongs to the owner, and he directs where the product shall go. When we reach Winnipeg we connect with the Grand Trunk Pacific or the C. P. R. and we will be happy with either charmer. (Applause and laughter.) We expect to get a line from the Pacific to Winnipeg before the Grand Trunk Pacific does. The Canadian Pacific has from twenty-one hundred to twenty-two hundred miles of railroad in the United States, and I have not protested. Our building this line through the Canadian Northwest will even things up a little better. We want you to give us room according to our heft. We don't want to crowd anybody, but if we go up there with a little ewe lamb to make a sheep of it we want pasture for it, and it will not cost you anything." (Laughter and applause.)

A Fascinating Project.

Mr. Hill referred to the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal, the cost of which he had been told would be only from fifty to fifty-five millions, whereas the Panama Canal would cost the United States from two hundred to two hundred and fifty million dollars. The Georgian Bay Canal, it was said, would allow ships drawing twenty-one feet of water to go from Lake Huron to Montreal. If that was true, Montreal would be fifteen miles nearer to Chicago and Duluth than Buffalo is to-day. (Cheers.) Ships drawing twenty feet can readily be constructed to carry twelve thousand tons, which represents four hundred thousand bushels. This at three cents a bushel would mean twelve thousand dollars' freight on a cargo each trip. That kind of shipping would be very remunerative. Trade followed the line of least resistance, and if they could bring the waterways into conditions under which a man could so use them, not only wheat from the Canadian Northwest, but grain of the United States from all points north of Kansas City would come this way during the season of open navigation.

No More Spoon-Feeding.

Mr. Hill advised Canadians to stop spoon-feeding the Northwest, as it was now in a position to grow up strong and healthy without maternal assistance. If you want to give bonuses to railroads, he said, give it in money. Keep your lands for those who are seeking homes and are going to plant their roots in the soil. The man who had his roots in the soil was the mainstay of the country, and too much could not be done for him. Mr. Hill spoke in the warmest terms of the Ontario Agricultural College, which had furnished the Minnesota Agricultural School with their best men.

"To the Last Tatter."

In conclusion he said: "Keep your old flag flying to the last tatter. Your record is a good one, and it will always be bettered by keeping in view the fact that the men who built and are building Canada are those who follow the plough. They are the men to make a nation strong and vigorous."

CUSTOMER WORTH HAVING.

United States Finds in Canada Large Demands For Her Products.

The United States sold Canada in 1904 exports to the value of $166,000,000. This amount constituted more than 62 per cent. of the whole Canadian imports, but was only 11 per cent. of the foreign exports of the United States, says Charles M. Pepper, special agent of the United States Department of Commerce and Labor, in a report on his study of Dominion trade conditions.

Besides selling goods to Canada, Mr. Pepper says that 25,000 settlers went from the United States to its northern neighbor from January to October, 1905, and that the value of their effects was $10,000,000. This number of emigrants from the United States is less than for the two preceding years.

The new wheat fields of the Dominion's great Northwest are the attraction to those seeking new homes in Canada, and it is to that section the United States should look for the development of existing and the creation of new markets of trade. The food, clothing, and farm implements to which these settlers have been accustomed in the United States constitute the products which may be sold them the easiest in Canada.

The wheat yield in Canada last season was upwards of 90,000,000 bushels, or approximately equal to that of the State of Kansas. A production of 150,000,000 bushels by 1910 is foreshadowed, provided crop conditions continue favorable and harvest hands can be obtained.

Railroad construction in the Northwest is given as another source of new population and consequently of widened markets. After describing the new transcontinental project known as the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the plans for railways to the Hudson Bay, the statement is made that probably before an outlet is afforded for wheat by either of these routes traffic will be diverted south and east over railroads in the United States, one agency being the United States settlers.

Mr. Pepper fixes the total consumption of iron and steel and their products for the current year at 1,000,000 tons. He says that for the last three years the importations have been $42,000,000 annually and that the United States has supplied 81 per cent. of these. It is stated that the steel rail mills at Sydney, Nova Scotia, and at Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, are now turning out several hundred tons daily. Though there are several successful mills for making rods and wire nails, there still si much dependence in wire products on the United States.

In textiles the report says that the Dominion is making advances, yet the time is distant when the importation of foreign goods will cease. Though many factories have been established in Canada for manufacturing boots and shoes and though the machinery is from the United States, the report states that this is still one of the best markets for American manufacturers to cultivate.

Not a factory of any kind is built in the Dominion but that the installation of the plant is made largely from the United States.

Still Alert.

It was in the jungle restaurant.

The leopard had been drinking and the waiter was trying to take advantage of that circumstance.

"None of that, Mr. Waiter!" yelled the monk, vigorously. "The leopard may not be able to change his spots, but let me tell you that he is fully competent to spot his change."

CONTRACT WITH A RAINMAKER.

Text of Agreement Made by Yukon Council With Hatfield.

The contract that has been made in the Yukon with Charles M. Hatfield, the California rainmaker, to increase the rainfall in the gold fields this summer, is in the following terms:

"And, whereas, Mr. Hatfield has undertaken and agreed to increase the rainfall in such part or parts of the Yukon Territory as may be indicated to him by the board hereinafter provided for, to an amount sufficient to ensure, as far as rainfall will, a successful and prosperous summer for the placer mining industry of the Dawson district, to the satisfaction of the said board, on the following terms, that is to say: That he be furnished free of charge transportation for himself and one assistant, and for said appliances from Los Angeles, Cal., to the part or parts of the Yukon Territory so selected, and from here back to Los Angeles, and living expenses for himself and said assistant during their stay in the Yukon Territory for the purpose of so increasing the rainfall. That if successful in producing such increase of rainfall in the Yukon Territory in such part or parts thereof as aforesaid, and renewing such increase from time to time for a period not exceeding four months, as may be named by the said board, that he be paid in lawful money of the Dominion of Canada the sum of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars less the cost of such transportation and living expenses.

"And whereas it is expected that the Commissioner-in-Council of the Yukon Territory will vote the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars to be paid to the said party of the first part, if successful, to the satisfaction of the said board or a majority thereof, in increasing the said rainfall;

"And, whereas the said sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars is to be collected by subscription, for the purpose of paying or of providing for the payment of the balance of the said sum of ten thousand dollars."

In consideration of one dollar the parties to the contract agreed to abide by the provisions. The board referred to might be selected as follows: Three by the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory; three by the party of the first part; and one umpire to be selected by the six selected as aforesaid, and by the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory if said six within five days after appointment of the last of said six fail to select one as an umpire. The board's decision was to be considered as final, and if, in its opinion, Hatfield did not succeed in increasing the rainfall he promised, he was to get no pay.

The agreement was signed by Hatfield on the one side and by the following on the other side:

Norwood Water Co., per H. H. Norwood, manager, $1,000.

O. R. Brenner, $500.

J. F. Burke, $500.

Canadian Klondike Mining Co., limited, per Geo. Hargreave, G. M., $500.

MILITARY TRAINING.

Trustee Simpson of Toronto Tells Why Socialists Object To It.

Mr. James Simpson, a prominent Socialist and a member of the Toronto Board of Education, freely expressed his opinion on Sir Frederick Borden's recent speech, in which he advocated teaching school children how to handle the rifle.

"The Socialist has no objection to the development of marksmanship or physical development," said Mr. Simpson. "What the Socialist objects to is the development of the military spirit amongst the Public school pupils which of necessity involves national animosities and prejudices. If Sir Frederick Borden seeks to make the Public schools a kindergarten for the regiments of Canada, Socialists will oppose it to the bitter end. The development of the military spirit in the Public schools is of necessity involved in a method of military training advocated and endorsed by military men.

"The general assumption is that peace is best preserved when nations are armed to the teeth, but the careful student of economic conditions realizes more and more that the military forces of the nations are being utilized to perpetuate the sovereignty of a ruling plutocracy. In the great conflicts between the capitalist class and the working class, as instanced in Toronto, Winnipeg and the State of Colorado, the military powers are ostensibly used to preserve law and order, but are actually utilized to maintain conditions against which the working class are fighting.

"The burdens of militarism are to-day weighing down the wage-earners in all the so-called civilized nations of the world, and there is an ever-growing conviction that these burdens must be removed. The military forces of Germany would to-day be utilized to limit the franchise rights of the working class of that country were it not for the strength and virility of the Socialist party, and events of recent years in Hungary and Russia demonstrate beyond doubt that the Socialists are the only political organization to which the oppressed classes can look for their emancipation.

"These being the facts of history, no sophistry or appeals of the jingo can influence the Socialist to change his attitude towards the growing spirit of militarism in Canada, and there never was a time in the history of our country when the voice of the working class was so much needed to attract the attention of the people to the evils resultant upon the adoption of the policy so strongly promoted by the Minister of Militia."

Had to Be Waked Up For Sentence.

Chief Justice Murray of British New Guinea had an uncanny experience. He was about to sentence a native Papuan to death for murder when it was found that the culprit had lost all interest in the proceedings and had fallen fast asleep. In that sultry land of cannibals and head hunters the heinousness of murder is not yet adequately appreciated by the average native.

Heavy Sentence for Criminal Assault.

YOUNG ENGLISHMAN GOT INTO SERIOUS TROUBLE AT BANCROFT ON THE TWELFTH.

A young Englishman named Edward Riley was yesterday brought to the County jail from Bancroft. He was sentenced by Magistrate Jarman to two years and three months in the penitentiary for an indecent assault upon a young woman named Gusta McGregor.

The offence was committed at Bancroft village on Thursday last, during the Orange demonstration which was being held there.

Riley at the time made an effort to get away, but was captured and on Monday had his trial at Bancroft with the result that he was convicted and the sentence as above noted was imposed.

He had been but a few weeks out from the Old Country.

Stylish Wedding In Frankford Village.

MILNE — SIMMONS NUPTIALS.

The marriage of Miss Llewella Simmons, only daughter of Mrs. M. J. Simmons, of Frankford, and Mr. Wm. A. Rolf Milne, of Markham, took place at Trinity Church, Frankford, on the evening of July 11th, the rector Rev. B. F. Byers, officiating. The church was beautifully decorated with greenwood arches and floral decorations, up the aisle of which, to the strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March, played by Mrs. H. V. Malone, marched the bride on the arm of her brother, Mr. W. N. Simmons, of Bancroft, who gave her away.

The bride wore a handsome gown of white silk crepe de chene, over white taffeta, with veil and orange blossoms, and carried a magnificent shower bouquet of white roses and lily of the valley. The bridesmaid, Miss Kingston, of West Huntingdon, was attired most becomingly in a handsome white organdie gown, lace trimmed, and carried a bouquet of pink roses. Mr. Geo. E. Simmons, of Marmora, brother of the bride, assisted the groom, Messrs. M. MacLaren and W. Ketcheson being ushers

After the ceremony the guests repaired to the home of the bride's mother, where a sumptuous supper was served at quartette tables decorated with carnations and daisies, and waited on by the girls of the choir, all uniformed in white gowns and red carnations.

Rev. Mr. Byers, in his happy humorous style, proposed the toasts, which were honored with hearty good will.

The groom's gift to the bride was a pearl pendant brooch and to the bridesmaid a pearl crescent. The numerous and costly gifts to the bride testified to her great popularity Mr. and Mrs. Milne took passage by boat for Montreal, to enjoy the quiet beauties of the St. Lawrence. They will thence go to Rutland, Ill., returning by way of Chicago, Detroit and Toronto, thence to Markham, the home of the groom.

The Rolling Mills

NEW MACHINERY BEING INSTALLED — A BUSY PLACE JUST NOW.

A gratifying air of briskness and activity prevails just now at the local rolling mills, and an Intelligencer man, who visited the premises this morning, and was shown around by Mr. Wardrope, was forced to confess that never, since the place was operated by the Abbott-Mitchell Company, have things looked so business-like

There is at present, Mr. Wardrope says, more scrap, cut up and ready for melting, inside the mill than was ever on the grounds before. Scrap has been arriving at the rate of nearly three cars a day since the present company took over the property.

An extension to the rolling mills property is now being built, which will be utilized to hold two more furnaces, thus giving the mills a larger capacity. New machinery is being procured for the rolling plant, also new shears, etc. Rolling will commence when the new machinery arrives and is placed in position.

There are at present forty-four hands on the payroll of the works, eleven of them being in the skilled labor class. Of these five are local men and six imported.

A very important change has taken place in what was the nail factory. The nail making machinery has been removed, and the fine building will be used in future for the manufacture of horseshoes, the material for the making of which will come from the company's own rolls. Mr. P. J. Smith, formerly of the Montreal Rolling Mills Company, is superintending the fitting out of the Horseshoe factory, and will be in charge of it when operations begin.

One could not help being impressed with the excellent type of men employed in all departments of the works. The employees looked as though they were there strictly for business. The writer was introduced to the new General Manager, Mr. D. Eppelheimer, formerly of the Montreal Rolling Mills, and to the new purchasing agent, Mr. J. A. Higgs, also of the Montreal Rolling Mills. These gentlemen, with Messrs. Wardrope and Clowes, constitute the present executive staff. Talking of the outlook for the works, they wear an air of quiet confidence which augurs well for the future.

Kingston People Were Badly Fooled

Whig: During the past week dodgers were circulated advertising an excursion to Ogdensburg for Tuesday, July 17th. The name of the boat to make the trip was not mentioned. Concluded the printed bill: "Steamers leave R. & O. wharf at 7.30 and 8 a.m."

Swift's wharf was crowded at an early morning hour with hundreds of excursionists, but the only steamer in sight was the Aletha, which left at eight o'clock, crowded to standing room capacity. An equally large number was left on the wharf and when they discovered only one boat, and not two, as advertised, was to make the trip, a great outcry was made.

A demand was made for return of the people's money, but no one at the wharf would take the blame and everyone was referred to the captain of the steamer, who it was said had charge of the excursion.

Many had been under the impression that the new steamer Iroquois was to have been the second boat, but as she was in no way advertised no blame can be attached in that direction, but whoever conducted the Ogdensburg trip should stand responsible, inasmuch as it was distinctly advertised that "steamers" would leave at 7.30 and 8 a.m.

The Aletha was amply crowded and it was only within law regulations that no more should have been carried on board.

It is expected those who were so sadly fooled will receive full recompense. Those who were left said they would be on the wharf to make it "hot" for whoever was responsible.

New Turnkey Was Sworn in Yesterday.

FROM $46.000,000 TO $90,000,000.

WHY THE ANNUAL EXPENDITURE OF CANADA HAS BEEN GROWING AT SUCH AN ENORMOUS RATE.

(Ottawa Journal, Ind.)

When any one has asked why the Dominion Government annual expenditure has increased to $90,000,000 in ten years from $46,000,000, he is told by Liberal voices in Parliament and the press that it is because Canada is growing.

When a G. T. Merwin's prices for supplies to a government department are disclosed together with the prices Merwin paid for the goods to persons from whom the government could more easily have bought than from an agent like Merwin, we find the government paying double prices to a party middleman.

When an Arctic committee examines details in connection with prices for goods for an exploring expedition, it is found that the government has been to a large degree paying double prices to firms recommended for party reasons.

When a land purchase for the Intercolonial Railway is looked into, it is found that the government has paid double price in order to give nearly half the money to Liberal intermediary Lodges.

When horses, etc., are being bought for another department, it is found that the government is paying an exorbitant profit to our own Ald, Cunningham, who facilitates operations by offering four coats to government officers.

When contracts are being made for lighting and power for a Cornwall canal, the government is found agreeing to pay a great deal more proportionately to a contractor who can be liberal with campaign subscriptions than it costs the government itself to light and operate the Soulanges canal next door.

When the expensive construction of a wharf in an outlying Quebec constituency is looked into, it is found that there is no water there.

When arrangements for promoting immigration are poked about, a discovery is made that the government has been paying to parties unknown and who can't be found out, bonuses up in the millions for a poor class of immigrants most of whom would have come here anyway.

When Parliament, under a Liberal government with a great majority is looked at, its members are found increasing their own salaries in ten years by 150 per cent.

And so on, and so on. From all of which sort of smoke, one is at liberty to conjecture a heap of fire. In politics as in other things, only a small portion ever gets out.

Canada is growing, sure enough, but as a sufficient explanation of an increase of $44,000,000 per year in annual expenditure now in comparison with 1896—why, it is to laugh.

Six Months In Jail For Stealing Hay.

Wm. Morrison, who resides in the township of Faraday, was on Monday, before Magistrate Jarman, at Bancroft, sentenced to six months in jail for stealing a quantity of hay. Morrison was brought to the County jail here yesterday to serve out his sentence.

Picton Anglicans Deeply Offended

Kingston, July 17.— A week ago last Sunday Rev. W. L. Armitage, vicar of St. Mary Magdalene Church at Picton, announced to his congregation that he was going away for holidays, and that his marriage would take place during that time. He went on to say that while he was amenable to the people indirectly (Canon Loucks being still rector) his wife-to-be was amenable to him alone, and must not be at the beck and call of the parish. This very unusual proceeding on the part of the intending groom was made further remarkable, from the Anglican standpoint, by Mr. Armitage advising the congregation to apply to Rev. Mr. Rae, pastor of the Stone Methodist Church, for pastoral ministration, in case of sickness or urgency. Ordinary visiting might be done by Rev. Mr. Seaborne, of Milford, or Rev. C. R. Depencier, of Wellington, both Anglican priests. The congregation is voicing its indignation audibly. Mr. Armitage has caused more comment by being married last week by a Methodist minister at Cobourg.

The Band Concert.

The band concert given on Victoria park last evening had the effect of attracting many citizens. It was an ideal place to spend the evening, as from off the bay there was a cool, refreshing breeze. The music furnished appeared to give general satisfaction, though in some selections the volume seemed rather light for an open air concert. The wind seemed to blow the music up on the east hill. On the lower bridge the band could hardly be heard at all.

WIFE KILLER SUICIDES

With Shoe Laces He Strangles Himself in Cell.

Carefully Laid Plans to Take His Own Life, and Succeeded in Spite of Authorities' Extra Precautions — Son Bears Father Who Killed Mother No Malice and Will Give Him Respectable Funeral.

Windsor, July 18.—Eluding the vigilance of a special watch placed on him, Christopher Spindleman cheated the gallows by hanging himself at Sandwich Jail early yesterday morning. His dead body was found a few minutes before 6 o'clock by Turnkey Iler.

The murderer had wound a pair of shoe laces around his neck, tied one end to a chain, which is attached to his cot, and slowly strangled himself. With Spartan fortitude, he waited for death at his own hands. He had carefully laid his plans for taking his life in order to avoid the stigma of the gallows. There is no doubt he intended self-destruction after he was first arrested, having been thwarted by his son in his attempt to shoot himself.

Did What He Couldn't Do.

Chief Wills ordered a special watch on the prisoner. The police purposely removed his shoes and took them away from him. They searched carefully for any instrument to commit suicide, but made his detention so secure that he had no means of "snuffing out."

Sergt. Jackson said: "Spindleman would have done the deed in Windsor lockup if we had given him the chance. We left him with only his underclothing, and he would have had a hard time in ending his life by hanging or strangulation."

Jailer Sparks detailed two men to keep an eye on the cell and have an electric light burning in the corridor all night.

Spindleman made a noose to slip over his neck, and attached the other end of the string to the cot. Drawing the noose taut, he turned over on his face, and death must have resulted in a few minutes from strangulation.

A strict investigation will undoubtedly be ordered. The present jailer and chief turnkey have been in office for many years.

The coroner's jury, which was composed principally of prisoners of the jail, yesterday afternoon returned a verdict in accordance with the facts, and exonerating the jail officials from any blame.

Story of Night Watch.

"Before Spindleman retired he was morose, and didn't want to talk. I asked him if he would like a good cigar, and he replied that he wished for nothing. He threw himself on the bed and tossed about the greater part of the night. He refused to talk to me, and I could see that he was terribly nervous by the manner in which he locked and unlocked his fingers. Between 3 and 4 o'clock, he turned over on his face, and I asked him if he was trying to choke himself. He replied that he was not, and I did not say anything more. Shortly after he became quiet, and I thought that he had gone to sleep. I was relieved about daylight by Stephen May, and went to sleep in my own cell. I was never away from Spindleman's door during the night, and did not see him make a suspicious move."

Thought Spindleman Asleep.

Stephen May told of his watch until Turnkey Iler came to relieve him. He thought Spindleman was asleep, and made no attempt to awaken him. The light was shining into a portion of the cell, and although he could not see Spindleman's face, he did not think anything was wrong.

Robert Spindleman bears no malice towards his father, now that he is dead. "I intend giving him a respectable burial, the same as we did mother," he said.

ROUNDED BY NIAGARA POLICE.

Farm Hand Near Pelham Arrested on Charge of Murder.

Niagara Falls, Ont., July 18.—A man named Bailey was brought here early yesterday by Chief of Police Mains, Ontario Officer Pay of this city, and Detective Thompson of Middletown, Conn.

The man is wanted at Middletown for the alleged murder of a farmer named Goodall on July 6. It is claimed Bailey who worked for Goodall, murdered his victim by hitting him on the head with an axe as he sat in a chair, and decamped with about five hundred dollars of his victim's money, taking with him his victim's horse and rig, abandoning it in the woods a few miles from Middletown.

It was a day or two before the crime was known, as Goodall lived alone.

Detective Thompson traced Bailey to the Niagara frontier, and there lost track of him. He took Chief Mains into his confidence a day or two ago, and he located Bailey at Albert Disher's, a farmer of North Pelham, about 15 miles west of here.

When arrested he strongly denied his guilt. He had about seventy dollars in his possession when arrested. It is said he is a brother-in-law of Albert Disher. The man is about 40 years of age. He waives extradition.

APPLYING THE TORCH

Death and Destruction Spread Throughout Russia.

Peasants Wantonly Firing Estates of the Crown and Private Forests—300 Houses Burned Down at Natshatkine, and Several Persons Killed at as Many Different Places—Emperor Signs First Law Enacted.

St. Petersburg, July 18.—The Twentieth Century, formerly The Russ, yesterday claims that the report submitted by the commission of the general staff on the investigation of the disaffection in the army thus far show that six guards' regiments, twenty-six line, seven cavalry, six artillery and five sapper regiments are more or less affected by the revolutionary propaganda.

Death and Destruction.

The daily budget of revolutionary outrages and agrarian disorders was larger than usual yesterday. In many places the peasants are wantonly applying the torch to estates belonging to the crown and to private forests.

At Natshatkine, in Simbirsk Province, the Town Hall was set on fire Monday, and the entire village, consisting of three hundred houses, was consumed. Throughout Poland systematic pillaging of the Government spirit shops is in progress. The central police office at Warsaw was robbed Monday and a gendarme was killed.

At Lubin, Russian Poland, revolutionists Monday executed a workman who was suspected of being a spy, and at Nizhni Novgorod and Vasniky the cashiers of the spirit monopoly were robbed and killed. A bank at Sonnitsa, Province of Sonnitsa, was robbed Monday, and at Tiflis an Armenian locomotive engineer was shot in his cab by an assassin concealed in the neighboring woods.

Killed a Provocator.

Workmen at Rostoff, Province of Yaroslay, killed an alleged Government provocator. At Piliagorsk a Tartar woman, who was baptized in the Orthodox Church, was murdered, and at Yaroslay bombs were exploded at the residences of the chief of police and an officer of the gendarmerie.

The Monastery of the Nativity has been plundered of all its jewels and sacred relics and $16,000 in cash.

In the village of Kunikoff, two hundred houses have been burned in disturbances incident to the agrarian movement. The crown forest lands have been set on fire in sixteen different places.

The family of M. Krupenikoff have been driven off their estate near here by peasants, who announced that they intended to harvest the crop themselves, but would allow M. Krupenikoff to take his cattle.

A Strike of Police.

Considerable alarm has been caused by the inauguration of a strike of police here. In two districts of the capital yesterday the policemen refused to appear for duty and Monday night one squad whose captain was lecturing them on declining to break up a meeting threw down their arms and left the station. The strike is ostensibly based on economic reasons, including an accounting of the men's savings, which, it is claimed, are withheld without interest. The authorities, however, declare that the strike was inspired by agitators.

Anti-Jewish Outbreaks Fail.

Attempts were made Monday to start anti-Jewish outbreaks at Kherson, Nicolaieff and Yokaterinoslay, but they were promptly and effectually suppressed by the authorities. The strikes continue to spread on all sides.

The Government crop reports show a continued deterioration in the Volga Provinces, and that the partial or total failure of the crops has extended in the Tamboff, Saratoff, Penza and Nizhni Novgorod districts, and in some of the districts of the Don, where the rains came too late to save the crops.

First Law of Russ Parliament.

The Emperor Monday night approved the bill of the lower House of Parliament, which was adopted by the upper House, appropriating $7,500,000 for famine relief, thus supporting the contention of both Houses of Parliament against his own Ministers. This law is the first enactment of the Russain Parliament, and represents the net legal result of a session of over two months.

The lower House of Parliament yesterday began consideration of the agrarian committee's address to the country, in answer to the Government's agrarian proposals. Over 60 speakers asked to be heard.

Mr. Alladin, one of the leaders of the group of Toil, offered a substitute, pledging Parliament never to agree to any agrarian measure not containing a clause providing for the forced expropriation of land.

Twenty Estates Burned.

Bobruisk, Province of Voronesh, July 18.—The troubles in the whole of this district, covering 135 miles square are becoming more serious daily. The peasants have risen as one man, and Monday night over twenty estates were burned, and several landed proprietors killed. The town is filled with terror-stricken proprietors, who were about to escape Monday's carnage by fleeing from their estates. Ten miles from here 15 estates were burned, and many of the proprietors killed. The governor has arrived with Cossacks, but order has not been restored.

Alcohol Made From Peat.

Stockholm, July 18.—It was announced yesterday from the Government experiment station engaged in making alcohol from dry peat that complete success has been achieved. The expert, Victor Feostadius, took 230 pounds of the peat and produced four quarts of pure alcohol. The actual cost was only 42 cents. This, it is believed, will revolutionize the alcohol industry.

"Arctic" Repairing.

Quebec, July 18.—A staff of men is engaged repairing the steamer Arctic, damaged by a collision in port early yesterday morning.

WOULD READJUST RATES.

Secretary Behan of C. M. B. A., Makes Suggestion Before the Royal Commission—The Actuarial Reports.

Toronto, July 18.—The insurance commission closed in Toronto for the holidays yesterday morning, after the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association of Kingston had been examined briefly by Messrs. Tilley and Geary. After a couple of days in Winnipeg, with the Great West Co., Judge McTavish will return to Ottawa for the summer and Mr. Kent will go down the St. Lawrence. Commissioner Langmuir will return to Toronto.

Michael Hackett, grand president of the C.M.B.A., was yesterday's witness. F. R. Latchford, K.C., appeared for the association. This association is not now in any way affiliated with the American order. It was incorporated in 1903. Besides the insurance, there is a sick benefit fund. The association makes twelve monthly levies, which is equivalent to twenty assessments. Lapses are very frequent, bringing in large revenue. From 1894 to 1906, the total amount of lapsed insurance was $7,113,000. Besides $60,000 on deposit, there is a reserve of over two hundred thousand dollars. No money has been invested at all.

Actuarial Reports.

Mr. Tilley read the report of Actuary Landis, forwarded to the association in 1903, in which he claimed that the reserve should be over six million. To the commission, witness said that he thought the reserve was high enough for an assessment company. It might be altogether different in a regular insurance company.

Counsel then took up the matter of rates with the secretary, J. J. Behan. He believed that the association had reached the time to raise their rates so that proper reserve might be established. The present position of the society was safe enough, but he would change the system of grading in groups. This was not fair for the man who came in at 18, the assessment was too high, and for the man at 25, the assessment was too low. He would also change the age of entrance from the present age, 49 to 45.

Referring to Mr. Landis' report, Mr. Tilley asked the witness how the deficiency, which he had claimed could be made up, but Mr. Behan agreed with the former witness and said that in fraternal insurance there was no need for such immense reserve fund as long as the new members were coming in fast enough to pay death claims.

Readjustment of Rates.

He thought, however, that there would be a great advantage to fraternal societies if there was a readjustment of rates, say from five to ten per cent. He would also favor making old members pay for the excessively low rate in the past. The membership of the association last year was 19,750.

Mr. Geary asked a few questions and Mr. Tilley announced to the commission that Mr. Fitzgerald was not ready to go under examination, but promised to try and get ready for the fall.

The commission then adjourned to meet in Winnipeg next Tuesday.

NO REPORTS WANTED.

Socialist Interparliamentary Congress Expels Newspapermen.

London, July 18.—The general congress of socialistic interparliamentary committees opened here yesterday under the presidency of James Kier Hardie, the socialistic member of Parliament, and chairman of the Independent Labor party.

The first action of the congress was to expel the newspapermen present, the foreign delegates fearing that detailed reports of the proceedings would bring them unpleasantly to the notice of their Governments.

The attendance was not large. The European continent was represented by about twenty-five delegates, including a member of the Russian Parliament. Several women delegates were in attendance.

(of Cobalt), having satisfied the Government by evidence under oath, taken in the suit, that they were bona-fide purchasers, for value, without notice of any defect in the title, and having paid $250,000 to the vendors, and having taken out a certificate under the Lands Title Act, the Government has withdrawn all claims against the company, so far as the matters at present in dispute are concerned."

Watchman Cuts His Throat.

Toronto, July 18.—Thomas Rooney, 108 Elm street, committed suicide some time yesterday afternoon by cutting his jugular vein and bleeding to death. He was about 60 years of age, and had been employed as a night watchman by Geo. D. Lovegrove upon the concrete sidewalk work from time to time. He quit work on July 1, and had been drinking heavily ever since. Rooney had been very despondent for several days, his wife being seriously ill at Grace Hospital.

There are Teas and Teas

There is what we might call the up-grade and the down-grade. Most teas come under the latter heading—not that they were'nt once good, but the average dealer buys a box of tea that he keeps under the counter where it gets stale and loses most of its goodness. Stroud's teas are of the up-grade variety. We receive our teas fresh every week from our headquarters in Montreal, and while we have them in our store we keep them in tins that are practically air tight, but we don't have them long enough for them to get stale.

FEMALE DOCTOR DIES

Through Poison Administered by Her Own Hand.

Dr. Marguerite S. Bell, a Native of Morpeth, Ontario, Eludes Detective Long Enough to Swallow Dose of Cyanide of Potassium—She Died Almost Instantaneously—Serious Charge Was Hanging Over Her at the Time.

Windsor, July 19.—Rather than be locked up and in all probability sent to prison for a long term on the charge of causing the death of Mrs. Mabel Morningstar, aged 19 years, through a criminal operation, Dr. Marguerite S. Bell, aged 45, a native of Morpeth, Ont., evaded Detective Seymour long enough to swallow a dose of cyanide of potassium, from the effects of which she died almost instantaneously at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Bell's office was at 60 Clifford street, and it was there that Mrs. Morningstar, wife of Henry Morningstar, superintendent of the Essex Brass Works, Detroit, first met her Sunday morning. Dr. R. D. Hensel was called to the Morningstar home, but on learning the facts refused to treat the dying woman unless another physician was summoned. So Dr. Willard Cheney was sent for. They attended her until her death.

After Dr. Hensel notified Coroner Parer, the latter conferred with the prosecuting attorney and a stenographer and Detective Seymour went to Dr. Bell's office. There, such admissions were secured that satisfied the authorities that the doctor could be convicted on the charge of manslaughter, and her arrest was decided upon.

Left alone with the detective, Dr. Bell complained of feeling ill. She entered the bathroom and turned on the water, but when she walked back into the dining room her lips were stained with poison, and she drank some olive oil, as if to wash the poison down, before the officer could reach her. Shortly afterwards she died.

Dr. Marguerite Bell's past life is not unknown to the police. In more than one suspicious operation her name has been painfully prominent, and only her own cunning and her clients' fears of exposure have kept her from the hands of the authorities.

Dr. Marguerite Bell was a school teacher in Morpeth, Ont., up to 15 years ago, when she began the study of medicine in the Herring Homeopathic College in Chicago. She made a specialty of the diseases of women during her stay in Detroit, and was examiner for insurance fraternities. She was often the subject of suspicion.

Body Under Snow Fences.

Montreal, July 19.—A gruesome discovery was made near Sherbrooke street in Park Lafontaine, yesterday, that of a man's body, in an advanced state of decomposition. It was under a pile of snow fences.

Anything is Possible.

Russian Interior Is in Ferment and Barometer Falls.

Renewal of Apprehension That Crisis May End in a Coup d'etat Against Parliament—Address to the Country by Lower House Needed Lever to Move His Majesty to Resort to "Extreme Measures"—Peasants Rising

St. Petersburg, July 19.—The political barometer is again falling. The confusion which seems to have taken possession of the upper spheres since the efforts to form a coalition Ministry failed, coupled with the alarming reports from the interior and the attitude of Parliament, make almost anything possible. There has been a marked renewal of apprehension that the crisis may end in a coup d'etat against Parliament.

Big Plot to Kill.

The assassinations of Vice-Admiral Chouknin and Gen. Kozloff, the discovery that behind the murder of the general was a big plot to kill not only General Trepoff, but Prince Putiatin and other courtiers, and the general epidemic of assassination, which has terrorized not only the local authorities, but even the police, together with the wild destruction of property by the peasantry in half a dozen provinces during the last few days, have again strengthened the small part of the court which believes in resorting to "extreme measures."

Lever to Move Czar.

The adoption by the lower House of Parliament of an address to the country will, it is feared, place in the hands of the reactionists the needed lever to move His Majesty. M. Petrajitski vainly warned the lower House Tuesday of the seriousness of the proposed step, but the majority of the Constitutional Democrats, of which party he is a prominent member, seem to be convinced that they must hold the peasants at all hazards. The members of the extreme left seemed to court a fight, preaching open revolution from the rostum. The Novoe Vremya, which often reflects the views of the court, says yesterday that the adoption by the lower House of an address to the country would go beyond the jurisdiction of Parliament, and virtually constitute an appeal from the Government to the people.

Would Cross the Rubicon.

The paper adds: "With its adoption Parliament would cross the Rubicon, abandon its professed policy of trying to restrain the country, and instead of pacifying it, deliberately pour oil on the flames."

Despatches from the interior continue to tell without interruption stories of the burning of manor houses, robberies murders, collisions between peasants and rural guards, and the hurried despatch of troops here and there. The centre of the peasants' uprising in their mania for the destruction of property do not discriminate between friends and enemies, as evidenced by the complete devastation of the estate of M. Kokoshkine, one of the most prominent Constitutional Democrats in the lower House.

Rising Everywhere.

The whole of the Province of Veroneseh is affected by excesses, arising from the agrarian movement. The peasants are rising everywhere and burning estates. In Bobrovsk district more than 20 estates have been burned and 300 head of cattle killed or carried off. In this vicinity 15 estates have been destroyed. Troops have been sent to the disturbed districts.

The Situation "Hopeless."

Yesterday's reports describe the situation in that province as "hopeless," from the standpoint of the landlords. The situation is almost as bad in Poltava and Smolensk Provinces. In Tambov Province, eighty peasants are reported to have been killed or wounded by dragoons.

Warned Colonel Flees.

It is reported that some of the soldiers of the Seminovsky Guard Regiment have served notice on their commander, Col. Minn, that they intend to kill him at the first opportunity for forcing them to murder their fellow-citizens during the Moscow revolt, and that Minn, in fear of his life, fled from the camp at Krasnoyeselo.

To Intervene.

Paris, July 19.—The Journal yesterday says it is in a position to affirm that in the course of the recent interview at Schoenbrunn Palace, near Vienna, between the Emperor of Austria-Hungary and the German Emperor, their Majesties deliberated on the means to adopt in case of the outbreak of a revolution in Russia, Emperor Nicholas being advised of the general nature of the deliberations. It was decided in principle, the paper adds, that Germany and Austria will intervene in Poland with armed forces in case the Russian Emperor finds it impossible to maintain the control of Poland, the three Emperors therefore acting in concert for the maintenance of the status quo of their respective Polish possessions.

Condemnation of the Czar.

London, July 19.—The Socialist and Labor interparliamentary committee yesterday heard M. Inikin, leader of the Group of Toil in the lower House of the Russian Parliament, and delegate of that body to the meeting of the committee, who spoke on the subject of Russian labor and its demands. He contended that the present Russian Parliament did not represent the people and could not do so until uncontrolled universal suffrage was granted. He moved a resolution, calling on all civilized countries to protest against the crimes "committed by the Government of the Russian Emperor." It was carried unanimously.

Came to Sudden Stop.

Halifax, July 19.—The trial of the election petition against Messrs. Roche and Carney came to an abrupt ending yesterday afternoon, when the judges announced that they had no jurisdiction to try the case.

Cold Storage For Fruit.

Ottawa, July 19.—The Department of Agriculture proposes to extend its cold storage car service from dairy products to fruit.

Ottawa, July 19.—An agreement has been reached whereby the Winnipeg terminals will be owned jointly by the Government and by the Canadian Northern, and will be used jointly by the latter and by the new Transcontinental system that is now being built by the Dominion Government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Co.

Textile Strike Settled.

Montreal, July 19.—The strike of Dominion Textile employes at Magog has been settled. The company have granted an increase in wages amounting to between 13 and 14 per cent., while the employes have dropped their demand that the union be recognized.

Strike Involving 50,000.

New York, July 19.—An ultimatum embodying a threat to order a general strike among more than 50,000 members of the building trades was delivered Tuesday by the associated building trades to employers in this city.

Daily Intelligencer.

Preston's Victory.

No surprise will be occasioned by the news which comes from Ottawa, that W. T. R. Preston is about to return to London, Eng., and resume his duties as Canadian emigration agent there. From the first it has been evident that Mr. Preston is master of the situation; that the Government dare not abandon him. For, it is well to remember, Mr. Preston has had very close relations with the members of the Government. He has been their confidential agent, and has acquired an intimate knowledge of the party operations, such as the collection of funds and the carrying of doubtful constituencies. He has labored in many contests, and was especially successful in those held during the last days of the so-called Libaral regime in Ontario. It was immediately after the West Elgin bye-election, of which so much was subsequently said, that the Laurier Government determined to utilize Mr. Preston's abilities as an editor on the other side of the water.

In his new position Mr. Preston, whether of his own motion or by order of the Government is immaterial, organized what is known as the North Atlantic Trading Company. The peculiarity of this North Atlantic Trading Company is the circumstance that the corporation is not a trading company at all. It trades nowhere and with nobody. It has no ships, although it is paid for bringing emigrants to Canada. In explanation, it is said that the company is really composed of booking agents in Europe, who, in return for the bonus of $5 per immigrant, which we pay the concern, direct a great many Continental farmers to our shores by the ships of the regular lines. But why call booking agents a trading company? The Government was asked to name the booking agents who form the company and get money. This it refused to do, because Mr. Preston "pledged the faith of Canada" to keep the names of these gentlemen secret. If Mr. Preston can pledge the faith of Canada to pay money out of the treasury and not allow our taxpayers to know where the money goes, what next may this gentleman not do along this line? The situation is rendered the more remarkable by the discovery that, while the North Atlantic Trading Company has been drawing money for some years, there was no such company in existence until June of last year, when incorporation was secured on the Island of Guernsey. This so-called North Atlantic Trading Company, which received $5 per head for every Continental emigrant arriving in Canada, and which has already gathered in $300,000, was thus non-existent until a year ago. At that time it was incorporated, with Mr. Preston's son-in-law's brother and uncle as nominal shareholders, and with a foreigner, who cannot be found, as the owner of the larger part of the stock. Strange as this phase of the case is, still more astonishing is the revelation made touching the Canadian end of the concern Here is a company that cannot be located, composed of men who cannot be named—a company which receives from us $5 for the Continental emigrant who reaches our shores, although the company may have had nothing to do with the transference of the emigrant to Canada—and its Canadian representative is Mr. Smart, the friend of Messrs. Sifton and Preston, who was Deputy Minister of the Interior when the contract with the non-existent company went through.

One can well imagine that Mr. Preston, returning to England, has others besides the secret of the North Atlantic Trading Company locked securely in his bosom, the divulgation of which would be embarrassing to the Government.

Hamilton Spectator: The "Independent" Toronto Telegram's plan for helping Mr. Whitney is to "knock" him and his government during 47 months, and then give him and his government high praise during the whole one month preceding election. The Telegram is of opinion that this programme enables it, in one month, to not only undo the harm it has done its party during 47 months of "knocking," but to work up huge Toronto Conservative majorities for Mr. Whitney!

But does anybody take the Telegram seriously? Is it not, after all, a sort of political Ishmael or hooligan, whose sins become light when weighed in the balance against the Sick Children's Hospital? But, the Telegram is "independent." Oh! yes. It will never cease to throw bricks at friends and foes alike while human nature remains the same, and there is truth in the epigram of the witty Frenchman: "We all love to hear our friends abused."

It is to be feared that the following, from the Brockville Times, is only too true:

"By reducing the British army strength and proposing to lessen the naval expenditure the Campbell-Bannerman Government is raising a storm of indignation at home and injuring British prestige abroad. It is an action characteristic of a Liberal Government in England. It was just such foolish peace-at-any-price actions on the part of a Liberal Government which brought on the Crimean war in 1854, and now, just at a time when a firm hand is required by Britain to maintain the equilibrium of European politics, a Liberal Government is giving a pitiful exhibition of weakness and inconsistency."

What's to be done in regard to the reception of the Toronto Old Boys and Girls when they come on Saturday? Is anybody going to receive them and offer them the right hand of fellowship, or are they to be allowed to come quietly and be lost amid the countless thousands of this great city? It would be the correct thing, of course, to have a reception committee on hand to welcome the guests, but perhaps the old boys and girls wouldn't care very much if there was none. They know their way about, all right all right.

THINK RIGHT.

(Milwaukee Journal.)

A man gets it into his head that his heart does not work just right. He worries about it. Worry prevents sleep. It interferes with digestion. There is lack of nourishment, derangement. Each condition aggravates the other. The man is "run down." He is really sick. And in the end there is a case of functional difficulty. The man has real trouble with his heart and other organs. He has brought it about by wrong thinking.

Dandruff is Caused By a Germ That Saps the Hair's Vitality.

It is now a settled fact that dandruff is caused by a germ. Falling hair and baldness are the result of dandruff. Dr. E. J. Beardsley, of Champaign, Ill., got hold of the new hair preparation, Newbro's Herpicide the only one that kills the dandruff germ. He says; "I used Herpicide for my dandruff and falling hair, and I am well satisfied with the result." Dr. J. T. Engate, of Urbana, Ill., says, "I have used Herpicide for dandruff with excellent results. I shall prescribe it in my practice." Herpicide kills the dandruff germ. Physicians as well as the general public say so. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

How Work of Advertising A Big Circus Is Done.

The advance car of Barnum & Bailey's great circus is now at the depot in charge of Leslie Murray, who gives the following account of how the work in connection with advertising is carried on. He also gave some interesting details as to how people who tear down bills which are posted in their stores or buildings are fooled when they come to enter the exhibition grounds.

No matter where one may turn the eye is greeted with hundreds of different kinds of pictorial bills portraying the wonders to be seen underneath the big canvas "tops"; but few there are who ever give even a passing thought to how all this has been accomplished. The success of a great modern circus is largely responsible to the manner in which the advance brigade of advertisers have done their work; for to them is entrusted the task of inciting public interest in the show which they represent, and if their work has been well performed then the management may feel assured of a "big gate" when the circus reaches town. It may therefore be interesting to learn something of the life of these busy, hard-working men, who arrive in town on their own special car early in the morning and by night-fall, when it comes time for them to depart for the next point of exhibition, have not only covered the city from one end to the other with big bills announcing the features of the show, but, likewise secured and decorated every available space in both village and country for a radius of some twenty-five miles.

It requires active, energetic men, of more than ordinary intelligence, to properly perform this task, said Mr. Murray, and unless we had the most perfect system, coupled with united, harmonious action on the part of all our men, we never could do it.

For instance, the men on my car, although all belonging to the Bill-Posters' Union, are not governed by any special limit as to the number of hours they shall work, for it would be impossible to place any limit of this kind and accomplish the task laid out for them.

Our brigade is divided into three sections, known as the town-men, who cover the bill-boards in the city proper; the lithographers and programmers, whose duty it is to get up the lithographs in store windows and distribute our various publications, and the countrymen, whose work consists in billing the country roads, and villages adjacent to the city in which we exhibit.

The men who bill the country leave the car every morning, never later than 6 o'clock, using teams supplied by some local livery stable—arrangements for which have been made some weeks in advance. Each wagon is accompanied by two of our bill-posters and during their day's drive, whether the day be rainy or dry, they will post from five to eight hundred sheets of paper, not a single sheet of which has been put upon any board, barn or fence without first having obtained permission in writing from the owner to make such a display, and in exchange for which tickets of admission to the show are always given. Ordinarily the country bill-poster will have performed his task and reached the car by 6 o'clock at night, but if the roads are heavy, owing to the recent rains, or especially hilly, he sometimes does not get back to town until 9 or 10 o'clock; but whether he arrives early or late we never hear any kicking; the men are all experienced; know just what is expected of them and never grumble if they are obliged to work a few hours more than ordinary. When they sign with the show they know they will be expected to work hard, early and late, and I can always count on my men responding to every call. A circus bill-poster must be young, active and a "hustler," and we have no use for drones.

The men who work in the cities follow the same rule as regards obtaining permission to place the lithographs in store windows and issuing tickets in exchange for this privilege and both they and the country men, upon their return to the car at night, make up a complete list showing just exactly where every sheet of paper has been placed, who gave permission for it and what tickets were given for this permission, so that I can tell at a glance just how well the man has performed his task, how many sheets of paper he has posted, where and the number of tickets issued. These reports are all sent back to the second car, which by the way reaches here just one week from today; the manager of that car adds the result of his own men's work, forwarding them to the third car, which comes along one week later, and that agent completes the record by supplementing his own reports and then forwarding them all to the show, so that the management will have a complete record of the exact amount of work done by each car, each of which has, in its own way, added to the complete success of the whole.

You will note that we now feed all our men on the cars, said Mr. Murray; this is an innovation confined solely to the Barnum & Bailey advance, but it is one which has come to stay, and which sooner or later others will follow. We carry our own chef and waiters and aim to give our men just as good (and sometimes better) food than can be obtained in hotels, but our principal reason for adopting this plan was the question of saving time and results have proven that our men are much better satisfied and we get more work out of them than we would if they were compelled to go back and forth from the car to the hotel three times a day. In fact, the car is now the bill-poster's home for seven and a half months a year, and all of them seem to like it pretty well.

An Ideal Outing.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer;

Sir,—In connection with the union Methodist picnic yesterday; which was such a pronounced success, Providence answering the petitions of the children for a fine day, and the committee's prophetic vision anticipating so much boat service, and the interest and kindness of all the hands and officers in managing so many hundreds successfully gives to many parents and Sunday school workers feelings of gratitude.

And, sir, we heard from so many the enthusiastic expression that Foresters' Island is the ideal spot for such an outing; clean, level shores, permitting bathing in safety, and the scores of little feet paddling so gleefully and without any danger.

But we wished to speak of the kindness and hospitality of Dr. Oronhyatekha and staff in providing hot or cold water, and the Doctor being at home was indeed at home to all who accepted his invitation to the Home at 2 p.m., where he took pleasure in showing and explaining the art and curio collections and giving a welcome to the scholars and Sunday school workers in the beautiful audience room or temple, where the children of the Home sang and the large audience responded in the Glory Song.

The Castle was also opened to welcome some of the workers and friends, and the Doctor took a delight, though wearied from recent journeys, in pointing out and explaining the interest in his beautiful collection.

A quiet wedding took place yesterday at the residence of Mr. Thos. Hollins, in this city. The groom was Mr. Herson Ashley, of Tyendinaga, township, and the bride Mrs. Alice Bowen. Rev. J. Ferguson was the officiating minister. The couple were unattended.

The Diver Bird.

A Dantzic correspondent writes: While swimming on a lake with her brood of five a diver bird was shot and, although mortally wounded, collected her young ones and dived for their safety. When her dead body floated to the surface the five little birds were still clinging with their beaks to her wings, but all had been suffocated by remaining too long under the water.—London Mail.

NEW ENGLAND TAVERNS.

Rough and Ready Liquor Laws of the Early Days.

In the early settlement of New England taverns were found to be a necessity, and hence were established by law. They were usually under the sanction and surveillance of the town officials, says Mr. Hudson in "The History of Concord, Mass.," and these officials had to grant, limit or revoke an innholder's license, either as a victualler or a seller of liquors.

The keeper of the ordinary might be a deacon, a military officer, a civil official or a deputy to the general court. His house was a convenient place for convocations, important or unimportant, and there might be held in it a parish meeting, a military election, a council of clergymen or an assessors' talk.

So important was the ordinary that its affairs, such as the establishment of prices, the limitation of patronage and the quality and quantity of goods to be sold, were regulated by colonial law.

In order to discourage the use of strong drink at these places it was enacted about 1634 by the colonial court that not over a penny a quart should be charged for all purchased out of mealtimes. It was also ordered that not more than a penny a drink should be charged for any beverage. This was done to make the business of dramselling unprofitable. At another time it was enacted by laws that every innkeeper should sell good beer, "lest a traveler for want of it might purchase wine."

A law was passed at an early date by which a person appointed for the purpose could join a drinking company at a tavern and countermand any order made by any member of it for a drink in case he believed the member was drinking too much, and he could also direct how much liquor could be drunk.

At one time no tavern keeper was allowed to permit guests to remain at his house "tippling in an idle way." In 1664 a penalty was enacted for rude singing at inns, and the court also undertook at one time to determine how much a man might drink without being considered drunk.

POETRY IN MACHINERY.

Poetry and art have these many years pictured the labors of men and women in the harvest field. From Ruth, the gleaner, to Millet's "Reaper" we have read the long, melancholy story of the toilers gathering with crude, wasteful, inhuman hand tools the crops of the world that the nations might have bread. Rightly understood, these two women, living so far apart, are pathetic monuments to the astounding stupidity that could permit such things when, as we now see, by taking thought a machine can release humanity from such senseless labor. With a singular perversity artists have delighted to paint pictures of foolish toil. Even now the critics tell us that neither the mower, the reaper, the thrashing machine nor the sulky plow is a fit subject for a picture.

Never was there a greater blunder. The glory and majesty of our mighty harvests, won for the feeding of the world with so little labor that the vast wheatfields seem lonely, the smoking clouds of chaff and straw blown high in the air from whirring thrashers, the great companies of men and horses marching to the horizon as the plows turn side sweeps of sod to the sun, the gang drills sowing mile long lacelike threads over the brown earth where springs the growing crop—these and a hundred other scenes are fit themes for any poet. In our fields are no sad multitudes of ill paid, short lived peasants, crushed and bent by the iniquity of the sickle. Why sing the sad song of the reaper when a grand, inspiring epic of the harvesting machine awaits the poet and painter who can see and understand?—Charles Barnard in Reader.

Why the Dollar of 1804 Is Rare.

There are two stories regarding the rarity of the silver dollar of 1804, the most generally accepted one being the one which accounts for the scarcity by saying that they were sent to Africa to pay the soldiers engaged in war between this country and Tripoli. There were only 19,570 of them coined. Another version of the story which accounts for their rarity is that a vessel bound to China with almost the entire mintage of that year was lost. The former story appears to be the most likely explanation.

Cruelty.

"See here," grumbled the inmate of murderers' row, "ain't there a law against crool and onusual punishment?"

"Yes," answered the warden.

"An' ain't I ter be hanged next week?"

"I'm afraid you are."

"Then what d'yer mean by sendin' me a bunch of story papers to read that ain't got nothin' but continued stories in 'em?"

A Craze Defined.

"What do you mean by saying something is the latest craze?" asked the man from abroad who carries a notebook.

"A craze," answered Miss Cayenne, "is something that amuses other people, but in which you yourself do not happen to be interested."

WHERE IS HE?

The man who thinks the bygone days
Were best is with us yet,
And, practicing old-fashioned ways,
And still inclined to fret;
He speaks of ills we have to bear
As things unknown before;
But where's the man who used to wear
The bristly pompadour?

The man with whiskers on his chin,
Cut a la William Goat,
Is with us still, to lose or win,
To sink or proudly float.
His collar button nestles there,
Well hidden, as of yore,
But where's the man who used to wear
The bristly pompadour?

The man who sits around and sighs,
Referring to the past,
And boasting of his mother's pies,
To life is clinging fast.
He ne'er will disappear and ne'er
Find out that he's a bore;
But where's the man who used to wear
The bristly pompadour?

The father who reminds his boys,
That in his boyhood days
He had to seek his meagre joys
In hard and righteous ways
Is here, as they are who declare
That Knighthood is no more;
But where's the man who used to wear
The bristly pompadour?

Glasgow, the ideal city for municipal enterprise, after running the telephone service four years, is ready to sell to the British Government at a loss. The service was inaugurated in August, 1901, and there are at present over 12,000 subscribers to it. The capital expenditure up to the close of the financial year on 31st of May amounts, approximately, to £362,000. Negotiations resulted in an offer to purchase by the Postmaster-General, which after allowing for the sinking fund and for depreciation, will show a loss of about £15,000. The condition of the corporation will not be improved by delay.

The National Bill Posters' Association of the United States, meeting at Chicago, is doing its best to eliminate evil from the world. They have just decided not to allow any pictures of the devil to appear upon the bill boards they control. If other organizations would now follow the bill posters' example, a movement might be inaugurated to further limit the operations of his Satanic majesty. It is not hard for the bill posters to take such a step, because the personage in question often, although it is to be feared not always, is duly labelled and easily identified when he appears upon the boards. His appearance may be more terrifying when he wears his traditional costume, but it is to be doubted if he is very dangerous then. If the bill posters could only arrange to exclude him when disguised they might then set an example worthy to be followed.

MIND AND MUSCLE.

Influence of Former Upon the Latter Plainly to Be Seen.

In all feats of skill the influence of the mind is most important. To perform in thoroughly good style any difficult feat of skill it is absolutely necessary that the mind must be free from fear, anxiety or nervousness. I knew once, years ago, a man who had been a bullfighter in Spain. During one of his glowing accounts of the sport I expressed my surprise that he should have left the life. His reply was: "One day I was about to enter the ring and I had a little creepy feeling of fear. Then I stopped for good. The man who feels fear is sure to be killed."

And it is equally true that the man who fears is heavily handicapped, no matter what the contest may be. Anxiety and nervousness are closely akin to fear, and both are so powerful in their effect as to render it almost impossible for one to perform perfectly any difficult or delicate feat of skill. The man who is afraid or anxious or nervous is almost sure to fail.

All emotions when intense have a powerful effect on the muscles. This is plainly seen in the tension of the muscles, clinching of hands and arms, as well as of the face, in anger, in the spasmodic breathing of excitement, in the muscular weakness and trembling of fear, and in many other conditions that might be mentioned. Now, in feats of skill of whatever nature, whether balancing, juggling, marksmanship, tumbling or shot putting, it is necessary that just the right muscles must be used at just the right instant and to just the right degree. When, however, the muscles are disturbed by emotional excitement, such delicate adjustment is impossible and the probable result is failure.

The mental state most conducive to success in games of skill is confident calmness. And by practice this state of mind may be made a habit—a habit most valuable in all games of skill, even in that game of skill called life.—Dr. W. R. C. Latson in Outing.

Strength of the Open Sky.

"What great deed was ever done indoors?" writes Emerson Hough in the Reader. "What great thing of the earth in art, in science, in romance, was ever conceived and brought forth within walls? Pathos grows there, and small tragedy and bitterness and pessimism, but not great tragedy, nor the vast and useful pessimism which uplifts human nature and humanity.

"The joyous, hopeful, optimistic things, the large and cheerful motives, are found beneath the sky. The Indians say that the babe born in the wind will be chief, and that might well be so. What strong blood ever grew indoors? What great drama of the ages was ever played there? What duel on the stair ever equaled the battle under the trees?

"Science may delve, lamp-wise, but what great things, even of science, came wholly from within walls? Electricity, navigation by the stars—the things which have really conquered the world—did these appear to man as he studied at some table side? No. The great and sweet things of knowledge came from the naked stars. Guilty and troublous wisdom may have housing, concealment, and so make a confession that it is evil, but before guilty Eden knowledge was out of doors."

Philosophy.

A Kansas philosopher warns the men against the girl who takes time to consider a proposal of marriage. He intimates that she is hopeful that something better will turn up. Still, the man she finally accepts can console himself with the reflection that she has discovered it wasn't possible for anything better to turn up.

BISON FURNACE

Drafts in the Bison Hot Water Furnace work on exactly the same principle as in a kitchen range.

Its direct draft will give a roaring fire in "no time," and its side and down draft will bring the water to the boiling point very quickly.

The Bison has more good heating points than all other heaters combined.

...BY...

HAMLIN GARLAND

must be taught the difference between the action of the mob and the will of the organization."

Smith was brutally plain. "It isn't your say. You're only an outsider yourself. It's Carter's place to call the meeting and discuss what we are to do. A half dozen of us have laid ourselves liable by doing duty for the union. Now, the question is whether the union is going to stand by us or sneak and leave us to eat dirt in a valley jail."

"You had no sanction from the union."

"I know we didn't—no official sanction—but you know perfectly well that the men were with us then, and they are with us now, every one of them."

A rap on the door startled them all. It was like the tap of the finger of fate. Munro opened the door, and Dolan, the reporter, entered. "Hello, lads," he called easily. "What's doin'?"

They all shouted, "Hello, Jim!" and Larned, starting forward, exclaimed:

"Any news?"

"Well, rather. The sheriff, with a hundred men and a special train, is at Trinchera. He means business this time, lads."

The roomful of men now gathered into groups to discuss the certainty of war. Dolan, gay with excitement, drew round him Carter, Larned and Collingwood. Smith and Denver Dan were the center of another squad, while Raymond took Munro aside and earnestly pleaded: "See here, old man, you must keep out of this. It isn't your funeral, but it will be if you don't vamoose the ranch."

"I can't go back on the boys now, Rob. They need my military training, and, besides, I am in it. I won't sit back and see the district done up by these thugs who never earned an honest dollar in their lives. And your friend Barnett—what good is he on earth? Just a bloodsucker on the bare back of labor. I'm with the boys, and if my experience can do 'em any good I'm ready."

"I know how you feel, Jack, but this is desperate business. A fight with the sheriff will set the whole country against the miners."

Munro smiled contemptuously. "He won't fight. A round of shots in the air will send him hotfooting it back to the Springs. It's all a farce."

"Be careful. The farce may turn into tragedy at a moment's notice. These miners are idle and full of liquor. Men like Kelly who have women to protect"—

Munro caught at this. "By the way, who was the 'femme?' My word, she's a peach."

Raymond's tone was coldly indifferent. "Miss Rupert is from New York city, Barnett's cousin. She is here to look after her brother Louis. I was not thinking of her so much as of Mrs. Kelly and other women who can't get away."

Larned's voice, rising high and cutting above the others, interposed. "Then I leave. You are crazy. You can't hold this hill with a million Gatling guns. The national committee will not stand for it. Goodby!" Clapping his hat on his head, he walked out of the room, his white face set in a furious frown.

Brock roared out: "Call a meeting, Carter, and we'll carry it our way! To blazes with the national committee!"

Carter, however, was scared blue by Larned's despairing retreat and refused. "We've got to go slow. We can't win without help. I won't make the call."

San Juan Smith, with flaming face, shouted furiously: "Then we'll do it without your sanction. The executive board will act."

Raymond, on the doorstep, made a last appeal to Munro. "Jack, you can't afford to go into this thing with Smith. Keep out of it. It's bad business all around. It's one thing to strike and another thing to resist authority. See this street!"

In some way word had already passed along the ridge that the sheriff was actually on the road and that he would reach the end of the railway in midafternoon, and a great throng was packed round a man on horseback who was good naturedly trying to force his way toward headquarters.

"That's one of my scouts," said Munro, "with news of the invaders." And he pushed off into the crowd, while Raymond, with serious face and slow step, went down the path toward his mine.

"They're going to fight," he said to Kelly.

"Fight? Of course they'll fight. They'll go down and drive the sheriff's men like sheep. But what then? The crazy jacks!"

"Do you think we ought to tell the women? Are they in danger?"

Kelly was reflective. "Not now. The sheriff will hardly reach the hill this time. He'll go back. The authorities and the newspapers will chew the rag for a couple of weeks, and then—we'll be up against it!"

"All the same, Matt, I wear my guns from this on, and one of us must stand guard at night. The camp is filling with dangerous men."

At Kelly's invitation, Raymond and Louis took noonday dinner with him. It was a most delicious meal to Raymond and a pleasantly exciting one to Ann, for she confessed to having cooked the eggs and potatoes. All reference to the trouble on the hill was jocular.

"It isn't your funeral, but it will be."

The roaring savagery of the Golden Horn saloon seemed of another world, having no possible connection with the peace and sunshine and homely joy of the Kelly cabin.

The old mountaineer seemed to take it lightly. "They must fight their own battles. I had nothing to do with bringing on the strike, and I'll have nothing to do with staving it off."

"Is it a regular strike?" asked Ann.

"It is, and it is not. The big mines are all shut down. So far, it is a lockout. But the men refuse to work shifts of nine hours for eight hours' pay. To that extent it is a strike."

"The trouble all springs from a small group of reckless desperadoes," said Raymond. "The main body of the men are ready to submit to law, but men like Smith and Denver Dan and Brock must either fight or flee, and they prefer to fight. But what they do doesn't concern us. We are going right along in our small way. Our men are all outside the union."

Mrs. Kelly spoke in praise of Ann to Raymond (she had divined his love). "You should 'a' seen her—working every blessed minute this forenoon, Robert"—

"You must not compliment me too much," interrupted Ann. "Maids are sometimes spoiled by too much kindness. Are there shops near? We need a few things to make us comfortable—and my valises, when can I get them?"

Raymond replied: "I will take you down to Bozle tomorrow, if you care to go. The shops are better there and the streets less turbulent."

"I'd like to go very much," said Ann, on a sudden impulse. "I'd like to go this afternoon. Can we drive? How far is it?"

"We will ride, if you are not afraid of our bronchos and steep trails. It will be more comfortable than a wagon. After you've rested an hour or two I'll bring round the horses."

"Good morrow, friends!" A clear voice made them all turn. Jack Munro, booted and spurred, stood in the door. "And how is the lady of the silken voice?"

"Much obliged, me lord, but I've already eat. I came round to see how the lady stood her ride with me up the hill."

Ann rose and faced him. "Are you the horseman who met us?"

"The very same, lady. I don't often hear voices like yours, and I wanted to see if the face and voice were of like quality. They are," he added, with a glance of unabashed admiration. "Introduce me, Rob."

Munro stepped forward and held out a very handsome hand, and Ann could not refuse to take it. He was smaller than Raymond and seemed hardly out of his teens, as he stood there smiling brightly, his bared head lightly poised on shapely shoulders, and some magic in his smile made Raymond and Kelly seem for the moment cold and reserved. His assurance, his frankness, amused her.

"I came to tell the lady that no harm befell Colonel Barnett, her escort. He was driven back to Grand View early this morning and is at home ere this."

"Thank you for your good cheer," said Ann. "I was not so sure of your kindly intentions last night."

He smiled again, and his white teeth shone. "I must have seemed a bandit. I'm very glad I went to meet Barnett. Brock might have made you more trouble, and I would have missed the pleasure of being your guide and protector."

Kelly growled out, "Kape your murderin' scalawags as far from this cabin as ye can."

"I will see that you are not disturbed."

"You speak as one having authority," remarked Ann.

"I am captain of the vedettes," he replied.

"What are they?"

"A company of mounted police which I have organized to keep order here in the camp. The lockout leaves many men idle, and the local authorities need help to maintain peace and quiet. My force represents the union and its desire to prevent violence in the camp. You are quite safe here under our protection."

"You are very kind," replied Ann. "But aren't you one of those for whom the sheriff comes?"

Munro laughed a silent, boyish laugh. "I believe I am included in his list of notables, but I assure you the honor is quite undeserved."

"'Tis true he kicked Mackay down the hill and put the mouth of his gun to his ear," said Kelly, "but that's a trifle not worth mentioning."

Munro winked. "A mere practical joke."

With the punctilious grace of a dancing master he bowed himself out, swung to his saddle and galloped away.

"When shall we start on our trip?" asked Ann, turning to Raymond.

"I will bring the horses round very soon." As they stepped outside he turned to Kelly and asked in a low voice, "Do you see any objection to this trip to Bozle?"

"Divil a bit. The sheriff will find Jack and his men waitin' for him on the road. He'll get no farther than Sage Hen flat this night. I'm goin' to ride down the hill meself just to know what's goin' on. Go ahead, lad; only don't loiter." The big fellow smiled. "Get back before sunset, whatever ye do."

Raymond resented Munro's call and forced introduction to Ann more deeply than he cared to admit even to Kelly. It hurt him to think that Ann's hand had lain within the clasp of a man to whom women had ever been merely a lower order of life, to be used as playthings.

"And yet I cannot say anything to her," Raymond said to himself. "I can't tell her what his life is. I dare not even hint at it. But I can stop his coming"—and his lips straightened grimly—"and that I will do!"

CHAPTER XIV.

At 2:30, prompt as a groom, Raymond brought the horses round to the door. Midwinter though it was, the sun was clear and warm, and as they went winding down the trail to the southwest Ann exclaimed over the exquisite quality of the air, the crystalline clarity of the distant peaks and the cloudless serenity of the sky.

After a short and steep descent they came out into a wagon road and were able to ride side by side.

"You must be prepared for very poor goods and very small stores," said Rob. "Bozle is by no means to be compared even with Valley Springs. Everything is temporary. No one really intends to live there; they are all just staying, and I fear the millinery is not of the latest fashion."

"What a power lies in the idea of gold! See the people who have come from all over the world! Don tells me that every European language is spoken here. Did I see Perry, the Mexican boy, at your cabin this morning?"

"Yes, Perry is here, and so is Baker. You have cause to remember Baker."

When they entered the town Ann said:

"Please take me to a shop where I can get some chairs and a small table. I am going to present Mrs. Kelly with an easy chair."

"Very well," said he. "I know the very place, but please do not go about the streets alone. Of course you are perfectly safe, but you are a stranger and might wander into the wrong doors. Wait till I tie the horses and do one or two errands, then I will join you, and we can go where you please."

"Very well," she replied, with a feeling of pleasure in his care of her. "I will want to visit several shops."

When Raymond returned for Ann, whom he had left at a furniture shop, he was filled with anxiety. The street was full of men drawn together by a report that the sheriff had stolen a march on Skytown and was already on his way to intimidate Bozle and demand those for whom his warrants called. Horsemen were galloping up the hill to warn the miners, and the chief of police and mayor were mingling with the growing throng, pleading for peace. The whole camp resembled a nest of ants into which an ox had planted a hoof.

Ann observed Raymond's abstraction and restlessness and asked, "Are you in haste to return?"

He answered quite calmly: "Yes, we ought to start back as soon as we can. I am going after the horses. Please remain here until I get back."

When Raymond returned the second time he was breathing rapidly. "Some one has borrowed our horses," he explained quietly, "and I must ask you to wait a little longer while I secure another for you."

"Will they not return them?"

"I am afraid not. They have probably gone up the hill to join Munro's men, and they will be returned at the stable. If you are not afraid"—

"Oh, no; I am not afraid!"

He looked at her in admiration. "I don't believe you are scared. Well, now, stay here till I can see what I can do about a horse."

Again Ann stood alone in the doorway, watching a group of men crouching on the flat roof of a two story building opposite. Two of them had rifles in their hands, and some man was shouting from the walk, "Keep them guns out o' sight!"

The girl began to tingle with a foreknowledge of violence. As she listened a wild cry went up from the roof tops, "Here they come!"

The throng below uttered answering shouts. Men began to run to and fro aimlessly, filling the street facing to the south. In the hands of hotheads guns began to glitter. Their action was unreal, spectacular; but their voices shook her, benumbed her.

Raymond came hurrying back; his lips set and resolute, his brow frowning with anxiety. "I cannot find a horse that you can ride. I have ordered a team. We will have to go the back way to reach it."

A wilder yell arose. The leaders began to run down the street which led to the south. Ann took hold of Raymond's arm with nervous clutch. "What are they going to do?"

"It's hard to tell. I wish we were safely out of this."

"Can't we run?"

"Run! Dear girl, you couldn't walk four blocks in this altitude. If you will come with me we will cross to the barn and get our carriage there."

Unconsciously clinging to his arm, Ann went down the back street as in a dream.

They were already too late. The cross street was packed with men, and, looking down the hill, they saw the sheriff and his posse coming six abreast like a squad of cavalry, riding slowly up between the walls of stern and silent citizens of the great camp. Each deputy carried a rifle across the pommel of his saddle, and at their head, preceding even the sheriff, rode Matthew Kelly. His head was bare, and in his hand a long revolver gleamed. There was something in his face, in the lift of his head, that awed men. As he came he called out, not loudly, but every word could be heard:

"Aisy now, boys! Respect the law. Aisy, I say! This is no fight of yours. Down with your guns. There are women and children to think of. Kape the peace."

Raymond looked at Ann with eyes whose light amazed her. "By the Lord, I wish I were by his side!" He spoke through his set teeth.

"Go!" she said. "Do not mind me. Go help him."

Her voice recalled him.

"No, my place is here," and his look meant more than any word he had ever dared to speak to her.

In the square Kelly halted, and the sheriff, throwing up his hand, commanded silence. He was visibly trembling, but he blustered to his purpose. "Where is your mayor and your chief of police?"

The chief stepped forth. "Here I am! What do you want of me?"

"I want you to deliver to me the men who assaulted Mackay."

The chief waved his hand toward the hills. "They are up there; go get them!" and a roar of derisive applause went up.

Kelly raised his hand. "Boys, hear me! This is the sheriff, the properly constituted authority of this county. Be quiet, now, and listen to reason."

The sheriff, gaining courage, took up the theme. "I have no war with Bozle," he said. "I came to get the men who abused Mackay and who defied my authority."

"Well, go get them," repeated a man in the crowd. "What are you doing here? You came here to intimidate us, and you can't do it."

The crowd, moved by some sinister impulse, closed round the sheriff and Kelly, cutting them off from the main body of deputies. This movement opened a way of escape, and, expecting each moment to hear the crackle of guns, Raymond hurried Ann across the street and into the musty waiting room of the livery barn.

"Where is that team?" he shouted to a hostler who was looking out of a side door.

"The boss took it."

"Whose horse is this with the saddle on?"

The hostler looked down for a moment. "Superintendent of Loadstone."

"Maynard's?"

"Yep."

"I thought so. Well, you tell him that Rob Raymond borrowed him for a lady." He turned to Ann. "Come; we must get out of this."

She obeyed like a child, all her imperious nature in subjection to his will. Lifting her to the saddle, he led the horse out the back way and through an alley into the main street and so to the hills. As they reached a fairly level spot in the trail he turned and looked back over the roofs of the houses.

"The sheriff is retreating—wherein he shows good sense." He pointed above them, where on Pine mountain Munro's vedettes stood waiting, backed by a thousand miners, jocular with battle hunger, shouting faint defiance.

"I am sorry to be such a burden to you," said Ann. "I know you longed to be there with Matthew Kelly, and I have forced you to flight."

"I will be honest. I had that impulse. You see, I've been so in the habit of mixing in—but it was only a flash, for you were beside me." And then he added, "And you are more to me than any other thing in the world."

She had no reply to this, no neat turn of phrase, no smile. She looked away in silence, her breath a little troubled, her throat contracted.

In fear of the effect of his words, Raymond hastened to the impersonal

"SWISS FOOD"

No range can bake so well as the Imperial Oxford, because no other range has the Diffusive Oven Flue that draws in pure air constantly, heats it just as hot as you want it heated, and sends it through every part of the whole oven every second. That flue, found only in this perfect range, keeps that heated pure air—DRY air—constantly moving DOWNWARD through the oven, over the baking food, and out up the chimney. When it enters the oven it's hot and dry; when it leaves it, it's wet air,—carries with it all the moisture, all the odors, but NONE of the juices of the food that's being baked.

Please visit any of our stores and see why this is the right range for your kitchen.

It certainly does do good baking

Suspicion and Sentiment

By Carter Coverly

Copyright, 1906, by M. M. Cunningham

"I do not want to be guilty of a breach of courtesy toward my guests," explained Thomas Linden, "but these losses are becoming of too frequent occurrence. I ask that all submit to a search."

"That should scarcely be necessary," protested Alward. "I am sure that there has been some mistake somewhere. It is scarcely right that we should be treated as felons."

He flushed under their curious stares. He was not altogether unacquainted with the gossip which had connected his name with those mysterious disappearances of jewelry and other small portables since he had joined the circle. More than once there had been talk of an investigation.

He had come among them as the bearer of letters from the Garfields, who merely explained that they had met him abroad and understood that he was coming to America and that he might come to Cosgrove.

"I AM SURE NO ONE ELSE WILL OBJECT TO BEING SEARCHED."

"I think," said Mr. Linden mildly, "that none of us can well afford to rest under suspicion. There has been considerable talk of late that there is a Raffles among us. It is time that a stop was put to such suggestions. I am sure that no one else will object to being searched."

"On the contrary," exclaimed Billy Sattler, "I should object to being searched myself."

Even Alward looked at him in amazement. They two were keen rivals for Betty Linden's affections. It was odd to see Sattler supporting his rival in this protest.

"I think, father," said Betty reproachfully, "that it would be unfair to insist upon a search when two of our guests object."

"All the more reason," said Linden bluntly. "It would appear that they had good reasons for not wishing to be searched."

"Surely you cannot suppose that both Mr. Sattler and myself have the pin," argued Alward, "yet we both object to a search."

"Perhaps there was more than a pin," suggested Linden, his temper, roused by opposition, getting the better of his courtesy.

Betty's clear voice broke the silence. "Nonsense," she said sharply. "You owe Mr. Alward and Billy an apology, father. I happen to know the reason for Billy's refusing to be searched, and it has no bearing at all on the loss of the pin."

Her cheeks were a bright pink now, but she stood her ground bravely, while a murmur ran about the room—a subdued hum of gossip. Alward went white for a moment, but he pulled himself together.

"I am unable to advance so fair an advocate," he said quietly. "But I can assure you, Mr. Linden, that my reasons for not wishing to be submitted to the indignity of a search are very different from those you attribute to me."

"I don't care what you say, father," declared Betty, "I shall not permit my guests to be submitted to such an indignity. It is enough for you to say such things about Mr."—

She was interrupted by a scream from Mrs. Morley. "After all this fuss," she cried, "to think that the pin never was lost at all. Here it is—dropped into my flowers. Did you ever hear of such a thing?"

Mr. Linden said something under his breath uncomplimentary to all women and stumped off to the library. The rest, deprived of their anticipated sensation, broke up into couples and drifted to other rooms, leaving only Betty and the two men.

"I think," said Sattler, coming forward, "that now the pin has been found it would be better that I should go. As I am leaving town by an early train, I will wish you goodby now."

He bent low over her hand and disappeared. Betty looked up to encounter Alward's grave eyes.

"Do you care so much?" he asked gently as he noted the tears in her eyes.

"I don't know," she answered frankly. "When he is here I like him ever so much. You see, we were children together. He was always the black sheep, but the nicest of all the Sattler boys. He ran away when he was fourteen, and no one heard anything more of him until he turned up here last summer, just before you came, with a lot of money. The rest of the family were scattered all over the country, but he has been staying on because he likes the old home—and"—

"And you," completed Alward.

"I suppose so," she confessed. "He has proposed a half dozen times, but somehow I could not say yes. Sometimes I am almost afraid of him."

"When he is not with you?" suggested Alward. Betty nodded her head. "Don't you think it may be a sort of hypnotism?" he asked. "There are men who have that peculiar trick of gaining sympathy."

"It might be," she admitted. "I know that I never felt certain."

"Do you really know what it was that he had?" he asked curiously.

"My picture," she said, blushing. "He had been begging me for it for a long time. This evening just as Mrs. Morley complained of her loss he said he hoped that there would be no search, as he had my photograph in his pocket."

"That was why you came to our aid?" he asked. "Because you did not want it known that he had your picture?"

"You—they—people might suppose that I had given it to him."

"What of that? Were you afraid to let him think that?"

"I thought that you"— She paused lamely.

"You cared what I thought?" he asked wonderingly.

"I did not want you to think a thing like that," she stammered.

"Is this the picture?" he asked, drawing one from his pocket. She gave a wondering cry.

"How did you get it?" she demanded.

"From the frame in the library," he explained. "You see, I had begun to believe that there was no hope for me, and I wanted at least a photograph to remind me of the girl whose face had brought me across the ocean."

"I," she exclaimed—"I have never been abroad!"

"But the Garfields were. They had your picture, and I fell in love with that. I wanted at least a photograph for my own. I knew that you could not marry Sattler, for I sent to Scotland Yard and got his history. To avoid a scandal, for your sake I merely warned him away. But I was afraid that you would not care for me when you found that I was responsible for the disclosures."

"Do you know," she said musingly, "I think it must have been you that kept me from saying 'Yes' to Billy."

"Then you care?" he cried, folding her in his arms. "You will marry me?"

"Not if I know it!" stormed Mr. Linden.

It did not take long to convince the old gentleman of the mistake he had made. "But why wasn't Sattler willing to be searched, then?" he demanded.

"He had my watch," explained Alward. "Even while he was protesting that he had reformed he took it. That was why I was against a search. I had just discovered my loss when you spoke and knew what would happen if there was a general search."

"Hugh," said Betty softly, "you're the dearest and most thoughtful man in the world!"

"That's worth a hundred watches!" he answered as he kissed the upturned lips.

When Soft Crabs Are Dangerous.

"There is no danger in eating soft shelled crabs," observed an epicure, "if they are fresh, but they are poison if they are not. They should be well seasoned and an extra lot of pepper put on them as a precaution, especially if the weather is very hot when they are eaten or if they are eaten shortly before one retires. It is the habit of many persons to eat soft shelled crabs at nighttime. I do not know but that they taste better then. It is somewhat dangerous to many to drink milk after eating crabs. Milk seems to develop the colic that follows eating soft shelled crabs with some persons. Another thing that should be remembered, and that is a sharp thunderstorm will kill soft shelled crabs, and even the hard shelled crab at times. Unless the soft shelled crab has been cooked before the thunderstorm I think the safer plan would be to decline to eat it. Under all other conditions there is no danger in partaking of them, for I do not think any one would be criminal enough to cook a dead crab, hard or soft shell. The proper way to kill a crab is to throw him into a kettle of boiling water. I know that some people think this is cruel, but it is no more cruel than to stab them with a needle or kill them with chloroform, as I have known some extra sensitive persons to do."—Washington Star.

Apaches Never Took Scalps.

The taking of scalps has been spoken of so commonly in the press of the United States that it has become a general practice, when speaking of a man having lost his life among the Indians, to say, "He lost his scalp." Novelists even of today, when locating their stories in Apacheland, almost invariably scalp the victims of Apache vengeance. As a matter of fact, one can say that the Apache never took scalps. Men who have lived in the Apache country and have been closely associated with them for thirty years or more claim that no full blooded Apache ever scalped a man he killed. On the contrary, he would not touch a body after death and would throw away his weapons if stained with human blood. Their own dead the men never help to bury. This task is left to the women.—E. S. Curtis in Scribner's.

THE REAL VALUE.

How All Literature Is Contained In a Few Great Books.

Young people must every now and then hear it said or see it written that all the real value in literature can be put upon a small shelf—that is to say, the really important part of all that is written is contained in a very few good books, all the rest being either unimportant or different ways of saying the same things that have been said before. The statement, of course, is not true if it be taken literally. There are certainly many hundreds, perhaps thousands, of books that contain original thoughts or experiences that are truly valuable; but, generally speaking, the best part of all that has been written is to be found in a few volumes. To understand how this is possible we must remember that nearly all rules are the same as other and simpler rules. In arithmetic, for example, the whole science consists of only four simple ways of treating numbers. We can add, subtract, multiply and divide, and that is all we can do to numbers. The rest of the book is only the working out of these four rules; thus all of the arithmetic could easily be put into a little page that one could carry in the vest pocket.

All behavior, all right living, is also set forth in a few simple laws. These illustrations will show what is meant by saying that all literature is contained in a few great books. The Bible and the works of a few famous poets and essayists contain all human wisdom, and these are within the reach of every purse.

THE WARLIKE MOROS.

They Prize Their Weapons and Would Rather Fight Than Eat.

An inordinate military conceit is a dominant quality of the Moro. To him there is but one measure of defeat—to wit, annihilation. If beaten, he expects nothing less; if he meets less, he has saved the day, perhaps won a victory. They are all of one profession—arms. As children their first toys are wooden arms, their first instruction the play of the sword and the spear. Whatever else as men they may be—priest, farmer, robber, pirate, merchant, lawyer—they are always, first, soldiers.

For a young man to lose his creese means to lose his right to marry, and it is the desire of all to die creese in hand. In fear of loss they sleep on these precious arms or with them tied to the body. For the same reason their cannon are kept lashed to timbers in their houses.

Firearms, indeed, are their main danger with civilized people. If they see the opportunity thereby to secure such arms, Moros can never resist the temptation to rob and murder. To get them they will risk all, lose all and never whimper. To them without the best arms death were preferable.—Major R. L. Ballard in Metropolitan.

The Inns of Old England.

Efforts were continually being made in England to keep down the number of inns. In the reign of Edward I. there were only three in the whole of London. Even in 1552 no more than forty were legally permitted in the metropolis, now spreading out its boundaries on every side. York might have eight, Norwich, Exeter and Cambridge four, Bristol six and Oxford three. These regulations must have been set at naught in a very wholesale manner, for half a century later there were 400 "houses of call" in that part of London known as the City and no fewer than twenty-four clustered round Covent Garden. In mediaeval Oxford it was ruled that no "victualer" was eligible for the office of mayor, and this term included an innkeeper.

Thackeray and Dickens.

This is the way George Henry Lewes once characterized Thackeray and Dickens in the way of service to a friend: Dickens, he said, would not give you a farthing of money, but he would take no end of trouble for you. He would spend a whole day, for instance, in looking for the most suitable lodgings for you and would spare himself neither time nor fatigue. Thackeray would take two hours' grumbling indecision and hesitation in writing a two line testimonial, but he would put his hand into his pocket and give you a handful of gold and bank notes if you wanted them.

Bowling.

Bowling is one of our games that originated in the middle ages. The exact date of its introduction is obscure, but it has been clearly traced to the thirteenth century. The first bowling greens were made in England. In bad weather these could not be used to advantage, and this led to the construction of covered bowling alleys.

Hard Luck.

Caller—I have here several bills which are long overdue. Harduppe (desperately)—I am sorry to say that our cashier is out today. Caller—Oh, well, it doesn't make much difference. I'll call and pay them at some future date. Good day, sir.

His Best Bedroom.

An American physician says that while in England he saw a vaulted tomb in a London cemetery which had the following inscription engraved on the door:

Dr. John Gardner's Last and Best Bedroom.

The Lid Off.

Johnnie—Say, pa, who was Pandora? Johnnie's Pa—Pandora, my son, was a little girl who started a lot of trouble because she didn't keep the lid down.

There is certainly something of exquisite kindness and thoughtful benevolence in that rarest of gifts, fine breeding.—Bulwer.

BLAZING METEORS.

The Short Lived Splendor of a Shooting Star.

A small body as large as a paving stone or not as large as a marble is moving round the sun. Just as a mighty planet revolves in an ellipse, so this small object will move round and round in an ellipse, with the sun in the focus. There are at the present moment inconceivable myriads of such meteors moving in this manner. They are too small and too distant for our telescopes, and we can never see them except under extraordinary circumstances.

At the time we see the meteor it traverses a distance of more than twenty miles a second. Such a velocity is almost impossible near the earth's surface. The resistance of the air would prevent it. Aloft in the emptiness of space there is no air to resist it.

In the course of its wanderings the body may come near the earth and within a few hundred miles of its surface, of course, begins to encounter the upper surface of the atmosphere with which the earth is inclosed. To a body moving with the appalling velocity of a meteor, a plunge into the atmosphere is usually fatal. Even though the upper layers of air are excessively attenuated, yet they suddenly check the velocity, almost as a rifle bullet would be checked when fired into water. As a meteor rushes through the atmosphere the friction of the air warms its surface; gradually it becomes red hot, then white hot and is finally driven off into the vapor with a brilliant light, while we on the earth, one or two hundred miles below, exclaim:

"Oh, look! There is a shooting star."

A FISH HOOK.

The One You Should Buy and the Test You Should Try.

The most common flaw is the temper of the hook. Some hooks are brittle and break easily. There are other hooks still that bend, and bend so easily that they "straighten" on every big fish, and yet other hooks that bend, but bend so hard that a big fish never flexes them, and they only straighten and come away when the full tension of the line is laid upon them if caught on a tough snag or tree bough. These last are the hooks to buy—if you can find them—and the hard breaking hooks classifies next in merit. Tests by the eye are quite useless, as so many hooks carry exactly the same tints in blue or black. Test the hook instead by the hand, catching the point in a firm bit of wood and trying it out both by the hard, firm pull and by the jerk. Watch particularly in this trial for weakness at the foot of the barb, where the wire is apt to be attenuated overmuch and the whole point give way on a strong fish, especially if hooked in bone or very hard gristle. What vasty depths of angling profanity, in spirit if not in word, have been stirred in boat and on bank when the pointless hook comes away from the hard played fish must be left to memory.—Outing Magazine.

Telling Time by Flowers.

"With a little time and labor it would be possible to construct a garden whose flowers would combine to make a first rate clock," said the botanist. "It is 5 a. m. when the sow thistle opens," he continued. "It is 5:30 when the dandelion opens. It is 7 when the white lily opens. It is 8 when the hawkweed opens. At 11:12 a. m. the sow thistle closes. At noon precisely the yellow goat's beard closes. At 2 p. m. the hawkweed closes. At 5 the white lily closes. The dandelion closes at 8 sharp. Since Pliny's time forty-six flowers have been known to open and shut with great punctuality at certain hours of the day and night."

Bills of Different Birds.

The bill of the canary is built for crushing seeds—has strength, but in many of the doves the bill is slender and weak. Many of the pigeons and doves that feed on seeds have gizzards that are large and muscular—crushing and grinding being accomplished in that way.

It is difficult to say how much birds experience taste, probably in a small degree. Ducks and parrots have soft, fleshy tongues, but in most birds much of the tongue is sheathed in horn. Food may be selected by intuition as to what is wholesome, more than by taste.

Purity of Milk.

In Paris the municipal chemists accept milk as pure when it contains one ounce of butter and four ounces of solids per quart. At Bern milk must contain at least 3 per cent of butter and may contain 90 per cent of water. At Berlin the police seize all milk offered for sale which is below the legally required standard of 2.7 per cent of fatty matters. This allows the dairymen to add with safety from 10 to 13 per cent of water to fairly rich milk.

Safer.

"Of course, I don't want to criticise, but I don't think it was altogether right for David to say 'all men are liars.'"

"Well, at any rate, it was safer than to pick out one man and say it to him."

An Old Clock.

The great clock at Rouen has been measuring time and striking the hours and quarters for over 500 years and, it is said, has been running all this time without interruption.

Modern Gallantry.

The Man (in the street car)—Take my seat, madam. The Woman—Thank you, but I also get out at the next corner.

Calumny is the worst of evils. In it there are two who commit injustice and one who is injured.—Herodotus.

MAKING PORCELAIN.

The maker of porcelain and pottery has decidedly the most exciting and romantic trade in the world.

The great factories of Sevres and Dresden were founded by Bernard Palissy. This man invented white enamel, but it took him sixteen years to make the invention—sixteen years of hunger, misery and persecution, which culminated in the episode, used in H. A. Jones' play of "The Middleman," wherein Palissy maintained his furnace fire by burning all the furniture in his house and finally opened the furnace door to find within the glaze which he had sought throughout the best years of his life.

Bottgher invented hard porcelain. He was an alchemist, and one day, chancing to discover that his powdered wig was unusually heavy, he inquired the cause and found that the weight was due to the kaolin with which the wig was powdered. This kaolin was the substance for lack of which Bottgher's investigations had for years failed.

When Elers opened a porcelain factory at Burslem he employed none but the most stupid and illiterate workmen, so that his secret processes might not become known. But Samuel Astbury resolved to learn the Elers method, and, affecting ignorance and stupidity, he got a place in the factory, mastered all of Elers' secrets and eventually opened a plant of his own, wherein he duplicated in every detail the work of Elers.—Exchange.

MANY, MANY DOCTORS.

A Sixteenth Century Wager That Might Be Won Today.

The story is told in Joubert's "Popular Errors Concerning Medicine," published at Bordeaux, France, in 1579, that one Gonelle, a jester at the court of the Duke of Ferrara, insisted once upon a time that the trade which had the most followers was that of doctor. To prove his assertion he left his home one morning to go to the palace with his nightcap on and his jaws wrapped up. The first person he met stopped him with the question, "What is the matter with you, Gonelle?" "A terrible toothache." "Oh, is that all? I'll tell you what will cure it." And every person he met had some advice to give him.

When the jester reached the duke's chamber, the same question and answer were repeated. "Ah," said the prince, "I know of something that will take the pain right away." Gonelle instantly threw up his kerchief, saying: "And you, too, monseigneur, are a doctor? I have only passed through one street in coming from my house to you and have counted more than 200 of them. I believe I could find 10,000 in the city." Whether the story is true or false, it could be told again in our days, and Gonelle would win his wager without dispute.

The Stars Were Once Human Eyes.

The most remarkable belief or superstition concerning the human eye is one that is current in Australia. Among the natives of that country it is the general belief that the left eye of every chief becomes a star the moment the chief in question is done with it. The sun, they say, is the eye of the "greater god" and the moon the eye of the "lesser god." All the stars were once the left optics of human beings of high rank. Shungle, a celebrated chief, once ate the eye of a valiant chief, thinking thereby to increase the brilliancy of his own "eye star." But the eye burned through Shungle's belly and killed him, whereupon his own left eye became joined to the one he had eaten, and the two may now be seen as a beautiful double star lying just to the east of the Southern Cross.

Liquid Corn.

An easterner was prospecting in the north Georgia mountains when he came on a native apparently clinging to the side of a steep hill tilling corn.

The prospector stopped for a chat, and the mountaineer, nothing loath for a rest in the shade from his fatiguing toil, was agreeable.

"Say, friend, how in the world do you get the corn down off that hillside after it is ready for harvest?" asked the stranger.

"In jugs," was the laconic and probably truthful reply.

Seals Learning to Swim.

Young seals do not know how to swim. They have to become gradually accustomed to the water either by entering it to paddle about by themselves or by being carried into it in their mothers' jaws. They have great fear of the waves that break into foam, and as soon as they see one approaching take to flight in terror and do not turn round until they have ascended to a very high place above the sea.

It Happens.

"You are a very successful prophet," we said. "Will you tell us the secret of your success?"

"Certainly," the sage replied in a kindly tone. "As it is always the unexpected that happens, I merely prophesy the unexpected."

Foresight.

Winebiddle—I hear that you dictated to your new typine an impassioned love letter to another girl. Gildersleeve—Yes, it was a fictitious sweetheart. I wanted to nip in the bud any designs she might have on me in a matrimonial way.—London Mail.

Give Up.

When a burgler asks the conundrum, "Where's your money?" it is generally the wisest plan to give it up.

A virtue always outweighs a talent.—Momarion.

THE FIRST BALLOON.

Proceeding on the principle that heated air expands and so becomes lighter, bulk for bulk, than air at the ordinary temperature, the brothers Stephen and Joseph Montgolfier filled a paper bag with heated air, which rose to the ceiling of the room. This preliminary success was rapidly followed up, and they gradually increased the size of the balloons experimented with until they were so satisfied with their progress that in 1783 they gave a public exhibition, sending up a linen balloon 105 feet in circumference, which was inflated over a fire supplied with small bundles of chopped straw. The balloon succeeded beyond their utmost expectation, and after rising to a height of over 6,000 feet it descended ten minutes after in a field a mile and a half away. The next balloon carried a car, in which were a sheep, a cock and a duck.

The success of this further experiment induced M. Pilatre de Rozier and the Marquis d'Arlandes to risk their lives by making the first ascent in the new and wonderful machine. Their balloon, which was forty-five feet in diameter and seventy-five feet high and was inflated with hot air, passed over Paris to the great astonishment of the people, attaining an altitude of half a mile. Ballast was then for the first time employed in regulating the ascending power of the balloon. The first venture was followed by others, and De Rozier, the first to ascend, was also the first to meet his death in this manner, having been killed, with a companion, by the burning of his balloon near Boulogne.

BACKBONE.

The Self Reliant Man Is the One Who Is In Demand.

Haven't you depended upon clothes, upon appearances, upon introductions, upon recommendations about long enough? Haven't you leaned about long enough on other things? Isn't it about time for you to call a halt, to tear off all masks, to discard everything you have been leaning on outside of yourself, and depend upon your own worth?

Haven't you been in doubt about yourself long enough? Haven't you had enough unfortunate experiences depending upon superficial, artificial, outside things to drive you home to the real power in yourself? Aren't you tired of leaning and borrowing and depending upon this thing and that thing which have failed you?

The man who learns to seek power within himself, who learns to rely upon himself, is never disappointed, but he always will be disappointed when he depends upon any outside help. There is one person in the world that will never fail you if you depend upon him and are honest with him, and that is yourself. It is the self reliant man that is in demand everywhere.—O. S. Marden in Success Magazine.

Tobacco Smoke.

The composition of tobacco smoke is complex. Analysis gives nicotine, pyridic bases, formic aldehyde, ammonia, methylamin, pyrrol, sulphuretted hydrogen, prussic acid, butyric acid, carbonic acid, oxide of carbon, the steam of water, an etherized empyreumatic oil, and tarry or resinous products, among which we detect small quantities of phenol. Of all the products of tobacco the most venomous are nicotine, pyridic and methylamin bases, prussic acid, sulphuretted hydrogen, oxide of carbon and empyreumatic oil, and all that we draw into our lungs with more or less satisfaction.

Under the Rose.

The expression "under the rose," or sub rosa, to indicate secrecy, originates in the Greek mythological story that Cupid gave Harpocrates, the god of silence, a golden rose, desiring him at the same time not to betray the amour of Venus. According to another account, the traitors against the Greek states during the invasion of Xerxes held their meetings in an Athenian arbor formed of rose bushes. At Greek and Roman banquets the guests were always crowned with roses, and a cluster of these hung above the banqueting table was a sign that what was said in that place should not be repeated elsewhere.

Decline of the Bath.

One strange feature in the advance of civilization has been the decline of the bath. Washing in the golden age of Greece and Rome was a fine art, and baths were built with as much care as temples. There has been a revival in this century of public baths, but from an aesthetic point of view they cannot compare with those of a barbarous age. This is not an age of washers.—London Lady.

Should Have Said Shoes.

"Miss Backbay," said Mr. O'Bull, who had been strolling along the country road with the lady from Boston, "I suppose your feet are very dusty. Permit me"—

"Sir!" cried the precise young woman witheringly. "How dare you!"

Unreasonable Freddy.

Tommy—Ma, Freddy's crying 'cause I'm eating my cake and won't give him any. Mother—Is his own cake finished? Tommy—Yes, ma; and he cried when I was eating that too.

A Traveler's Tip.

A guide is too often a man who tells you what you do not want to know in a language you do not understand.

Where life is more terrible than death it is then the truest valor to dare to live.—Browne.

Jack Tar, Humorist.

There's never any telling what our bluejackets will do when "out for a lark." A number of them were in Londonderry a week or two ago, and a couple of them, walking along Foyle street, noticed a woman standing on the footpath with a baby in her arms. One of the "tars" in passing snatched the baby out of her arms and made off at full speed toward the Great Northern railway. For a moment the astonished mother stood in bewilderment. She then raised an alarm and ran screaming after the bluejacket. He was joined by others, who seemed to appreciate the joke immensely. The whole body rushed through street after street, the mother still pursuing. In Ferryquay street the "tars" halted, dashed into a shop, bought a perambulator, placed the child in it and retraced their steps at a rattling pace until they met the infuriated mother. They then pulled up, quieted her fears and handed her over her child in the handsome new perambulator, which she wheeled off in pride and triumph, the bluejackets meantime cheering.—London Answers.

What "Paste" Is.

"Paste" from which imitation precious stones are made is widely known, but few are acquainted with the ingredients, though it is generally understood that the paste gains its brilliance from the lead it contains. Formulas vary for the paste, but all contain rock crystal, red lead, carbonate of potash, borax and white arsenic. It is required that these articles shall be of a high grade of purity, as there is a considerable waste, so that the gems made from "strass," as the composition is technically known, are by no means inexpensive. The lead gives to the strass its brilliancy, while the rock crystal contributes brilliancy. A paste diamond cannot scratch glass and is thus easily detected, but colored stones are made of crystal alone that are considerably harder than glass. In the making of these a crystal stone is hollowed out and filled with some colored liquid, the orifice being closed with a plug of crystal, which is ground down so that there is no trace of the junction.

Why the Eggs Didn't Hatch.

A famous Michigan egg raiser occasionally sells some of his product to his grocer, and some smart town people who thought they could get his eggs for hatching cheaper by buying from the grocer were disappointed when they found that none of the store eggs hatched out. Some one told the old man about the disappointment, and he expressed no surprise. He only said: "They should come to me for their setting eggs. Whoever hear o' buying settin' eggs in a grocer shop? When I sell eggs for eatin' I just dip the ends in boiling water—kill' the germ. Them was eatin' eggs the grocer had. If these people want settin' eggs they should come to me honest like."

Eating Snails.

Four Britons ate snails at a French restaurant in Brighton, England, not long ago. Their experiences are described as follows: "In due course the plates appeared, each bearing half a dozen snail shells of a dingy white. A slender two pronged fork accompanied each dish. With this the snails were jerked out, their big black horns coming first, accompanied by a small eruption of gravy. One of the experimenters looked critically at the uninviting object at the end of his fork, then he shut his eyes and popped it into his mouth. His teeth met on something yielding, but tough, rather suggestive of india rubber. All four epicures manfully ate their six snails."

Baking Bread.

The action of yeast on dough converts some of the starch into sugar. Then the sugar is made into carbonic acid gas and alcohol. When the dough is baked the alcohol is driven off. If the bread is underbaked some of the yeast may remain unkilled, and such bread by being kept may have more of its starch changed into sugar. Thorough baking kills all yeast, and keeping of such bread does not cause any ripening. Stale bread is more digestible than new bread solely because it is more easily masticated.

Children and Influences.

The reason why children so easily contract the mien, gestures and habits of their surroundings is that they have no power of resistance—everything outside them is stronger than themselves, and they have to borrow from all outward influences for their own growth; hence they are good, cheerful and contented or bad, morose and discouraged, just according to their surroundings.

His Little Claim.

Mrs. A.—Don't you know, I really have an attachment for this piano. The Maid—Yessum, and the gentleman who was here while you were out said he had an attachment for it also. Mrs. A.—Indeed! Who was he? The Maid—The sheriff, mum.

Treasure Good Health.

How few of us stop to count good health as a great blessing! We are so busy grumbling over some financial wrong that we forget that all the money in the world would profit us but little if we were invalids.

Honest About It.

Kind Lady—Poor man! Are you really anxious to earn a good dinner? Truthful Thomas—I'm more anxious fer de dinner dan I am t' earn it, ma'am.

All travel has its advantages. If the passenger visits better countries he may learn to improve his own, and if fortune carries him to worse he may learn to enjoy his own.—Johnson.

MADOC VILLAGE TAKES ACTION.

(From an Occasional Correspondent.)

On Monday night at the request of A. F. Wood, Esq., the Reeve of Madoc Village called a special meeting of Council to consider a communication from Sir Mackenzie Bowell, with reference to railway leading from Madoc to Eldorado.

Mr. Wood pointed out the brief reference in the papers that had been made to some remarks made by Senator Bowell in the Senate, which had attracted but little attention. Last week he had received from Sir Mackenzie the full text of what had taken place and calling attention to the importance of taking advantage of the promises made by Sir Richard Cartwright in reply to his statements, and he had suggested that the Council act in the matter. He had thought it was important that we should leave no stone unturned that would lead to getting our position fairly before the Government and the promises made by Sir Richard, supposed to be an influential member of the Government, would indicate a possible chance. He then read Sir Mackenzie's statements and Sir Richard's replies, as reported in Hansard. Mr. Wood had drafted a statement of the facts concerning the road and submitted it for the Council's consideration, and a petition was drafted and forwarded to the Governor-General-in-Council. It contained:

1st. A statement of the building of the road, Grand Junction to Eldorado, and when constructed.

2nd. The bonus granted by village and township of $30,000 and $3000 per mile from Ontario Government.

3rd. That the Belleville and North Hastings and Grand Junction became by purchase the property of the Grand Trunk Railway.

4th. That for a time the road was operated to Eldorado, north of Madoc village, principally on account of red hematite ore, and needing repairs received a direct aid north from Madoc village to Eldorado, some seven miles, from the Dominion Government, the sum of $3,200 per mile, in two grants, $1,500 in 1885 and 1890, $1,700, which sums were paid over to the Grand Trunk Railway.

5th. That attempts were made to patch up that part of road, but ceased finally altogether.

6th. That the failure to run the road had been a most serious loss to business men in the town and great inconvenience to the community generally.

7th. They state a wide area of several thousand square miles and a large population, probably 25,000, are deprived of benefits of a very valuable character.

8th. They also state that mining experts assure them that if mining properties were properly worked along that portion of the road would pay the road to operate it, andthat pay the road to operate it, and that the mines would be worked if the railroad gave facilities for shipping.

And the prayer of the petition asks "that the Government will take such steps as they deem proper to compel the Grand Trunk Railway Company to carry out their agreement with the Dominion Government to construct and operate said extension from Madoc to Eldorado, or refund the subsidy in order that it may be utilized for the purposes for which it was voted by Parliament."

If the above claim is good, why should not the Ontario proportion of bonus be also accounted for, and also the share that was given by Madoc? Railways in Canada are having prosperous times, why should there not be a law compelling them to keep their promises, the same as private individuals?

The developments following many insurance companies both in the States and Canada points to the importance of compelling large corporations to live up to the rules of common honesty.

A Lively Runaway.

At a few minutes after 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon a lively runaway occurred. A team of horses belonging to Mr. P. Milne, attached to a wagon, became frightened on Moira street and off they started at a record clip. In turning to make the upper bridge the box of the wagon fell off and this seemed to still more frighten the animals, who went flying over the bridge and up Mill street. They were stopped near the junction of Mill street and Canifton road. No person was hurt and no damage was done.

All Quiet at Picton.

"There is no truth in the statement from Kingston that there is trouble in the church in Picton in reference to Rev. W. L. Armitage. (Signed), R. E. Wright, D. J. Parker, churchwardens."

Mr. Parker said the story was the work of some malicious person, and the congregation was quite satisfied with the statement made from the pulpit regarding his marriage.

The receipts for the year were $234,468.56, and the surplus for the year was $52,421.27. The assets total $433,482.76. There has been advancement, growth and development in every direction during the past year. The membership on June 30th was 20,142, increase for year 1,742. The total insurance in force is $25,123,000. The deaths last year totalled 131. The association will adopt a new classification of risks; larger investments will be made into the higher class of securities. An official paper will not yet be issued.

Four disability claims were passed last year; only one death was recorded as a result of the San Francisco earthquake, though quite a number of members are there. The death rate per 1,000 was 6.46. The steel chest containing the association's securities has been transferred to the Ontario Bank vaults.

Bishop Disregarded Congregation's Choice

Kingston, Ont., July 18. — Last night, the committee appointed at a meeting of St. George's Cathedral, to visit Bishop Mills to present three names from which to choose a rector, met his lordship. After stating the object of their mission, they mentioned the name of Rev. Canon Starr, as being the congregation's special choice.

"You may stop there," exclaimed the bishop, "I don't want to hear Canon Starr's name mentioned again in this connection."

It is understood that Rev. Frank Dumoulin, of Chicago, son of the bishop of Niagara is the bishop's choice, and that an offer of the rectorship has been sent to him.

Decorate for the Old Boys' Reunion

To the Editor of The Intelligencer;

Sir,—At the Old Boys' Reunion last year we all remember how beautiful our city was, not alone from the standpoint of natural beauty, but from the decorations so lavishly used. It was the bunting, the flags and the music that enthused everybody. The decorations, half the battle, made the strangers proud of their old home and the citizens likewise proud. Too apt are we to forget the necessity of repeating, to a certain extent, the decorations, when we are visited by the Toronto contingent this year. True, they would not expect such a showing as before: probably they will expect nothing of the sort, but, just as sure as they come, so surely will they be disappointed in the "Second Act" of this reunion, if there should be no display of decorations. They will wonder what is the matter. Why it is that the old home is not so attractive this year and may not realize that it was only the lack of decorations. Let the citizens, therefore, unite and commence Friday morning with the decorations, as widely as they can carry them out, to make this second home-coming for the Toronto boys a successful one. Nearly all have the decorations they had last year, no extra money need be expended. The labor expended in making the show will not be great and we all realize what a difference it will make in the success and spirit of this holiday for our friends and how much more satisfactory for ourselves if we go to this little extra trouble. I, among many, feel that it would be wise to have our two local bands engaged for a good portion of the two days, Saturday and Monday. A little money spent this way would be easily raised by subscriptions, and would be the strongest kind of a feature for the continuation of such reunions and a good line of advertising done in a quiet way.

Found Real Irish Shamrocks.

Tweed News; Mr. Wm. Breen, blacksmith, of Tweed, came across a rare curiosity on Thursday last in the shape of some real Irish Shamrock, found growing near his blacksmith shop at the foot of Victoria street. The peculiar coincidence of the finding of the shamrock was that it was discovered on the 12th of July. The leaves are decidedly different from the leaves of the ordinary shamrock grown in houses in this country, and from all appearances is the genuine Irish shamrock.

Education In Afghanistan.

Lahore, Punjab, British India, July 19.—The Amir of Afghanistan has issued a notable pronouncement on the subject of education in his dominion. He says education is retrogressing, but the fault does not rest with the teachers, but with the Government officials, who discourage education, dreading its leveling tendencies. The amir warns the high-born officials that they must either change their attitude in this connection, or be changed. Henceforth, he says, education will be the sole path to state service.

Doctor Dies of Drug Overdose.

Toronto, July 19.—From an overdose of morphine, his addiction to which had nearly proved fatal several times, Dr. William A. McIntosh, son of Allan McIntosh, 120 Huron street, and honor graduate of Trinity University, died at the Western Hospital yesterday. He returned home three months ago from Bear Creek, Minnesota, where he had built up a large practice, for a rest before opening an office in Cleveland, O., to-day. He had purchased tickets for himself, wife and infant daughter, and was to leave on the afternoon boat. Before noon his mother discovered him sitting unconscious in the parlor. She telephoned for Dr. Carveth, who hurried him to the Western Hospital, where all efforts were made to save him, without success. He was 29 years of age.

MASONIC GRAND LODGE.

Toronto, July 19.—A thousand or more members of the Grand Lodge of Canada A. F. and A. M. were in attendance at the fifty-first annual communication at Massey Hall, yesterday morning. Ald J. J. Graham, chairman of the civic reception committee, extended a welcome to the delegates and Bro. A. E. Hagerman, W. T. A. of St. Andrew's Lodge read an address from the city lodges to the grand master.

The grand master reviewed the work of the past year. The craft was in a healthy condition, the membership was increasing and the income ($34,377) was $1,300 greater than last year. The total membership was now over 37,000, an increase of 2,000.

He made reference to the deaths of R. T. Walkem, K. C., Senator Fulford, Walter Barwick, K. C. The grand lodge of Canada had contributed $1,000 to the masons in 'Frisco, at the time of the disaster.

The report of the grand secretary of Hamilton showed that up to July 1st, $30,289 had been collected for the semi-centennial fund. During the year $4,694 was received from certificates, $16,758 from dues, $5,210 from fees and $4,280 in the bank.

Most Worshipful Bro. Col. A. A. Stevenson was presented with a gold medal on the anniversary of his fiftieth year as a mason, thirty-eight of which was in connection with the grand lodge of Canada. Senator Kerr read the address.

At the afternoon session, Aubrey White, chairman of the committee on the condition of Masonry, urged the necessity for the selection of God-fearing and forceful men for the position of district deputies. The amount distributed by the grand lodge in benevolence during the year amounted to $33,000, and the work was being extended.

The auditors' report shows total receipts of $34,377 and expenditures in excess of all receipts of about $4,000. The grand lodge held securities amounting to $110,000.

The inspector of benevolence grants was allowed a yearly stipend of $750.

WOMEN GO OVER DAM.

Lose Control of Boat and Shoot the Natural Chutes Unhurt.

Brockville, July 19.—Carried over a dam with a fall of ten feet, and hurled among rocks, was the unpleasant experience of two Merrickville women, Mrs. Haskins and Mrs. Churchill. They were enjoying a row on the Rideau in company with Mrs. Haskin's little son, Bert. They lost control of their boat by losing an oar and the skiff was carried over the dam.

The lad managed to grasp a pier in passing down the stream and held to it long enough to be jerked out. Then he scrambled out in time to see his mother and Mrs. Churchill go over the dam.

The former jumped out in making the descent and was miraculously landed on a boulder 50 feet from the waterfall, where she was rescued. The other woman clung to the skiff, which did not capsize and she, too, was taken ashore safely.

The ladies have since been under the care of a physician, but are progressing nicely towards recovery.

THIS MEMBER CONSISTENT.

When Government Breaks His Promise He Resigns.

Winnipeg, July 19.—J. T. Gordon, the member for South Winnipeg, has sent in his resignation to the local Government. Mr. Gordon's action is the outcome of a squabble between the city and the Government over taxation of C. P. R. property.

Mr. Gordon promised the city that no license would be granted to the new C. P. R. Hotel, Alexandria, until the taxation question was settled. With the question still unsettled, the Government has issued a license; hence the resignation.

The C. P. R.'s new, palatial hotel, "The Alexandria," will be thrown open for guests for the first time to-day.

He Must Go Back.

London, July 19.—The Privy Council has dismissed the appeal in Harsha vs. United States. J. B. Mackenzie was for the appellant; the defendant was unrepresented.

SALVADOREAN TRIUMPH

10,000 Guatemalans, After Ten Hours' Battle, Defeated.

Rich and Poor Serve In Salvadorean Army, and One Man, Worth Half a Million, Gives His Life to His Country at the Age of 30—Armistice In Effect Now, and Commissioners Are on Their Way to Sea Conference.

San Salvador, July 17.—(Delayed in transmission.)—Shortly before the armistice was agreed to, over 10,000 Guatemalan soldiers made a desperate attack on the Salvadorean positions, by way of Metapan. The Guatemalan artillery, stationed on high plains fronting the Salvadorean positions, cannonaded the latter unceasingly, though the bad quality of the shells and the poor aim of the artillerymen resulted in the Salvadorean forces escaping without many casualties.

At about 3 p. m., in the midst of a torrential rain, the Guatemalans' fire increased all along the line, and the Guatemalan infantry attacked the Salvadoreans in close columns, endeavoring to dislodge them from the positions held by Gen. Tercero and Col. Hernandes Artega. The battle lasted ten hours, and eventually resulted in a triumph for the Salvadorean army.

Patriotic Spirit.

Never in the history of any country has there been such a patriotic spirit shown as in Salvador at the present time. Rich and poor are serving alike, as was shown in the engagement yesterday. In one of the engagements, Adalberto Guirola, son of the millionaire, Angel Guirola, lost his life. He was a graduate of West Point, and when the war broke out enlisted, with thousands of his countrymen. He was about 30 years of age, and worth half a million dollars in his own right. This is not the only case of rich men enlisting. There are members of almost every rich family in Salvador now at the front.

Peace Commissioners.

The peace commissioners of Salvador are Dr. J. R. Pacus and Senor Gallegas. They will go on board the U. S. cruiser Marblehead at Acajutla, tomorrow, with the commissioners of Honduras, and proceed to San Jose, Guatemala, where the other commissioners will be taken on board, and the party will put to sea and draw up and sign the treaty of peace.

Armistice In Effect.

Washington, July 19.—The armistice between the warring Central America Republics went into effect at 6 o'clock yesterday morning. Mr. Munoz, the Gautemalan Minister, called at the State Department yesterday and announced that he had been advised by his Government of the selection of three commissioners and a secretary to represent Guatemala at the peace conference. They will go to San Jose, Guatemala, in time to board the Marblehead, which is expected to reach there today.

There are Teas and Teas

There is what we might call the up-grade and the down-grade. Most teas come under the latter heading—not that they were'nt once good, but the average dealer buys a box of tea that he keeps under the counter where it gets stale and loses most of its goodness. Stroud's teas are of the up-grade variety. We receive our teas fresh every week from our head-quarters in Montreal, and while we have them in our store we keep them in tins that are practically air tight, but we don't have them long enough for them to get stale.

POWER PERMITS.

Two U. S. Companies Get Temporary Permission to Import From Canada 25,000 Horse Power Each.

Washington, July 20.—In accordance with the act granting authority to the Secretary of War to regulate and control the waters of Niagara River for the preservation of Niagara Falls, Secretary Taft has announced that temporary permits will be granted power companies to take the following amounts of water:

Niagara Falls Power Co., 8,600 cubic feet per second.

Niagara Power Co., 4,000 cubic feet a second.

The Niagara, Lockport and Ontario Power Co. is granted permission to receive into the United States electrical current equivalent to 25,000 horse-power daily from the Ontario Power Co. of Niagara Falls, Canada, and the Niagara Falls Power Co. not to exceed 25,000 horse-power of electrical current daily.

These last two permits are the only ones granted for the taking of electricity generated in Canada into the United States, and the Secretary of War states that it will be necessary for him to make a thorough investigation before granting permanent permits for such transmission.

Secretary Tafts statmement shows that under the law the amount of water which he can permit to be taken is limited to 15,600 cubic feet a second, and he says that it does not seem to be necessary at this time to grant permits to companies which are not actually in operation.

Cries of "Murder" Previously Startle Residents Near Railway.

Orillia, July 20.—About midnigha Tuesday night cries of "murder" awakened the residents near the railway station.

Shortly after the crew of a freight train found the mangled remains of a man, over whom their train had passed, lying beside the track.

He was identified as Robert Barbour, who had been round town for a few days, and had been employed on the new C. P. R. line at Coldwater for a short timge.

An inquest was opened last night and adjourned until Wednesday afternoon next, when the conductor and others will give evidence.

A Cromwell For a Czar.

Will Russia Duplicate Protector's Treatment Of Charles I.?

Civil War Possible at Any Moment—All Russia in a Turmoil--Counsellors of the Czar are Divided and His Majesty Hesitates to Dissolve Parliament--Troops Powerless to Cope With Peasants.

St. Petersburg, July 20.—(3 a. m.)—An address to the country setting forth the attitude of the Parliament on the agrarian question and the reasons for the delay in the adoption of a resolution of the problem was adopted by the lower House at 2 o'clock this morning, but in an emasculated form, with changes designed to minimize the revolutionary features of the document as an appeal to the people against the Government and to shift the emphasis to a note of pacification, in which the peasantry were exhorted to refrain from excesses and violence and to await Parliament's decision.

Group of Toil Didn't Vote.

The vote was taken at the close of a 13-hour sitting, in which it seemed probable that the address would be rejected entirely by the combined votes of the right and left wings of the House again the centre party. The address was saved by the abstention from voting of 101 members of the Group of Toil, and sympathizers with that faction who favored a more radical measure. There were only 124 votes, all constitutional democrats for the address and 53 against it. The minority comprised Count Hayden and Michael Stakovich, a marshal of the nobility, and other members of the right with a few extremists from the Socialist camp.

The Czar Hesitates.

At the council held at Peterhof Wednesday night the camarilla came out strongly in favor of dissolving Parliament, but, according to the best information, the Emperor hesitated, and at the moment of adjournment refused to agree to a dissolution, though his final decision was postponed.

Rely on Intervention.

Nevertheless, the more moderate faction of the Constitutional Democrats, comprehending that the Government can hardly avoid the issue, shrink from making the appeal to the country, which may involve a climb-down. They seriously believe that the advocates of a dissolution of Parilment, realizing that making the appeal would be equivalent to a declaration of civil war, count upon the active intervention of Austria and Germany, which, according to the official Rossia, have agreed in principle on sending troops across the border to aid in the suppression of an agrarian uprising, should the Russian Government formally request it.

The Rossia's announcement created a tremendous sensation. It is stated that the decision of the two neighboring powers was based on fear that the execution of the principles of the confiscation of their property in Russia would constitute a danger to them.

"The King's Head."

The Rech declares that if the Government adopts the desperate expedient of calling in Austrian and German troops to put down a civil war, the result will not be the same as in 1849, when a Russian army saved the Hapsburg dynasty. The paper declares that the people will rally under the banner of Parliament, as they did in England under that of the English Parliament at the time of Charles I, "with probably a similar result, namely, the loss of the King's head."

Stoessel Condemned.

The commission appointed to investigate the surrender of Port Arthur, recommends that Gen. Stoessel, the former commander, be dismissed from the army and shot, that Lieut.-Gen. Fock, who commanded the fourth Siberian division at Port Arthur, be dismissed from the army and undergo a year's hard labor; that Gen. Reiss, chief of staff of Gen. Stoessel, be dismissed and banished, and that Admiral Alexieff, former viceroy in the Far East, Lieut.-Gen. Smirnoff, commander of the Port Arthur fortress, and Gen. Vernander be reprimanded. The formal trial of these officers will take place shortly.

An attempt was made yesterday to assassinate Count Todleben, aide-de-camp to Emperor Nicholas, the revolver bullet grazing his head. The would-be assassin escaped.

Troops Powerless.

Moscow, July 20.—A landlord, fleenig from Bobrov (in the Province of Veroneseh, where a peasant uprising has taken place), has arrived here and gives a frightful picture of the devastation. He describes the losses in the province as collossal.

The troops are powerless to cope with the peasants, who are marching in large bands, destroying practically everything. Not more than one-tenth of the estates are spared. The movement was started by the refusal of the landlords in the northern part of the Bobrov district to agree to an advance of wages to the farm women.

Town in Flames.

Samara, Russia, July 20.—The whole Town of Syzran, Province of Simbrisk, is in flames. The inhabitants are fleeing to Samara and Saratoff.

Syzran is situated on a river of that name near its confluence with the Volga, and 70 miles north of Simbirsk. It is a busy commercial and industrial place, having a population of over 32,000.

Forest Man Hurt.

Detroit, July 20.—Stepping off a moving Woodward avenue car late Wednesday night, William Gammon, 31 years old, of Forest, Ont., was thrown to the pavement with great force, sustaining injuries, which may result in his death.

£200,000 For the Poor.

London, July 20.—(C. A. P.)—In a speech in the Commons, announcing the appropriation of £200,000 in aid of the unemployed, John Burns approved the £6,000 last year in emigrating 250 persons.

Prison For 18 Months.

Galt, July 20.—Judge Blake yesterday sentenced J. J. Groves to 18 months in the Central Prison for stabbing William West on the 10th inst.

Roadmaster Fatally Injured.

St. Thomas, Ont., July 20.—L. E. Switzer, roadmaster of the Grand Trunk and the Wabash, who was run over at the "Y" at Glencoe, Wednesday morning, his left leg being cut off and his right foot badly crushed, died yesterday morning. Switzer, who was about 40 years old, had been roadmaster here only about two weeks, having been previously stationed at Niagara Falls.

Censure For C. P. R.

Galt, July 20.—The inquest on the recent triple fatality on the C. P. R. at "Calamity Curve" occupied five hours and resulted in a verdict of censure on the railway company for running an ill-equipped and recklessly-handled work train. The jury recommended that the Railway Commission order a straight track in place of the curve.

The Best Foods For Hot Weatner.

The superheated term presents the problem of what diet is best for one at this season, and nature unerringly indicates in her profusion of fruit and vegetables the diet which is best for the average human system, with the further advantage of furnishing it in such plenty as to permit the poorer people to enjoy the boon.

In an editorial on summer foods, the New York Herald points out that during the heated term nature wisely tempers the appetite for meats and other solids and contents us with lighter garden stuffs in their season, which in torrid zones constitute the bulk of the diet. "Eggs, milk, cereals and fish," it says, "supply most of our needs for substantial nourishment, while the fruits and vegetables do the rest." The Herald continues;

The food value of fruit depends mainly upon the amount of sugar, salts and vegetable acids they contain. The relative proportions of these ingredients vary greatly and have a corresponding influence on nutrition and digestibility.

The orange is perhaps the leading favorite, combining substance, flavor, sweetness and due acidity. The apple ranks next, but in its raw state is sometimes indigestible. It is perhaps the only common fruit that is improved by cooking.

Peaches are comparatively poor in sugar, have very small nutritive value, being mostly, composed of gum, vegetable jelly and acid juices. As a rule they are easily digested.

The banana is the most substantial of all fruits, has the highest sustaining properties and is generally easily assimilated.

Cherries and the various berries are particularly relishable because of the large quantity of sugar they contain.

Pears, grapes and melons, delicious in their way, have also little more than flavor to recommend them as articles of diet. Of course none of these should be eaten unripe or overripe, as in either case they may cause digestive derangements. Their ideal state is when they are fully matured and freshly plucked.

Among vegetables the potato, mainly composed of starch, is the all-round stand-by, but it owes its reputation more to its agreeable combination with meats, beans, peas, and other proteid foods than to any intrinsic virtue of its own. The various other roots, such as the carrot, beet, parsnip, turnip, oyster plant and radish, are also quite poor in proteids and contain but a small amount of other nutriments. All are, however, valuable, not only in providing a variety that stimulates appetite but are of distinct service in preventing that particular form of mal-nutrition known as scurvy, at one time the scourge of army and navy.

Cabbage is a veritable bugbear to many who might enjoy an otherwise relishable dish. Raw, boiled or fermented, it is the horror of the dyspeptic, but to the Teutonic stomach it is more than a welcome guest.

Boiled spinach, however, an equally German dish, has no such objections and is now much in fashion with the medical profession as a combined food and medicine for torpid digestion.

The cooling salads are deservedly popular. The lettuce family, cresses and the like are wholesome, digestible and agreeable to the system. Asparagus is rightly prized for its delicious flavor. Even the onion, the despised interloper, is a most honest contributor to any feast and by its volatile oil acts as a sufficient stomachic stimulant. The tomato ranks equally high as a relish, but is most unjustly under the ban as a provoker of rheumatism.

Thus for the summer feeder there is truly an embarrassment of opportunities. The best of all is that fruit and vegetables in the raw state retain their original flavor and are all within reach when we appreciate and need them most.

But for all that can be said in favor of mostly vegetable diet for the hotter months animal food in some shape is required by most workers. One meal of meat, fish or poultry is usually sufficient for such, unless the bodily labor is very severe. In this, as in other matters of feeding, the appetite has a rule of its own that defies all theories and is a law unto itself.

It was a mistake on the part of the Council to let Ald. Knox go away. The Old Boys, when they come tomorrow, will surely want to see the man who raised the dog tax.

How would it be to have a decorated automobile parade on Monday morning? Start something, somebody.

And why not have a massed band concert on the park on Monday evening. Couldn't the musicians drop their differences and tear off a few bars of "Home, Sweet Home" together, for the sake of old lang syne?

The Ottawa Journal thus discourses of a matter which is (and probably will remain) a crying need in Belleville; "Any person who may have noticed what has been going on at the free civic swimming bath at the foot of Bank street these last few days must have become an enthusiastic advocate of such places. The boys have been swarming at it like flies. There ought to be another public bath. The present one is convenient to a considerable part of upper town. A bath convenient to lower town is desirable next year—one in the neighborhood, say, of the Empress wharf, or perhaps lower down, at the Rideau falls. Eventually there ought to be a third on the Rideau canal, for the southern end of the city. Then there will not be drowning accidents there, such as occurred Monday."

Sir Thomas Lipton talks of starting a canning factory in Winnipeg. Sir Tom must want to run opposition to Picton.

It seems that the hoisting of the Stars and Stripes on the Winnipeg City Hall on July 4 was the result of a caretaker's mistake. That caretaker should take a little more are in future.

Just in this connection it is to be hoped that none of our citizens will feel called on to hang out the Yankee flag among their decorations for the home-coming of the Toronto Old Boys and Girls. Signs multiply that U. S. people are not by any means partial to seeing the Union Jack on their streets; there is no more call for the Stars and Stripes on the streets of Canada. The old Union Jack is good enough for us.

It may interest the Health Inspector of this city to learn that, although there is a law against it, some of the growers are bringing berries to this city in very old and dirty boxes. A party claims that he saw berries emptied out of a box last night, the bottom of which was black with age and with what looked suspiciously like blue mould on it. People who sell berries should be made to observe the law. Surely they can afford to, with the fruit at its present price.

Peterboro business men are now agitating for the publication of the assessment roll. It makes for fairness and equity, and should be done everywhere.

Many young ladies in this city will be interested in the following remarks, made by a prominent medical man; "There's nothing that will cause the hair on the arms, or, for that matter on any other part of the body, to grow as quickly as will exposure to the sun and wind. In hot climates savages wear no hats and their growth of hair is most luxuriant. The girls that are now wearing short sleeves simply to be in the fashion, will regret it in a couple of years, when they see long hair growing on their arms."

The fact that the lower portion of Front St. will be watered during the Toronto Old Boys' visit is gratifying. The Intelligencer is glad to see its suggestion acted upon.

Do something to entertain the old boys and girls while they are here. If you can't do anything else, start your graphophone going and keep her buzzing night and day. ONLY THE FRINGE.

(Mail and Empire.)

Of the scandals revealed during the recent session of Parliament Mr. Borden says; "The enquiries touched but a fringe of the irregularities and abuses which undoubtedly prevail, but they laid bare sufficient to justify certain conclusions." It is to be hoped that at the next session the campaign against robbery will be resumed. We have reached the fringe of the Laurier system, and the public will not be content until the nest of roguery is completely rooted out.

Lizard in Breast

Paris, July 20. — A story of a woman with a lizard in her breast has greatly excited Parisians, and has caused all sorts of curious and interesting discoveries to be made — some by eminent medical men and others by nerve fiends.

A certain Madame Lemaitre went to Prof. Richelot, surgeon at the Cochrane Hospital, and explained to him that a lizard was devouring her interior She even gave the species and size of the voracious monster, but when questioned as to how he got there the good lady could not tell. The doctor being a wise man, put Mme. Lemaitre to sleep, and, having made a slight wound in her side, sent an attendant to buy a live lizard. This done, he waited for his patient to regain consciousness.

Her first words were; "Did you find him, doctor?" The doctor replied by showing her the reptile, for which he had just paid two francs on the Boulevard.

"Are you sure it did not leave any eggs inside of me?" asked the sufferer.

Mme. Lemaitre wanted to keep her lizard, so she entrusted it to the care of a relation until she could leave the hospital. This relation runs a cremerie, and he made business pretty brisk by exposing the lizard in his shop window. But now the newspapers have got hold of the story, and spoiled the advertisement, and probably also the cure of Dr. Richelot.

The day after the publication of this story, another woman went to one of the Paris hospitals and explained that she had swallowed a watch spring, when she was ten years old, and that it had just "run down" and was causing her most awful agony. The woman's manner was so convincing that the doctor on duty examined her with the X-rays. Finding nothing unusual, he hurriedly opened his watch, tore out the spring and was just in time to show it to his patient as she regained consciousness.

But this story has a serious side. It caused Dr. Dieulafoy, an eminent professor of the Hotel Dieu, to make a communication to the Academie de Medicine with regard to the large number of people who are operated upon for appendicitis when they have some slight affection of the intestines which does not necessitate an operation at all. The professor said that these cases are very frequent, and that in a large percentage of them all the patient got for his lost time and spent money was a scar in some place where he could not show it.

Predictions of the Future

The prophets foretell a great change in the food of a few generations hence, compared with the viands of to-day, as population grows we may tend to become vegetarians, nutists, and fruitarians, if for no other reason than that double the land is required to sustain one man on meat than on wheat. The time is approaching when the human race will perhaps live far more largely on the fruits of trees. An acre of banana plantation will feed twenty-five human beings, while a potato field of the same size would support only two, and a wheat farm, only one. A grove of full-grown chestnut trees will yield six times as much nourishment per acre as any cereal crop. With the reclaiming of desert areas, date palms, banana and other fruit trees will result in a vast supply of food which will represent mankind's horn of plenty.

CRICKET.

The Wonderful W. G. Grace.

The vitality of W. G. Grace is a subject for an epic, writes T. P. O'Connor, in his new weekly, "T.P. O." Last week he was leading a Gentlemen of England eleven for the return match against this year's strong Cambridge eleven. In the first match at Cambridge he scored 64 and 44 not out, and fielded and bowled nearly the whole of the second day under a cloudless sky. He was up early enough on the Tuesday morning to enable him to have a good game at bowls, see the horses exercised on Newmarket Heath, and to drive some miles in the country before reaching Fenner's for the day's cricket. On the Wednesday he was first on the ground, fielded twenty minutes, batted while the necessary 111 runs were obtained, caught the first train back to town and was bowling the same evening on the Crystal Palace greens in the London County Bowling Club's annual tournament, for which there were 106 entries. And in less than five weeks' time he will have seen his fifty-eighth birthday. But he has not reached middle-age yet.

TO KILL THE DANDRUFF GERM.

Is the Only Possible Way of Having An Effective Cure.

If you see a woman or a man with luxuriant glossy hair, you may be sure neither has dandruff to amount to anything. In nearly every case where women and men have thin brittle hair, they owe it to dandruff. There are hundreds of preparations that "claim" to cure dandruff, but Newbro's Herpicide tells you that dandruff is the result of a germ burrowing into the scalp, and that permanent cure of dandruff and its consequent falling and baldness, can only be had by killing the germ; and there is no other preparation that will destroy that germ but Newbro's Herpicide. "Destroy the cause, and you remove the effect."

THE KING'S LETTER.

IN WHICH HE REGRETFULLY DECLINED TO VISIT CANADA.

From Lord Elgin to Lord Grey.
Downing Street,
7th July, 1906.

My Lord,—As requested in Your Lordship's despatch of 25th May, I have submitted to His Majesty the Joint Address to the King from the Senate and House of Commons of Canada expressing their loyalty and devotion to His Majesty and praying that His Majesty and Her Majesty the Queen will be graciously pleased to visit the Dominion.

His Majesty has been pleased to receive the address very graciously.

I need scarcely remind Your Lordship of two circumstances which must not be overlooked in the consideration of these proposals. In the first place the current business of the Empire, which is continuous and incessant, impress a heavy tax on the time and strength of its Sovereign—and it is well known that the absence of His Majesty from this country for any length of time is difficult, if not impossible, except under very definite limitations and restrictions—even when considerations of health and the need for comparative rest render it expedient.

In the second place, it must be remembered that there are practically no limits, within the habitable globe, to the distances which must be travelled to reach all parts of the British Empire, and that it would be difficult for the King to visit one important part of His Dominions and decline to visit another.

It was no doubt these two facts which influenced Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, with wise foresight, to determine that Her eldest son should, in his youth, visit the various Colonies and Possessions of the Empire of which he was one day to become the ruler; and accordingly His Majesty, while Prince of Wales, paid the visit to Canada to which reference is made in this address.

Following the same counsels the present Prince of Wales, and other members of the Royal Family, have been untiring in visiting even the most distant parts of the Empire, and have always been received as representatives of His Majesty with the utmost tenderness and loyalty.

I am commanded by His Majesty to make mention of these considerations because He would wish His loyal subjects in Canada and especially the Senate and House of Commons to understand that He is deeply touched and gratified by the terms of their address and by the desire expressed that with Her Majesty The Queen He should again visit the Dominion. His Majesty retains a vivid recollection, even after the lapse of many years, of His former visit, of the beauties and interest of the country and of the enthusiasm and loyalty which everywhere greeted Him. He is well aware that it would be difficult to recognize the features of Canada He then learned to know in the Great Dominion, whose rapid growth in all that contributes to the development and prosperity of a nation has been so astonishing, and no greater triumph could be offered to the head of any Empire than to be Himself the witness of a progress so remarkable.

In spite, however, of the many strong inducements which prompt Him to gratify the loyal wishes of His Canadian subjects, I am to say that the King feels unable at present to entertain the idea of a journey to Canada. Whether the difficulties suggested in an early portion of this despatch, and others which I need not particularize, could be overcome, it is premature to discuss now. But His Majesty desires that Your Lordship should make it known to all that He is prevented by the necessities of His position and not by any lack of appreciation of the loyalty and devotion of the people of Canada to His Throne and Person.

I have, etc.,

Christened With River Boyne Water

Toronto, July 20.—Christened with the real water from the River Boyne were three youngsters at Parkdale early last night. The christened were James Harold Thompson, aged 6; William Ralph Thompson, nearly aged 5, and Nora Thompson, who is half-past two.

They are the children of Mr. and Mrs. J. Orville Thompson, 1588 West King street, where the unique event took place before an admiring throng of two grandmothers, a grandfather, proud parents and Dr. R. B. Orr, the family stand-by, as referee. Mrs. Merner and Mrs. (Capt.) Thompson were the grandmothers.

Nothing could be more fitting to the occasion than the rank of the christener, who was the Grand Chaplain of the Imperial Orange Council of the World, and, incidentally, the Deputy Grand Chaplain of the Grand Orange Lodge of Ireland, as well as grand chief of the Good Templars of Ireland, Rev. Molyneux Black, who has made so many friends during the triennial meeting just closed was the person who did the trick. He is a Congregationalist minister in Ireland, but the Church of England ceremony for a christening with Boyne water, is pie for him, and in about 20 minutes it was all over and a pretty thorough job. Mr. Black acknowledges without self-praise that he thinks it was one of the finest little bits of work he ever did. Little Nora kicked a bit because she only got one drop on her nose, but Boyne water is scarce out here and a youngster of two and a half can't expect much.

The water used was dipped from the Boyne by the grandfather of the kiddies 23 years ago, and some of it had been used for the christening of the father of the children. Rev. D. Perry, who was the Grand Chaplain of British America, attended to that little naming affair 22 years since in the town of St. Mary's, where young Mr. Thompson was born, while Capt. Thompson, the present grandad, first saw the light in Stratford longer ago than he cares to tell, for he is now with the department of agriculture as special immigration agent for Ontario, and has only recently returned from the Old Country, where he has been with Mrs. Thompson since the beginning of the year. They met Rev. Mr. Black in Ireland, and the minister's interest in Canada created a firm friendship, which resulted in Mr. Black being Capt. Thompson's guest at 51 Oxford street, during his stay here.

The Boyne water used yesterday is as clear as it was 23 years ago. It has been securely corked, and there is plenty left to christen a fourth generation of Thompsons, which, it is to be hoped, may some day become a necessity, and the pleasant duty of Rev. Mr. Black or some other great chaplain to officiate.

And Now The Circus.

BIG BARNUM & BAILEY CIRCUS TO EXHIBIT IN THIS CITY IN A SHORT TIME.

It has been definitely announced that the Barnum & Bailey Greatest Show on Earth is to exhibit in this city on Wednesday, August 8. This will be gratifying news to all who appreciate and enjoy a high-class modern circus performance. The Barnum & Bailey show, according to all preliminary reports, not only retains its supremacy as the leader in arenic amusements, but even a cursory glance at the list of this year's big features compels the conclusion that its own former records have been surpassed. It seems to be an established fact that when the American public wants to see the latest European sensations it must go to the Barnum & Bailey show. From time to time during the winter months newspaper readers have their interest aroused by stories of remarkable achievements by daring performers in the Old-World arenas. These performances are often so remarkable that important American newspapers devote columns, and even pages, of their Sunday magazines to describing and illustrating them. This is not done through any solicitation on the part of interested persons, but because the feats are so startling as to constitute "news" of the most interesting and important character. The public reads of these notable acts, dimly wonders, perhaps, whether they will ever be seen in America; and then, almost before the first impression of wonder has passed away, a definite announcement is made that the furore-creating sensation has been secured as a feature with the Barnum & Bailey show. The amount of clever work and the extent of the tremendous expenditure involved in securing these epoch-making acts can only be conjectured.

This season's talk-compelling sensations embrace the exciting "Two Twirls of Terror," in which two death-defying bicyclists turn complete revolutions on their wheels while shooting through space; the "Dip of Death," in which a beautiful young American girl "loops the gap" in an automobile, and several other "thrillers" that have created unlimited discussion.

It is evident, however, that these startling acts are not permitted to interfere with the general excellence of the circus performance, for the roster of great riders, acrobats and aerialists is an exceptionally long and varied one. There are also scores of original and novel offerings, quite different from anything hitherto presented in the American circus arena; the trained animal features are described as unusually novel and effective; there is an amusing infusion of comedy by a company of up-to-date clowns; the old Roman races are revived on a colossal scale, and a notably complete collection of rare animals offers an interesting study to the crowds that visit the big show. This year's spectacle is entirely new and in keeping with the spirit of the times. It is entitled "Peace," and is described as the most brilliant allegorical and military display ever devised.

There will be no parade by the Barnum & Bailey circus, but a sensational free show is promised for the hour prior to the opening of each performance.

Even the milk of human kindness may contain a few germs.

It doesn't seem half so hard to pay your debts when you haven't any.

Twelve Thousand Men for Ontario.

THAT NUMBER OF IMMIGRANTS CAME IN TO RELIEVE THE FARM LABOR PROBLEM.

Toronto, July 19. — That the present has been a fruitful year for Ontario for useful immigration was shown in an interview yesterday by Mr. Thomas Southworth, Director of Colonization. Mr. Southworth estimated that 12,000 men had been placed on the farms of Ontario this season, of which over 5,000 were handled by his department; nearly as many by the Salvation Army, and the balance by Dominion Government officials. This is an increase in the aggregate over any previous year.

At the same time, though his branch had directly handled considerably more immigrants than usual, yet fewer had gone on the farms as farm laborers. The immigrant arrivals had included more mechanics than usual. Besides, of those who settled on the farms in the first place, not a few afterwards left, and went to occupations offering higher wages. Chief among the diverting attractions in this regard were the railways, who are doing much construction work, and who are always requiring more men for maintenance of way.

"I find," said Mr. Southworth, "that experienced men coming from the old country have an idea they will get extraordinary wages here. An ordinary Scotch farm hand, single, expects $35 a month and board. No agricultural workman from England or Scotland is worth that when he first comes here. He has to get accustomed to our methods of farming before he is at all comparable to a Canadian farm hand."

Mr Southworth, however, said the class of immigrants this year was better than last, and those a year ago were above the ordinary standard. At the present time he said he had applications standing for 1,000 to 1,200 men wanted by farmers in Ontario.

Some Sensible Sentiment

Now and then it is gratifying, says the Brockville Times, to read some fair and honest comment upon the revolutionary war of the United States in a United States newspaper. It is refreshing to find occasionally a United States newspaper which will divest itself of the usual frenzied Anglophobia and tell honest truth about the United States and Great Britain. In a recent issue the Brooklyn Eagle said of the revolution:

There was nothing to revolute against. The colonies were more independent than the union is to-day. They made their own laws and owned their alien governors by retaining the salary right. The governors were their employees, paid to obtain such laws as the colonies required; like the lobbyists of modern industrial combines. The revolution was not a revolution against tyranny, but a typical American determination to hold fast to privileges unlawfully acquired. Unlawfully because by general law a country owes allegiance to the mother country that protects it. In our case the mother country was too busy fighting France to claim its rights. When France was finally beaten out of Canada England tried to reclaim its rights. That was when we stepped up. We sought, not to get independence, but to regain the independence we had already got by taking advantage of England's external worries. We were right, so was England. We won out. We got worse government, and have worse to come, but we became a nation. We should probably have become a nation just the same without revolution, as Australia and Canada have practically become; we should have avoided the civil war (England suppressed slavery in 1833). We should have had honest government and been a genuine republic, as England has been and is to-day. All that, however, was well lost in exchange for the spirit of self-reliance, enterprise and aggressiveness which were forced on us by independence.

BEFORE AND AFTER.

Before,

Ere John and Annie married were,
And she became, his blushing bride,
The sun was always bright and fair,
When he was strolling by her side;
And he was happy as could be—
He loved this maid so full of grace;
It was enough for him to see
The beauty that illumed her face.

And she was happy night and day,
For John was her knight errant then;
The hours were long with him away—
She longed for him to come again.
She ran to meet him at the gate,
And sang of joy that was to be;
It was enough for her to wait
His coming, shortly after tea.

After.

But they are married now, and he Thinks little of her pretty face;
'Tis not enough for him to see
Her beauty lighting up the placce,
Ah, no. He's undergone a change,
For now he little cares for looks;
He wants her at the kitchen range,
And mostly cares for what she cooks.

And she has changed somewhat, I vow,
No longer does she stand and wait,
For she is all impatient now
If he should come to supper late.
'Tis not enough for her to see
Him there. She has a thousand wishes;
And every evening after tea
She makes him wipe the supper dishes.

An English magistrate has decided that it is quite proper to call a lady a "first-class cat." It would be well, however, before exercising your legal rights to make quite sure that the lady won't come up to the scratch.

A London clergyman has just observed, "It is the most difficult thing in the world to persuade a prohibitionist to die." It is rather a difficult thing to persuade anyone to die, but one can quite understand that a prohibitionist has a special aversion to the spirit world.

A professor of English in the University of Wisconsin, according to Harper's Weekly, tells of some clever replies made by a student under examination in English. The candidate had been instructed to write out examples of the indicative, the subjunctive, the potential and the exclamatory moods. His efforts resulted as follows; "I am endeavoring to pass an English examination. If I answer twenty questions I shall pass. If I answer twelve questions I may pass. God help me!"

A despatch from Winnipeg says ;—Very exhaustive investigation, conducted at scores of points representative of the entire country, quite disprove the market rumor sent out from here to-day to the effect that the wheat crop was badly rusted. This rumor is evidently got up for the purpose of manipulating the market by interested parties, when, as a matter of fact, wheat never was in better condition nor promised such a bountiful yield.

That consumption is curable has been demonstrated during the post-mortem examination of the body of William Mitchell, an Ottawa man, recently found drowned in the aqueduct there. Dr. Robinson, in examining the lungs, found healed lesions showing unmistakably that the deceased had suffered from tuberculosis, but had made a recovery. His outdoor life had contributed to this result. The coroner, who also examined the lung, agreed with the above opinion. This is a hopeful fact for the encouragement of those who have developed symptoms of tuberculosis, and indicates that fresh air and sunshine will effect a cure.

"Potted ham" is not likely to take its accustomed place as an item of food for the picnic basket this summer. Here is what President Roosevelt's special commissioners, who inspected the Chicago packing houses, report upon this hitherto appetizing article of food; "In another establishment, equally well known, a long table was covered with several hundred pounds of cocked scraps of beef and other meats. Some of these meat scraps were dry, leathery and unfit to be eaten; and in the heap were found pieces of pigskin, and even some bits of rope strands and other rubbish. Enquiry evoked the frank admission from the man in charge that this was to be ground up and used in making "potted ham." " Penitentiary is altogether too good for those millionaires who have been making fortunes out of this combination of filth and dirt.

Since railroading began people have imagined the case of the engineer who should suddenly die at the throttle and leave the train, filled with passengers, to the mercy of chance for the remainder of the run This long-imagined case actually was realized—as perhaps it has been realized before — on a fast express train running from Trenton to Philadelphia last Thursday The engineer died at his post nobody knows just when, but the dead hand remained on the throttle and the sightless eye continued for miles and miles to glare along the roadbed in front of the rushing train. The fireman observed nothing unusual; the track was clear; every switch was properly turned and the flyer sped on within scheduled time. Not until the train approached Philadelphia and a place was reached where the speed is usually slackened did the fireman feel a thrill of alarm. They were entering the city like the whirlwind, and then, examining the engineer, he found him dead. Suppose a wreck had occurred before the fireman's discovery. The engineer would have been found "killed," and his "negligence" would have been held responsible for the disaster.

Montaigne Runs on Anything.

When I read Montaigne or Wordsworth or Landor I am always reminded of the advice which the baseball coacher on the side lines so often repeats to the men on bases, "Run on anything!" Each one of these worthies, to continue the parlance of the ball field, accepts all his chances. If Wordsworth never gave to the world "Lines Suggested by Seeing a Favorite Cat Crossing the Road" it was simply because that spectacle never chanced to arrest his "inward eye." If Montaigne never meditated, as did another celebrated author, on producing a chapter about "Buttonholes" such reticence was not in any degree owing to barrenness as concerned that or any other known topic. And had he attempted it he would perchance have begun with shoestrings, wandered on to darning needles and pruning hooks, quoted a dozen or so of Latin authors in regard to plowshares, related anecdotes concerning dealings of the Cymbrians, Scythians, Lacedaemonians, Romans and the like with knots and fastenings, mentioned his own personal experience in the matter of hooks and eyes and ended by an exposition of the practical, mechanical and ethical relations between a buttonhole and a button, and every quaint and divaricating line would have endeared him to his affectionate reader.—Martha Baker Dunn in Atlantic.

Birds Cross No Deep Seas.

A writer in the London Outlook points out that no birds cross deep, even if narrow, seas. The narrow Madagascar strait is impassable to birds, though the north seas are a highway for them. Godwits pass from the Nile to the shores of Norfolk, though neighboring islands in an archipelago may show no common stock. All birds, with the possible exception of the sparrow, are stirred to movement by different causes—wind, weather, food, the bullying of parent and other birds. Birds of prey drive off their young. Martins love familiar eaves. Successive ravens have built on the same ledge for a century. The longer passages are only made over shallow seas that once were land, and when once a journey is made the memory is strong enough to urge a repetition. The change of home then becomes not a fashion, but an inherited habit.

Perfumes.

Perfumes have been used from the earliest times. The burning of perfumed incense was one of the rites of the Hebrew and pagan religions, and perfumes of various sorts were used by nearly all the nations of antiquity. Both the Romans and the Greeks were skilled in making perfumery. It was from the Arabs, who possessed the art of preparing perfumed waters, that the use of perfumes was introduced into mediaeval Europe.

"I notice you always stand on both sides of it," said the dissatisfied constituent.

"That," answered the editor gloomily, "was my polite way of saying I wished he'd get off the earth."—Exchange.

HESPER

...BY...

HAMLIN GARLAND

COPYRIGHT. 1903, BY HAMLIN GARLAND

"If this trouble is turned aside it will be due to Matt."

"Why should they obey him? Is he an officer?"

"Not now, but he was the first marshal of the camp and afterward chief of police. Everybody knows him, and his influence is as great as that of any one man. His presence here today undoubtedly prevented a desperate battle."

As they neared the Kelly cabin Raymond said: "I am deeply chagrined by this experience. I really thought we were going away from disorder."

"Please do not trouble your mind with it any more," she answered decisively. "It was an experience which will give me something new to think about."

Kelly did not return till late. At about 9 o'clock he knocked at Raymond's door. "Get your gun," he said quietly. "We're on guard tonight."

And together they paced to and fro on the hillside, listening to the yells of drunken men up the street and to distant gunshots as the storm of battle swept away to the south of them. By midnight all was silent. The sheriff's forces were either repulsed or captured.

CHAPTER XV.

NOTWITHSTANDING the excitements of the day, or perhaps because of them, Ann slept soundly. She was awakened as before, by the sound of the little coffee mill, but she did not rise as promptly as on the first morning and was still dozing when Nora appeared with a piece of corn cake and a cup of coffee.

"You feel tired this morning, I know. Well, now, take your breakfast in bed."

Ann was conscious smitten. "No, no! You poor, dear thing! I am ashamed to have you waiting on me."

"It's so little—a mere step or two."

"Yes, but you have so many steps. After this I forbid you doing anything of this kind for me, and I've been thinking why can't we hire a Chinaman to work for us? Unless I can do something to relieve you I will not stay. You are tired. I wish you would ask Mr. Raymond to find us a helper today."

"Hello, sis!" shouted Louis. "Aren't you up yet? You'll never make a miner." Here he poked his head in at the door. "Jupiter, wasn't yesterday an exciting day? It makes me sick to think I didn't go down to Bozle with you. Rob has been telling me about Matt's shielding the sheriff. It must have been great. I was out on the hillside. We all thought the sheriff was coming up that way, but he didn't. He turned back and went into camp, and last night Jack went down and pitched into him, and they had a battle."

"They did? Was any one killed?"

"Ten."

Nora gasped. "Merciful powers!"

"So Perry says. Our side won."

Ann frowned. "Our side! You are not taking sides with these lawless miners?"

Louis wished to sidetrack this discussion. "Our things have come."

"Boys, hear me! This is the sheriff."

"Have they? Very well; I'll get up at once and unpack. I want you to help me a little here."

"And I want you to help fix up our bungalow."

"Agreed. Now run away and find a hammer and some tacks."

Together they worked to render her room a little less bleak, and together they crossed the path to Raymond's cabin, where they toiled merrily. Ann was just leaving the bungalow to help Mrs. Kelly with the midday meal when Munro dashed up and flung himself from his horse.

Something unduly presuming in his tone irritated her, and she gave him a glance intended to check and humble him. "I am quite well, thank you."

He was not of those whom disdainful eyes abase. He hugged himself and shivered comically. "Wow, but that was a cold breeze! Some one must have left the bars down. You're not going to draw the line on me, are you? What do you know against me?"

"I know nothing against you or for you either," she replied.

She was turning to go when he stopped her, and his tone was hard and dry. "You were in Bozle yesterday with Raymond. Don't do that again. When you want an escort let me know. I'll send a man that knows enough not to take a lady into danger and who has 'savvy' enough to keep his horses for the return trip."

"Thank you. You are very kind, but I'm not in need of additional protection," Ann icily replied.

"Goodby till tomorrow," he called after her in mockery, his voice as musical as a bugle.

This interview, short as it was, left the girl with the feeling of having been grasped and shaken by a rude hand. And yet her anger was not unmixed with admiration. His magnificent audacity and the grace and dash of his advance interested her.

Raymond saw Munro riding away and wondered what his errand could have been, and when Louis told him that the gambler had stopped and detained Ann in the path his teeth set in anger. "The little hound!" he growled under his breath. "I'll put an end to that!"

Immediately upon finishing his supper he went up the path to Hanley's to find "the lookout." Munro was in his place, sitting high above his faro layout clicking a couple of silver dollars together, talking with gleeful intensity to Denver Dan, who stood at his shoulder broadly smiling. The saloon was packed with men, all in high spirits over the precipitate flight of the sheriff.

Raymond did not reply till he reached his side. "I want to talk with you, Jack," he said in a low voice.

Munro studied him for a moment, then turned to Dan. "Take my place a minute."

Dan complied, and Raymond led the way into the open air, and when they were well out of the crowd he turned and said:

"You intercepted Miss Rupert today?"

"I met her, yes. What about it?"

"Just this. You're not fit to shake the hand of a decent girl, much less a cultured, high bred woman like Ann Rupert, and you know it!"

Munro was staggered. "What business is it of yours?" he asked, with instant anger.

Raymond's wrath was self contained. "Keep your temper, Jack. We've summered and wintered together, and you can't make any mistakes about what I mean. I know the kind of women you live with and the kind of life you lead, and I tell you to keep away from the Kelly cabin."

Munro did not snarl as Raymond expected. His voice became softly insinuating as he said: "Suppose the lady invited me to call? Suppose she was interested in my conversation? The lady had a chance to go. The path was open, but she lingered, she smiled."

"You're a liar!"

Munro was now very confident. "Am I? Ask the boy; he saw her talking with me. I say the lady was gracious."

The gambler took on the air of an injured comrade. "Now, see here, Rob; you're away out of limits. I acknowledge I've known a whole lot of cheap women, but that's all the more reason why I should be able to tell when I meet the real thing. Her name is as safe with me as with you. Probably she's tied up back in the states anyway, so that neither of us has any chance of interesting her. But it's an open course and no favors, and so long as she doesn't hand me out the 'icy mitt' I'm going to make the most of my chance, and from this moment"—he took off his hat—"I reform, I throw up my job at Hanley's, I cut off 'booze' and I shake 'Eau Claire.'"

Raymond was impressed by his rival's manner. "You can quit gambling, and I hope you can leave liquor alone, but I see trouble when you shake Claire. But that doesn't matter. For the sake of old times I want to avoid a quarrel with you, Jack. But I warn you that if Miss Rupert finds your presence disagreeable you go, and you stay! As you say, she is probably engaged to a better man than either of us. But she is here because of the boy, and I feel a certain responsibility for them both, and the man who presumes on a chance acquaintance with her will answer to me."

"All right. Leave it to her, Rob," said Munro almost jocularly. "If she turns me down I'll pull out of my own accord, lightning sure. Good night!"

Raymond walked away with a sense of failure. Munro had adroitly writhed out of his grasp and was probably exulting at his own cleverness. He was troubled, too, by the confident tone which Munro had taken in saying, "The way was open; she lingered."

Out of the tumult of his doubt he emerged with an accession of confidence in himself. "If it comes to a choice between us, my chances are as good as Jack's. Her tolerance of him is due to ignorance of his real character. Mrs. Kelly must tell her."

He saw the light in Kelly's home, and its allurement was stronger than ever before, but he resolutely held his way to his own fireside, there to bitterly muse the entire evening over his poverty and the false position in which Munro had cleverly placed him.

He repented of his resolute passing of her door when he heard next day that a couple of the independent operators had spent the entire evening with Kelly and that one of them talked a great deal to Ann. The sting of it lay in the fact that Tracy was a fine young fellow, studious and capable. "You are a fool," Raymond said to himself. "You threw away a chance to be happy. Don't do it again."

CHAPTER XVI.

NOT a day passed that the captain of the patrol did not ride down to the door of the Kelly cabin and leap from his saddle with some fanciful greeting, carefully and ornately uttered. So much he retained of his Kentucky breeding.

"The sheriff's army grows apace, but does not march," he announced one morning.

Ann could not understand this humorous defiance of law—this colossal recklessness. "What will you do when it does march?"

"Meet it and bu'st it."

"Tell me, now," she said to him at another time, "what is your real motive? Why should you be the champion of the rights of labor?"

He astonished her by giving back earnestness for earnestness. "I'll tell you, my lady. Labor has got to fight. This union is the coming thing. The toilers have not only got to stand together, but they've got to drill. I happen to have a little military training, and I'm going to give western labor its first lesson in the power of military organization.

"Rob and Kelly both stand for the thing that is going out. They think any man has the same chance they have, but I tell you this union that they despise is the coming order."

In truth, Kelly and Raymond were watching Munro's rise to power with growing uneasiness. He was now in almost complete control of the camp, and though he still deferred to the union and its committees, his reckless bravery, his prompt execution of orders and his knowledge of military forms had made of him the chief source of command, the only adequate regulative force on the peak. Those on the outside did not hesitate to call him "the arch devil of the district," and the whole western world was filled with his doings, his reckless speeches.

His fame had fired the hearts of all the dead shots and restless spirits of the west, and from an irregular squad of twenty-five or thirty men his forces had risen to nearly 200 heavily armed and hardy horsemen.

Raymond, though keeping keen eyes upon Munro, was unable to find cause for war in any word or act of the gambler, nor could he fathom Ann's mind either toward Munro or himself. She appeared to find Munro diverting and spoke of him only in that way. If she understood his "home life," it made no change in her attitude. It was inconceivable that a refined girl should tolerate a man who passed from one ignorant and vicious woman to another, and yet Ann's greeting remained gracious, if not friendly. What it was when they were alone, he dared not think.

As for Raymond himself, he continued to punish himself by putting aside the many opportunities which came to plead his own suit, and took a morbid sort of pleasure in his renunciation. "There will be one man at least who will not persecute her," he said savagely and bent his best energies to the work of developing his mine.

One afternoon as Ann and Mrs. Kelly sat sewing and chatting together a woman suddenly appeared in the open door. She was large and high colored, her hat was awry, and there was a wild glare in her eyes and a look in her face that froze even Nora into silence. Both stared at their strange visitor in breathless apprehension till she pointed her unsteady finger at Ann and hoarsely cried out:

"So you're the one that's cut me out?" The muscles of one cheek contorted and her eyelid drooped like that of a paralytic as she fixed a baleful look on the astonished girl. After a moment's pause she stepped uncertainly upon the threshold and leaned against the jamb. "Well, you'd better watch out. If you don't give him up, I'll kill you!"

"She's crazy," whispered Nora.

The intruder fumbled in her absurdly flamboyant skirt and at last drew out a pistol. "Now you better hop!" she said, with menacing calmness.

Ann rose, white and calm. "Who are you? What do you want?"

"Who am I? I'm Jack Munro's wife, that's who I am, and I want you to let him alone, that's what I want. You can understand that, can't you?" Her big, flabby face again contorted horribly.

"Call him. What do I care for him? I ain't afraid of no man livin'. No, sir; let him come. But I got no war with you; you're all right. But that thing there, with her fancy dresses—I'll pink her with a bullet if she don't let my Jack alone."

If the drunken creature had swept a handful of mire into her face Ann could not have been more revolted, more degraded. Fixing a look of disdain on the woman, she said: "You are quite mistaken. Your Jack is less than nothing to me. I despise him and all he represents."

The other wildly laughed. "Ah, yes, you can talk—you're smooth—but I know!" She began to bluster. "If you hated him, why do you talk and laugh with him? I saw you yesterday." She raised the pistol. "I tell you, I'll blow you into kingdom come if you don't promise right now to give him up!"

As she advanced the two little lads at play just outside appeared in the doorway, and the sight of them steeled the little mother's heart. "Go away, darlin's," she called to them. "Quick, run for dad!"

The woman turned to see who was behind her, and the desperate Nora seized her by the wrist. "Give me the gun!" she called.

"I won't! Le' go me!" shrieked the intruder, jerking hard in the effort to free her hand.

Ann seized the other arm. "I promise," she said quietly, fixing her eyes full upon those of the infuriated woman, who ceased to struggle. "Now go away."

"You promise?"

"I promise!"

The woman again laughed harshly, drunkenly. "I don't trust you. I'll kill you; then I know. Let go me!" she called. "Let go or I'll smash your face!"

"Matt! Oh, Matt!" called Nora as she clung desperately to that terrible wrist.

Help came from an unexpected quarter. Like a flash, Woo, the new Chinese cook of the household, rushed into the room and flung himself on the mad wretch. His long fingers encircled her throat. "Dlop it!" he curtly commanded. "Dlop gun!" For a few moments the woman struggled, then the revolver fell to the floor, and Nora snatched it up.

"Dlop it!" he curtly commanded. "Dlop gun!"

Woo turned the gasping, hiccoughing creature to the door and flung her out upon the ground. "You dlunk. Go home. Stop home. Me sabbe you—you sabbe me," he said as he bent above her.

Ann interposed. "Don't hurt her, Woo."

He stood beside her while she slowly regained a sitting posture. "She belly dangelous. Me go tell Munlo. She fight—me kick."

The poor creature now seemed dazed and broken and began to weep, and with her tears became as abjectly pitiful, as pathetically tawdry, as she had been hideous and menacing in her wrath. Ann shuddered with a bitter nausea, a disorder that was half physical weakness, half mental repulsion. There was something ghastly beyond words in this creature sitting in utter abandonment in her rumpled finery, which the pitiless sun dissected. Stooping, she took the miserable one by the arm. "Get up. You must not sit there."

Slowly the woman rose, all thought of revenge swallowed up in a wave of maudlin self pity. "You're all agin me—all of ye! I guess you wouldn't like it to have your husband stolen by another woman. You let me alone!" she said to Woo, with a flash of anger. "You pigtail, what business you got to lay hands on a white lady?"

The creature began to pour forth a flood of vile epithets, directed toward the patient Woo, who tried again and again to lift her and was in the midst of a howl of wrath when Matt came round the corner of the house.

"What's all this?" he asked sharply.

The woman suddenly rose to her feet, well aware that a man had arrived, and began to mumble and weep again.

"Who is she? Who are you, and what are you doing here anyway?"

The woman, quite dismayed, began to retreat. "It's all right. She promised. I'm going now."

Woo explained: "She Munlo's wife. Belly dlunk—allee same clazy. Take um gun—go shoot lady." He pointed at Ann. "Me choke um. She fall on gloound. No get up, Nola catchee gun."

Kelly followed the invader. "You go back to where you came from and stay there or 'twill be the worse for ye, ye murderin' omadhaun."

Ann went to her room and flung herself down upon her bed in such abasement as she had never known in all her life. She could not deceive herself. She had brought this horrible assault upon herself by something more than tolerance of Munro.

The woman's ignorance and tastelessness, her common voice, her badly fitting garments, her incredible baseness of speech, all came back. "Ann Rupert a rival to that being!" Of course she had never for an instant directly encouraged Munro, and yet he had appealed to her and she had listened.

"Rob should have warned me," she complained, her mind going back to the man she could trust. At the moment she could not see or would not acknowledge that Raymond had ventured as far as he dared in revealing Munro's private life. She was too angry with herself and every one around her to be just. As her flaming wrath died she grew cold and bitter. "This is what comes of going outside one's own proper world. I shall leave the peak at once, and I hope I shall never see it or hear it spoken of again."

CHAPTER XVII.

ANN'S disgust and bitterness of self accusation wore away as she faced the resolving sunlight and measured her scars against the breast of mighty Mogalyon. In the dawn of the second day the incident, having lost much of its shame and terror, was debatable, and under Matt's kindly counsel she reached a certain resignation.

"No one but ourselves need know what took place," he said in conclusion. "Woo is no talebearer, and when the woman herself sobers off she'll not remember a word of it. Furthermore, I warned her that Jack would wring her neck if he knew what she had done. So I wouldn't give another thought of it—not one."

"I'll try to forget it," she promised humbly, but she could not at once put the experience out of mind. She could only wait for that besotted face to fade into a grisly apparition. In the end she pitied the poor woman who loved and was willing to defend her love.

Raymond was chilled by the change in Ann—by a return to the cold aloofness of her manner at Barnett's—and was profoundly troubled by it.

The day following the woman's visit Munro rode down as usual to call and seemed amazed when Mrs. Kelly greeted him coldly. "Ann does not want to see you or any one else this morning—you least of all."

Munro whistled. "Another cold blast. It's sure drafty up here on the side hill, isn't it? What do you suppose is the cause of it."

From the inner room a clear, low voice, icy as a mountain stream, replied, "Miss Rupert is not receiving Captain Munro today or at any other time."

He took a step toward the door. "What have I done to get a crack like that?"

The door closed with a decided jar and a bolt slid.

Munro bowed. "I understand. I take the hint. But some day when you are feeling jolly I'd like to know what has frosted the air down here among the aspens."

"I can tell you," said Nora, with the directness of a woman who has known rough men all her life. "Ann has learned the kind of life you live, and she despises the sight of your face."

For the first time in his life Munro was confounded. He stood for a moment revolving an explanation. At last he said, "You mustn't take an enemy's report of me."

"We do not," said Nora calmly. "Your wife has called on us."

"My wife!"

"The woman who calls herself your wife. 'Tis all one so far as we are concerned."

Munro frowned. "Claire called! Here? Then with a leer that was characteristic of him, he added, "I hope you had a pleasant chat."

"Ask her. She did all the talkin'."

Munro became very serious and very winning. "Now, see here, Nora"—

"Call me Mrs. Kelly," she interposed shortly.

He was not smiling now. His heart was in his voice. "You tell Ann not to misjudge me. She must give me a chance to square myself. I don't claim to be a saint, but I've been open and aboveboard with every man or woman I've ever had any dealings with. Whatever my past has been, I'm living on a different plane now. I've cut off all my old habits for her sake. I'm trying to live up to her standard of things. I know she's better than I am, but I can climb. My family is as good as hers. I started right, and with the help of a good woman I can get back to where I was. I claim the work I'm doing here is worthy her approval. Ask her to let me see her again."

Nora turned her face toward Ann's door and both waited in silence, but no sound came from the inner room, and Nora, seeing suffering in the lines of his face, said more kindly: "Ye may as well go. The door will not open to you this day nor any other."

Munro turned and went out with bowed head, and Nora could not doubt the sincerity of his pain.

One morning Ann rose to a singular light. In place of the clear, golden sunshine which had so often glorified her room a blue-gray mist lay thick against her window pane. Raising the sash, she put her hand into it—it was like smoke, dry and cold! Dressing hurriedly she entered the sitting room, where Matt was helping his sons to dress.

She stepped to the door and looked out with vague alarm. The vapor had blotted out the world. Nothing could be seen but the faint forms of one or two cabins and a clump of nearby trees, and she went back shivering and a little depressed. "I don't like to leave the peak on such a day," she said at last. "I think I'll stay till the sun comes out. I want to think of it as it has been—radiant and inspiriting."

The cloud hung moveless for hours, impenetrable, yet resisting. A hush was in the air as though some disaster, concealed as yet, was about to be discovered. About 10 o'clock as she stood on the steps wondering whether to cross to the bungalow or not Raymond burst from the obscurity.

"Good morning," called Ann. "Isn't this a strange effect?"

His eyes were shining, his face pale and his voice vibrant as he abruptly said: "Come with me; the time has come. I want to talk with you."

"What has happened?" she asked in alarm.

He took her by the arm. "You promised to listen. You are not afraid of me, are you?"

"No, but I do not understand. Where is Louis? Has anything happened to him?"

"Louis is safe with Kelly. I want to see you because things have happened to me. Come, I must see you alone."

They moved off up the path toward the overlook, and, notwithstanding her brave words, the girl wavered in the gust of this man's overmastering excitement. The mist closed round them, all signs of other human presence disappeared, and they soon stood alone in a world of gray light wherein neither sky nor horizon line appeared. All that remained of the earth was a little strip of ground beneath their feet.

Raymond stopped at last and held toward Ann a small, irregular piece of rock. "Do you see that?" he hoarsely inquired.

She took it wonderingly. "Is it ore?"

"Yes, and it's heavy with gold. Kelly's luck has won again. We've opened a vein that will make us both rich." There was no tremor or doubt in his tone.

"Oh, I'm so glad!" she cried out, with unaffected pleasure. "Now Mrs. Kelly can go to live in the valley."

"Never mind the Kellys now," he cried out impatiently. "I have a great deal to say to you, and I want to say it here. I'm going to try and win you." His manner was exultant, his voice tense with passion. "I am bold to recklessness today."

He had never been humble. Now he rose above her, masterful, an avowed lover, and his eyes burning down into hers made her shrink and shiver as if from cold.

He misread the movement. "Are you warm enough?" he asked tenderly. "I hope you are, for I want to tell you—explain to you—why I am here. Let us sit here." He indicated a flat rock. "This is our only opportunity. No one will know—no one can see us. Will you listen?"

"I will listen," she said quietly and took a seat, drawing her cloak about her.

He took a seat a little in front, so that he could see her face, which was radiant as a rose in the mist. "I've been trying to write you a letter ever since you came. I wanted to set myself right with you on Louis' account. I love the lad, and I wanted you to know that I was trying to do him good."

"I know that. I trust you now."

"That assurance is sweet to me, but I want to tell you now that the only mystery in my life is this: I am a West Point cadet—I mean, I was"—

"Were you, really?" She looked at him with such unmistakable relief and gladness that he faltered.

"Wait. I was only there two years. I was court martialed for breach of discipline and gross insubordination at the beginning of my third year."

He hastened on. "You mustn't judge me hastily. It came on my return after furlough. That's the time when the routine and discipline pinch hardest on the men. After two years of grind that I hated I had a visit home—a delicious free time—and to get back into school, back into those cold, gray barracks, was like going into a straitjacket. The first few weeks after the vacation are times of disorder, a period of boyish deviltry, and I took my share in it. My breach of discipline was nothing more than a boy's frolic. I should have been punished for it, and that would have ended it, but I hated one of the officers, the disciplinarian, and when he rounded me up he rasped me till I lost my head. Being a quick tempered youth, I answered him. He abused me shamefully, and I struck him in the face, and that ended my stay at West Point."

"Oh, how foolish! How wrong!"

"No, it was not wrong. I would do it again. The small sneak used a tone in addressing me which no man has a right to use to another. You wouldn't suppose a tone could hurt, but it did. It cut like a lash. Well, that ended my career as a soldier. My home was on the Ohio river, not far from Cincinnati, and my family still lives there. Our whole country is rich in traditions of General Grant, and my father had selected me out of all his sons to be the soldier of his family. You know how some men try to map their sons' careers. Don't you see, I couldn't go home?"

"Yes, I can see it was hard for your father. Was your mother living?"

"Yes, she's living yet. I write her every week, but not one word has passed between my father and me since my dismissal. Naturally enough, I drifted west and into cattle ranching. I liked the excitement of it, and I'd been trained to ride and to shoot. I gradually became cow boss and foreman, and so you found me, with a few thousand dollars saved up. Your com-

The Man Who Blushed

By C. B. LEWIS

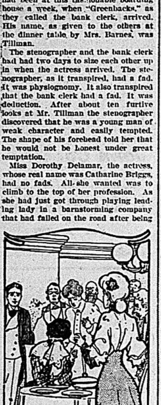
Copyright, 1906, by P. C. Eastment

In announcing in a very impressive manner to all applicants that she kept a fashionable boarding house Mrs. Barnes did not exactly mean that members of the Four Hundred and stray multimillionaires fell over each other to be numbered among her guests. She meant that it was a homelike place for stenographers, typewriters, bank clerks and floorwalkers of department stores to take advantage of, but they must at the same time realize to the fullest extent the privileges permitted them. These privileges, so far as any one ever discovered, consisted of a latchkey and a piano. Any boarder who dared do so could also take a seat in the parlor of an evening. He or she could also use the gas until midnight and enjoy one clean towel per day.

The girl with the golden hair, as they called Miss Bierce, the stenographer, had been at this fashionable boarding house a week, when "Greenbacks," as they called the bank clerk, arrived. His name, as given to the others at the dinner table by Mrs. Barnes, was Tillman.

The stenographer and the bank clerk had had two days to size each other up in when the actress arrived. The stenographer, as it transpired, had a fad. It was physiognomy. It also transpired that the bank clerk had a fad. It was deduction. After about ten furtive looks at Mr. Tillman the stenographer discovered that he was a young man of weak character and easily tempted. The shape of his forehead told her that he would not be honest under great temptation.

Miss Dorothy Delamar, the actress, whose real name was Catharine Briggs, had no fads. All she wanted was to climb to the top of her profession. As she had just got through playing leading lady in a barnstorming company that had failed on the road after being out three weeks, she felt that she was getting along and that it needed only a sudden jar to make her a public favorite and bring a dozen managers in autos to the house.



FOR A MOMENT THEY GAZED STRAIGHT INTO EACH OTHER'S EYES.

She was planning how best to bring about that jar when she arrived. Miss Delamar was a hustler. She had hustled around and provided herself with seven rhinestone rings and a pair of earrings and a sunburst out of the same barrel. The landlady estimated the value of the jewels at $2,500. Miss Delamar corrected her by making the figure $1,000 more. At her first dinner in the house she wore the whole outfit.

One morning the actress appeared in the dining room in a state of great perturbation. In fact, she was gasping for breath and on the point of fainting away. She had been robbed, she announced when she could get her voice. Some one had entered her room and stolen her bag of diamonds. While everybody got to his feet she sat down and went into hysterics.

While she was engaged in this the stenographer looked at the bank clerk, and for a moment they gazed straight into each other's eyes. Then he blushed and dropped his. This was enough for her. She alone of the dozen boarders seemed to remember that he had come in late. He had lagged behind to enter the actress' room and steal her jewelry. That blush betrayed his guilt to the stenographer. She almost expected him to throw the chamois bag on the table and ask to be given five years in state prison.

Not until after the boarders had scattered from breakfast was it suggested that all submit to be searched, and then it was too late. There were eighteen boarders, including the actress. One of the other seventeen must be guilty. There were seven rooms on her floor, and the natural inference was that it was some one on her floor that had robbed her. All seven occupied positions of trust, and to suspect them was rather perilous. While Miss Delamar sent for a reporter Mrs. Barnes sent for a detective. Both arrived at the same time. While the reporter went in for a "scoop" the detective held two or three interviews, looked wise and as he got outdoors winked at himself and went hunting for a glass of beer.

Some fifty different times that day Miss Delamar told the story of the robbery and grew faint. The bag of diamonds had been on her dresser. She was out about fifteen minutes. Her door was shut, but not locked. Her future career did not depend solely upon these diamonds, thank heaven, but unless they were recovered she would not be able to play certain leading parts.

When the evening paper came out with its account of "Bold Robbery—An Actress Loses $25,000 Worth of Diamonds In a Boarding House," Miss Delamar fainted away, and after her recovery her moaning was pitiful to hear. It was so pitiful that the stenographer decided to temporize no longer. Ever since she looked the bank clerk in the eyes and noticed his blush she had been convinced of his guilt. She had said nothing to any one, and she rather expected that he would seek an early opportunity of restoring the bag and thus avoid state prison. He didn't restore it at lunchtime nor during the half hour before dinner, when he could have done so.

That pitiful moaning started Miss Bierce upstairs. She knocked at the door of the bank clerk's room, and it was opened to her. Standing in the hall and speaking in a low but decided voice, she said:

"Mr. Tillman, it is a pity and a shame!"

"Beg pardon, but I don't quite understand," he replied.

"I am referring to the robbery this morning."

"Ah! Have the detectives any clew?"

"I don't know, but I have. The robber is here in the house this minute. Should he restore the diamonds I shall say nothing; if he refuses I shall betray his identity."

"Dear me, but you know the rascal, then?"

"I have known him ever since I looked into his eyes at the breakfast table and he blushed."

"And did you wish to give me his name in confidence?" softly asked the bank clerk.

His brazenness angered the girl, and with hot cheeks she looked him square in the eyes and replied:

"He stands before me, sir."

"Indeed! Miss Bierce, will you kindly inform me how you came to suspect me?"

"First, from my study of physiognomy; second, from your blush when I looked at you."

"Miss Bierce, if I hadn't blushed and dropped my eyes when you looked at me across the breakfast table would you have suspected me of this robbery?" asked the bank clerk after a moment.

"I don't think so."

"Then it was unfortunate for me. As a matter of fact, I have had that habit for years when guilty of anything and have tried in vain to break myself of it."

"And you will restore the diamonds at once?" she eagerly asked.

"You have depended on physiognomy in this case, Miss Bierce. I have depended on deduction. Miss Delamar is an actress out of money and an engagement. Deduction: She must stand Mrs. Barnes off and bring her name before the public. She adorns herself with what she calls $3,500 worth of jewelry. Deduction: Rhinestones. She sends for a reporter instead of a detective. Deduction: Sensation. The detective who was here today asked where she bought the jewels, and she failed to remember the name of the house. Deduction: She didn't want to."

"Sir, you have become brazen again!" exclaimed the stenographer.

"Last night," he continued as if he hadn't heard her, "I sat here in my room for half an hour without a light and the door slightly ajar. Hearing a noise in the hall, I quietly looked out and saw a lady standing on the sill of the hall window. Deduction: Up to snuff. I think she pinned something to the inside of the curtains, near the top. I made sure it was Miss Delamar. Deduction: Seek, and ye shall find. Suppose we seek."

Miss Bierce followed the bank clerk down the hall to the window. Close up to the pole she saw the chamois bag and motioned him to reach it down.

"No use to have any trouble about it," he said as he placed the bag in her hand. "Call her up to your room and tell her that you found her jewels where she had mislaid them. You are something of a physiognomist. Study her face when you produce the bag. That's all, Miss Bierce."

"But, Mr. Tillman, I am overwhelmed with shame and mortification, and can you ever"—

"There, there! I blushed and caused you to think I was guilty. Good night, Miss Bierce!"

The Pepper Plant.

The most common and widely used of all spices is pepper. It is a native of the East Indies, but is now cultivated in various part of the tropical belt of America. The plant is a climber and has a smooth stem, sometimes twelve feet long. The fruit is about the size of a pea and when ripe is a bright red color. In cultivation the plant is supported by poles. In some localities small trees are used instead of poles, for the best pepper is grown in a certain degree of shade. The plant is propagated by cuttings, comes into bearing three or four years after it is set and yields two crops annually for about twelve years. When a few of the berries turn from green to red all of them are gathered, because if they were allowed to ripen any longer they would be less pungent. To fit them for the market they are dried, separated by rubbing with the hands and cleaned by winnowing. Pepper was known to the ancients. In the middle ages it was one of the most costly of spices, a pound of it being a royal present.

A HUMBLE HEROINE.

Mother Mary Teresa and the Cross of the Legion of Honor.

Some years ago in a city in France all the soldiers were drawn up on the plaza. A woman in the habit of charity was called out in front of the governor general, and this is what he said:

"Mother Mary Teresa, when you were twenty years of age you received a wound from a cannon ball while assisting one of the wounded on the field at Balaklava. In 1859 the shell from a mitrailleuse laid you prostrate in the front ranks on the battlefield of Magenta. Since then you have been in Syria, in China and in Mexico, and if you were not wounded it was not because you have not exposed yourself.

"In 1870 you were taken up in Reischoffen covered with many saber wounds. Such deeds of heroism you crowned a few weeks ago with one of the most heroic actions which history records. A grenade fell upon the ambulance which was under your charge. You took up the grenade in your arms; you smiled upon the wounded who looked at you with feelings of dismay; you carried it a distance of eighty meters. On laying it down you noticed that it was going to burst. You threw yourself on the ground; it burst. You were seen covered with blood, but when persons came to your assistance you rose up smiling, as is your wont. You were scarcely recovered from your wound when you returned to the hospital whence I have now summoned you."

Then the general made her kneel down and, drawing his sword, touched her lightly with it three times on the shoulder and pinned the cross of the Legion of Honor on her habit, saying:

"I put upon you the cross of the brave in the name of the French people and army. No one has gained it by more deeds of heroism nor by a life so completely spent in self abnegation for the benefit of your brothers and the service of your country. Soldiers, present arms!"

The troops saluted, the drums and bugles rang out, the air was filled with loud acclamations, and all was jubilation and excitement as Mother Teresa arose, her face suffused with blushes, and asked:

"General, are you done?"

"Yes," said he.

"Then I will go back to the hospital."—From "The Companionship of Books," by Frederic Rowland Marvin.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

There is no such thing as a secret.

A reasonable probability is the only certainty.

Men who have violated the law say it is not hard to do.

Romance is like fire—if you play with it you are liable to be burned.

There is too little attention given to two mighty important words, "Don't tell."

It is a bad plan to seek to make a good impression by following every statement with an apology.

The trouble is when we do things for our friends we do things we want to instead of what they would be pleased to have us do.

We can't understand why people try to deceive others, but cannot understand why they should try to deceive themselves, as so many seem to do.

When Musicians Were Scarce.

In these days of conservatories and music schools, when each house has its piano or its organ, to say nothing of devotees to the cornet, violin and banjo, it seems strange to assert that there ever was a time when musicians were in demand, yet such was really the case. "In the fifteenth century," says Mr. Henry M. Brooks in his "Olden Time Music," "musicians were so scarce in England that they were impressed by government order, as in more recent times seamen had to suffer in like manner. Henry VIII. also issued warrants for the impressment of children with good voices for the choirs of the cathedrals, and in Elizabeth's time children with the proper qualification for her majesty's choirs were taken from their parents without any compensation being given to the latter."

Weighing Common Air.

The weight of air has often been tested by compressing it in receptacles by the air pump. That it really has weight when so compressed is shown by the fact that the weight of the vessels is increased slightly by filling them with compressed air and that such vessels become specifically "lighter" as soon as the air contained in them is exhausted. Many elaborate experiments on the weight of air have proved that one cubic foot weighs 536 grains, or something less than one and a quarter ounces. The above experiment on the weight of air is supposed to be made at the surface of the earth with the temperature at 50 degrees F. Heated air, or air at high elevations, is much lighter.

Lunar Athletics.

The "man in the moon" must surely regard with amused contempt our much vaunted athletic records. A good terrestrial athlete could cover about 120 feet on the moon in a running broad jump, while leaping over the barn would be a very commonplace feat. He would find no difficulty in carrying six times as much and running six times as fast as he could on earth, all because the moon attracts bodies with but one-sixth of the force of the earth.

Table Daintiness.

An Angel In the Web

By Sidney H. Cole

Copyright, 1905, by P. C. Eastment

All day long the pitiless heat beat down on the pavements, and at night when Mather came home to his little room on the second floor he found it a veritable oven. Sleep in that place was out of the question. He turned out the single gas jet and went down to the street. On the stoop were noisy, chattering groups, waiting vainly for a breeze from the water. There was much banter between the occupants of neighboring stoops and much high pitched laughter. The steps of his own lodging house, like the rest, bore its quota, but he felt no inclination to join them. Instead he walked out to the avenue and turned aimlessly downtown.

He had proceeded but a short distance when the strident notes of a cornet and trombone and the pulsating boom of a bass drum fell on his ears. Above the din sounded shrill voices, quavering a hymn. He had never yet attended a street corner service of the Salvation Army, and it struck him that this would be an excellent opportunity to do so. He quickened his steps and soon came upon them, men and women alike kneeling on the dirty pavements, while a raucous voiced lieutenant offered a prayer. A flaring gasoline torch on a nearby fruit stand lighted the scene uncannily and threw into flickering relief the faces of varied types crowded about the kneeling figures.

Mather was country born and bred. Years of life on the farm had given him a big frame and a pair of shoulders that many an athlete might have envied. It was an easy matter for him to elbow his way through the crowd to the inner edge of the circle, where he stood quietly watching the little drama before him with mild curiosity and even milder amusement.

The prayer finished, the little band arose, and the men replaced their caps. The lieutenant announced a hymn, the cornet squealed, the trombone brayed, the drum boomed valiantly, and the quavering voices rose once more on the hot night air.

At the conclusion of the hymn the lieutenant announced that they would listen to a few words from Sister Ruth. A slight, girlish figure stepped to the center of the circle from somewhere in the shadow. The light of the gasoline torch fell full upon her face—a face of wonderful purity and sweetness. There was a beauty in the level brows, the long dark lashes of the eyes and the full, red lips that the bonnet of the corps could not hide, and there was a supple grace of figure that the plain blue dress did not wholly conceal.

"DON'T HURT HIM, PLEASE DON'T," SHE BEGGED.

She began to speak in a voice full of earnest appeal. What she was saying Mather did not know, for he paid no heed to her words. He was not an impressionable young man—indeed, by his friends he was adjudged unusually hard headed and abundantly possessed of that quality generally termed "horse sense." But there was something that appealed to him strongly in that face beneath the regulation poke bonnet. He did not take his eyes from her while she was speaking, and when she had finished and stepped back into the shadow he was aware of a strange feeling, half of sadness, half of buoyancy. He elbowed his way out and walked homeward, strangely perturbed and strangely elated.

The following night and every night after that Mather attended the street corner meetings. If Sister Ruth spoke or prayed or sang he was supremely happy; if others filled her place he was aware of a feeling of disappointment. Being unskilled in the analysis of emotion, he did not recognize the trend of it all. He only knew that he wanted to be near her, to see her face, to listen to her voice.

One night as the women of the corps were passing the tambourines for the collection he beheld Sister Ruth coming in his direction through the crowd. She was smiling and nodding gratefully as the nickels and dimes fell jingling into the tambourine. Standing beside Mather were three young fellows, evidently the worse for liquor. As Sister Ruth approached them one of the three lifted his foot and kicked the tambourine smartly.

"Little h-higher, Gertie. I c'n kick higher 'n th-that," he hiccoughed familiarly.

"Apologize for that! Hear me? Apologize!" he said in a voice shaking with anger.

"Eh? What?" said the other. He looked up at Mather. Mather towered inches above him. There was, moreover, something very sinister in his eyes.

"I 'pologized," began the captive hastily.

Mather felt a light touch on his arm. He turned to find Sister Ruth standing beside him.

"Don't hurt him, please don't," she begged.

Mather smiled grimly.

"It's just as you say," said he. "I'll kill him if you say so."

"Let him go, please," she said, and Mather pushed the man away.

"Thank you," she said. Her eyes met his squarely; she blushed and hesitated a moment. "Thank you," she said again and was gone. That night Mather walked home on air.

* * * * * * *

Mather climbed the dingy stairs to the little hall at the corps barracks. It was Sunday evening. Outside the rain was falling dismally and the gutters ran rivers of mud. He sat down quite alone on one of the rear settees. A handful of people nearer the platform were the only others in the bare, cheerless place.

There were hymns and prayers and testimony quite as usual, and during it all Mather sat back in the shadows feasting his eyes on the outlines of a pretty face beneath a poke bonnet at one side of the platform.

Presently during the singing of a hymn Mather saw her coming down the aisle toward him, and his heart stood still. She stopped beside him, and her face flushed.

"Were you looking for—for salvation?" she faltered.

"No," said he quietly, "I was looking for—you."

She looked a trifle frightened. He saw the color suddenly leave her cheeks.

"Please sit down for a minute," he begged. She hesitated, then reluctantly complied. The hymn still went on stridently. Mather looked thoughtfully at the unshaded gas jets above the platform for a time.

"I need you more than the army does," he said at length. "I want you to leave it."

"Oh!" she gasped, drawing away from him.

"I realize you know nothing about me," he went on hurriedly. "I'm foreman in a machine shop. I make good wages. So far I've lived a life I'm not ashamed of. But I want you to satisfy yourself as to the truth of all this, of course."

She looked at him curiously.

"What do you know of me?" she asked.

"That I love you," said he stoutly.

"Is that enough?"

"Yes, that's enough," he declared.

She turned away from him for a moment. When he saw her face again her eyes were filled with tears.

"This work is very dear to me," she said.

He was silent.

"But of all men you are the one I should trust."

"And love?" he asked breathlessly.

There was a long pause.

"And love," she said very softly.

They were starting the last verse of the hymn, but Mather heard nothing of it. The bare, bleak room had suddenly become a glorious paradise. The yellow gas jets were glittering stars in a blue velvet sky. Sister Ruth's hand was in his.

A Mistaken Diagnosis.

In the boom days of Wichita one of the characters of the city was a lawyer, big paunched, big voiced, big necked and given to making political speeches.

He had a nasty way of talking about other people. One night while he was haranguing in the street one of the men whom he had attacked several times got excited, drew a knife and stabbed the orator.

He fell to the street, writhing and shouting: "I'm killed! I'm killed!"

They took him into a billiard room and laid him out on a billiard table. Word got to the newspaper offices, and the reporters came hurrying down.

The lawyer was stretched on the billiard table delivering his last speech, he said. In the middle of an impressive paragraph he saw the reporters.

He raised himself and bellowed, "Draw nigh, draw nigh, ye hounds of the press, and see a R-o-man die!"

And then the doctor came and found the knife had penetrated him about a sixteenth of an inch.—Saturday Evening Post.

Marshall Field's Advice.

A young bond salesman for a New York house interviewed Marshall Field in the spring of 1905 with a view to selling him a number of Pennsylvania railroad guaranteed bonds, yielding a little less than 4 per cent. "Young man," said Mr. Field, "you are only wasting my time and yours. I like your bonds. When the trustees of my estate come to investing the interest on my investment I hope they will buy that kind of bonds, but I am a business man and do not care to put a large part of my surplus in a fully developed property any more than I should care to buy out a business enterprise that seemed to me to have reached the limit of its growth, no matter how solid it might be. Your bonds are too good for me." Mr. Field, it will be noted, invested his surplus on the same principle upon which he built up his business—namely, to put the money where it has a chance to grow.—World's Work.

THE SPANIARD.

His Courtesy, His Cigarette and His Lottery Ticket.

Of the courteous manners of all Spaniards a traveler writes: "So anxious is every one to be of service to others that the stranger is apt to consider the Spaniards very inquisitive people. An experience in a Madrid tramcar was enlightening in this direction. A woman in getting into the car appeared to have slipped and hurt her foot. She and her husband began an animated discussion upon the incident, and of the dozen others in the car every one except ourselves craned forward to listen. The passengers were well assorted, ranging as they did from a captain in uniform down to a woman almost of the beggar class. But one and all in turn joined in the discussion without exciting the least resentment, opinions being apparently welcomed. Gentlemen arriving at their destination ceased arguing, raised their hats and went out, leaving others in possession until the principals left."

"There is no hour of the day or night which a Spaniard deems inappropriate to the practice of smoking," the same writer observes. "Whenever he finds time hanging heavily, which is frequently, he lights a cigarette. Time hangs heavily on a Spaniard's mind in the brief interval between the courses at lunch and dinner, whenever he wakes at night, when traveling between station and hotel in an omnibus and always when in a railway train, regardless of ladies. The practice of smoking is so universal in Spain that railway compartments for nonsmokers exist in theory only, and the habit, combined with that of loud talking at all hours of the night and morning, makes the average Spaniard undesirable as a traveling companion, especially at night."

Of the sturdy beggars who overrun Madrid: "The beggars usually have some pretense for asking alms in the shape of a decrepit guitar or fiddle under the cloak, where it remains. Another plea is the sale of lottery tickets, the lottery being a great institution in Spain. Each ticket costs 5 pesetas (about $1), and beggars in absolute rags, as often as not children, rush about with strings of these for sale."

WIT IN CONGRESS.

Some Famous Retorts Made During the Heat of Debate.

One of the most famous of Reed's retorts was made at the expense of Springer of Illinois. The "Maine giant" had just read one of Springer's own speeches in refutation of the latter's argument just concluded. The Illinoisan launched into philosophy upon the privilege of progressive thinkers to change their opinions.

"I honor them for it," he continued. "An honest man is the noblest work of God. As for me, Mr. Chairman, in the words of an eminent American statesman, 'I would rather be right than be president.'"

During the bitter fight against "Reed rules" the house was thrown into convulsions by General Spinola, who, pointing to the painting of the "Siege of Yorktown" hanging in the hall, gravely accused Speaker Reed of counting the Hessians in the background of the picture in order to make up a quorum.

The general always wore a tremendously high collar, so high, in fact, that Representative Tim Campbell tapped it one day with the ferule of his cane and inquired, to the amusement of the house, "Is General Spinola within?"

During the famous deadlock fight in the house over the civil rights bill General Ben Butler favored a Sunday session.

"Bad as I am, I have some respect for God's day," replied Sam Randall of Pennsylvania.

"Don't the Bible say that it is lawful to pull your ox or ass out of a pit on the Sabbath?" asked Butler. "You have thirty-seven asses on your side of the house, and I want to get them out of this ditch tomorrow. I think I am engaged in holy work."

"Don't do it," replied Randall. "I expect some day to see you in a better world."

"You'll be there, as you are here, a member of the lower house," flashed back the general, with telling effect.

A Hundred Million Suns.

A peep into the heavens through a modern telescope is a peep into the very depths of mystery. With such an instrument one may gaze upon 100,000,000 stars, each of them a burning, blazing sun. From what little we know of creation we cannot but believe that each of those suns is giving light and heat to a train of planets, just in the same manner that our sun gives light and life to his little flock of worlds. Beyond those 100,000,000 suns there may be hundreds of millions more. Thus they may continue "system after system and worlds without end."

A Serious Breach.

Intimate Friend—What was the breach of senatorial courtesy of which you accused Senator Graball? Senator Grafton (fiercely)—Why, the scoundrel approached the interests I represent and offered to work for 25 per cent less legal expenses than they're paying me! —Puck.

The Poet's Troubles.

Friend—What did you find the most difficult thing when you wrote your first verses? Poet—To find some one who would let me read them to him.

A COIN OF COURTESY

THE GUINEA OF THE ENGLISHMAN IS NOT A COIN AT ALL.

As a Piece of Real Money It Has No Existence, and It Is Used Only In Imagination as a Rather Awkward Standard of Monetary Value.

Of all the obstacles that confront the Englishman the guinea is the most amazing. The other day an American guest inquired of me, "What is a guinea?" He had been asked for one by a circulating library. It seems an easy question to answer, but as I had been puzzling over the division of an imaginary guinea into four parts the explanation took time. It was as difficult as explaining cricket to a German—in German.

"Show me one," said the American.

I confessed that I did not possess one.

"What, not $5.25?"

"Yes, but not a guinea. We don't have a guinea in England any more."

"But you talk in guineas!"

"That's our fun," I replied lamely.

Nevertheless there is something to be said for our system. Indeed, one might argue that this incessant obstacle race over the multiplication tables that we have to enter insures a bracing of the muscles. We are always kept on the alert to fathom the relations between a pottle, a perch and a guinea or some such absurd and fortuitous combination. And one may suspect that this tightening and strengthening of the muscles in the obstacle race is really the source of England's greatness.

For all practical purposes the guinea—in which we talk—is the most preposterously absurd coin in the world, for it does not exist—corporeally. Some few honest citizens wear spade guineas on their watch chains. But if they tried to pass them over to the booking clerk on the underground railway they would be in danger of the judgment. There are no guineas in England. Yes, in imagination they exist.

And never more accuse yourself of belonging to an unimaginative nation of shopkeepers! The guinea is the coin of courtesy, just because it is not a coin at all. And its preservation as an anomaly is a curious proof of the innate courtesy of the Englishman, who will face any arithmetical inconvenience rather than put a slur on a friend.

This you may see from the lists of subscriptions for the gentleman in distress. You cannot offer him the necessaries of life. When the friend falls by the wayside it must be guineas, not sovereigns, that you supply, and one feels glad that the remarks of the meanest sport that exists—the sport of kings—offers prizes in "sovs." It is merely the analogue of that convention which regulates gifts between equals.

Etiquette forbids your sending a friend a leg of mutton—that is, a sovereign, the ordinary, humdrum coin. But you may send him pheasants, oysters, grouse or salmon, more especially if the salmon is the victim of your own "rode, pole and perch." Possibly the real explanation is that, as a matter of courtesy, you may not give a man what he could obtain at the nearest shop—it must be something that is not easily obtainable.

Now, a guinea is not easily obtainable, and the difference between offering a man a guinea and offering him a sovereign is the difference between sending a man a leg of mutton and sending him a barrel of oysters. That little silly shilling stuck on to the sovereign, that retention of the ghost of a coin long dead and borne on a watch chain, with the locket containing a twist of great-great-auntie's hair, was its significance.

It is the embodiment of the Englishman's innate idealism. It is like the equally silly "Esq." which we tack on the names of friends. There are no esquires nowadays and no guineas, but we see them with the eye of faith. And we sacrifice to our faith considerable muscular exertion, many blobs of ink and sundry shillings that might otherwise stock our houses with cheap reprints of the world's best books.

You will naturally conclude that I did not put this view before my American friend. He would scarcely understand it. I led him gently to the palatial bank premises into which I hurriedly cast my weekly wage for fear I should lose it on the way home and pointed out to him (lowering my voice discreetly, as becomes the suppliant in the temple of wealth).

"Note that young man," I said. "He is adding up three columns of figures. There are guineas, things that won't fraternize with half crowns or four shilling pieces or florins or half sovereigns or sovereigns, but you will perceive that this young man is taking them in his stride. Now, what about his muscles?"

"I should conclude," said the American guest thoughtfully, "that a young man who can put 12 guineas together and make 'em dollars can do anything."

"The guinea," I explained as we went out into Piccadilly, "is the source of England's greatness." And the American guest remained thoughtful. —London Chronicle.

Kind of Him.

"No, dear," said he, "I don't intend to have you do your own work after we are married."

"Is that so, dear?" she cooed.

"Yes," he went on. "I have just been looking up your business affairs and I find that you are perfectly able to keep a hired girl."

A Narrow Escaj

ONE OF OUR CITY OFIALS HAS A RATHER EXCITI EXPERIENCE.

The danger of having firms lying round without being s whether or not they are loaded pretty well exemplified in thisy this morning, as a result of wa one of our city officials receiva big surprise.

It appears that the officia question was in a second-hand re, for what purpose is not stated ther is it relevant, for that matt— and while looking round happe to see a revolver which was appatly exposed for sale. The offic picked up the "gun" and, unthkingly, proceeded to pull the trig to see how it worked. The revol was of the self-cocking variety, work ed well. Two or three timehe hammer fell, and then bang e pistol went off. There had been artridge in one of the chambers. e bullet flew harmlessly, as luck uld have it, but the visitor reflect with a shudder that, a moment fore, it had been pointed in the ection of the storekeeper's wife. Tre had been the narrowest kind an escape from a tragedy. T incident gave the city official quita shock, as well it might. He will b shy of second-hand revolvers in iture.

The moral of this storyeems to be that all parties who ha second-hand revolvers in stock suld examine them carefully befe they expose them for sale. Sh occurrences as that of this morng are much too exciting for warweather.

The Coming Reunion

TORONTO OLD BOYS AND GIRLS WILL BE HERE TO-MORROW — PLANS FOR THEIR RECEPTION AND ENTERTAINMENT.

As our readers know, through the enterprise and loyalty of the Toronto contingent of the Old Boys Reunion of last year, those memorable dates, 22nd to 25th of July, 1905 are to be commemorated from year to year by them by a visit to the city they love so dearly, and then in 1910, and each succeeding five years, we are to have a repetition, only on a larger scale, of the first reunion, when, from all parts of this continent and from other lands, Belleville's sons and daughters will come home in their thousands. In view of the strong and unusual expression of opinion that the same organization which managed the reunion of last year should become a permanent one, the gentlemen who labored so earnestly and successfully consented, and those who are in the city will assist for the next three days, namely:

Will Honor Ticket Thirty Years Old.

Montreal, July 18.—It is seldom that a steamship company honors a ticket issued more than 30 years ago, and yet a case of this kind has just occurred. In May, 1875, when the Montreal Ocean Steamship Company, from which the Allan Line was evolved, held sway, a Miss Robertson, of Glasgow, purchased a ticket from Glasgow to Quebec, with the intention of crossing the Atlantic. Circumstances arose, however, which prevented her coming, but she retained the ticket. Some weeks ago she conceived the idea of taking the trip, and, having the ticket in her possession, she had it forwarded to the Messrs. Allan, by whom it has been honored, and who have issued another ticket in its stead. The old ticket is regarded as a great curiosity.

A Good Move

Arrangements were to-day made whereby the lower portion of Front street, from No. 1 fire hall to Wharf street, will be sprinkled during the Old Boys' Reunion. This is an excellent move, and would be much appreciated if it were done during the entire excursion season, as this portion of the city is dusty and much travelled.

U.S. Soldiers Dressed Like Messenger Boys

New York, July 19.—The World this morning says: George B. Winter, the English tailor of No. 39 Condit St., London, who was summoned here by Secretary Taft to remodel the uniforms of the American soldiers, sailed for home yesterday on the Oceanic.

"With the exception of a few changes all my designs have been accepted," said Mr. Winter. For one thing the United States cavalry may look forward to peg top breeches.

"All the uniforms will have a better appearance," said the London tailor. They will be smarter and more comfortable. The trousers of the cavalry will be cut a little larger and fuller around the thighs. The general lines of the uniforms, colors, designs and trimmings will be very much the same as at present.

"Such changes as are made are in lines around and over. They will make the men look more soldierly in service, on fatigue duty and on dress parade. There will be no change in the campaign hat. I think both officers and men will be pleased.

"There is no reason why a great country like this should dress her soldiers like a lot of messenger boys."

Stomach Troubles

It Is Officially Declared Salvadorean Army Was Destroyed.

Guatemala City, July 20.—This official account of the fighting at Platanar and Metapam, July 17, was communicated to the Associated Press yesterday:

"The last two battles, fought before 5 o'clock Wednesday morning, July 18, when the armistice began, were won by the Guatemalans, who defeated the Salvadoreans in Metapam, completely destroying them. If a few remained in the fortifications at Platanar, it was because the armistice which found them there was respected. Reports contradicting these facts are false."

Promptness Saves Burning Child.

Ingersoll, July 20.—The 3-year-old daughter of Wm. Murray had a narrow escape from being burned to death yesterday, playing with companions, who had made torches out of "cat-tails," by saturating them with coal oil. OUR FORBIDDEN FRUIT

Free Trade in Canada Described by Hon. N. A. Belcourt.

Mutual Ignorance the Danger to the Future of British Unity, Says Australian Agent at the Inauguration of the New Liberal Colonial Club In London For Study and Discussion—Other Colonial Speakers Heard.

London, July 20.—(C. A. P.)—The Earl of Durham presided at a dinner last night on the inauguration of the New Liberal Colonial Club, just organized to study and discuss colonial questions from a Liberal standpoint.

Proposing the toast of the British Dominions beyond the seas, the chairman said: "Liberals in the past had given colonies self-government. If they wished to maintain the unity of the empires all must work together apart from political party considerations in the cause of the British Dominions beyond the seas.

Hon. W. P. Reeves, Australian agent, responding, said the standing danger to the British Empire was the mutual ignorance between the mother country and the colonies.

Hon. N. A. Belcourt of Ottawa said that free trade was, unfortunately for Canada, forbidden fruit, (but he rejoiced to observe that at home the country enjoyed liberal property from the use of the system. The Liberal Colonies Club would render the greatest service to Canada by taking a sympathetic view of Canadian affairs. Full justice could not be done unless they witnessed its wants and possibilities as seen on the spot.

Others present were Sir Sanford Fleming and Hon. Col. Campbell of Winnipeg.

IRISH CATTLE IMPURE.

Dundee Advertiser Says Emerald Isle Should Not Throw Stones.

London, July 20.—The Dundee Advertiser quotes a statement of Robert Houston, secretary of the Armagh agricultural technical instruction committee, to the effect that in eight years he has subjected over 200 Irish cattle to the tuberculosis test. One hundred and sixty-four failed in the test.

The paper says those who live in glass houses should not throw stones. The Irish should be the last to cast imputations on the purity of Canadian cattle, yet with Canadian and other supplies stopped, upon Ireland Britain would have to depend for her stores.

Home Rule For Scotland.

London, July 20.—Irritated by the lack of opportunities to discuss Scottish questions in the House of Commons and somewhat jealous of the promises of greater control of local affairs made to Ireland in the King's speech at the opening of Parliament, the Scottish members have elected Mr. Birrie, Liberal member for the North Division of Aberdeen, to introduce a bill providing for the establishment of a Parliament for Scotland. The project is not taken seriously. There is no demand among the people of Scotland for a local Parliament.

The butchers' cattle most called for are nice handy heifers and steers, weighing from 900 to 1000 lbs. each, the weather being too warm for the thick, fat, heavy cattle that were in demand a little while ago.

Feeders and Stockers.

H. Murby reports a rather indifferent market for stockers and feeders, there being very few outside buyers present, which is usually the case at this season of the year. The common kind have taken a big slump, with the mediums not faring much better. There were not too many of the good kind offered, which are holding their own much better. Mr. Murby bought about 200 head this week, ranging in weight from 500 to 1000 pounds, at the following quotations: Best 900 to 1000-lb steers, $3.80 to $4; best 800 to 900-lb. steers, $3.60 to $3.80; best 600 to 800-lb. steers, $3.25 to $3.60; medium stockers, from $3 to $3.25; common stockers, from $2.10 to $2.50.

Milch Cows.

About 40 milch cows and springers were offered on Wednesday and Thursday. Trade was not good, generally speaking, common cows being almost unsaleable; in fact, it was reported that some drovers shipped some of their cows home again. Good to prime quality cows, of which there were few, sold from $45 to $54 each; medium to good, $35 to $40; common, $25 to $30; inferior at $17 to $20 each.

Veal Calves.

About 200 veal calves were on sale. Good to choice or rather, the best of those offered, sold readily at as good prices as ever, but the inferior to common light calves were easier in price. The bulk sold at $4.50 to $6 per cwt. One lot of skinny things sold at low as $3.50. Good new milk-fed calves are worth $6.50 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep and lambs are still in excellent demand at firm prices. Export ewes at $4 to $4.40; bucks, $3.50 to $3.75 per cwt. Lambs sold at $7 to $7.50 per cwt. Export sheep are wanted.

AS SHORT, SHARP JERKS

Earthquakes at Socorro, New Mexico, Are Sickening.

Fifty-Two Shocks Since Sunday Have Caused Much Damage and Have Depopulated a Big Section of Country—Fearful Rumblings Like Heavy Thunder, Makes Thousands Flee—Menace to Railways.

Albuquerque, N. M., July 20.—Refugees in large numbers are arriving here from Socorro, N. M., where great damage has been wrought by a succession of earthquakes since July 2. In that time not an hour has passed without one or more quakes. The centre of the disturbance is a zone 30 miles long by about 10 miles wide, running from the Ladrone Mountains, southeast through Socorro, San Antonio and San Marcia. This side of the belt the shocks have been hardly felt.

Rumblings Like Heavy Thunder.

Each one is preceded by a loud rumbling like heavy thunder, which can be heard approaching from the northwest before it reaches Socorro.

People are leaving on every train, and those who cannot ride on the railroad are leaving by wagon. About 2,000 persons are camping out in tents, and no one dares to go indoors. Practically every residence and business block in the town has been damaged. There has been much distress among the people who are camping in the open, as heavy rains have fallen in the last two days, one being the heaviest for 50 years.

Ground Slips Violently.

The shocks generally occur as short, sharp jerks, the ground seeming to slip violently. It is believed that the adjustment of rock strata in the rugged Ladrone and Magdalena Mountains is the cause of the continued shocks. Provisions are growing scarce and real distress is feared for the refugees.

"The noise and the quakes are frightful," said Mrs. J. J. Leeson, a refugee from Socorro. "I have experienced earthquakes at Los Angeles and San Francisco, but never anything so sickening as these prolonged rockings and jerkings of the earth at Socorro. Water placed in a bowl will show continuous vibrations between the greater shocks, showing that the earth is never still. Not a house in town is safe to enter and chimneys and walls topple with each recurrent tremor."

52 Shocks Since Sunday.

Fifty-two shocks have been felt since Sunday morning. The court house is wrecked. The building of the School of Mines is cracked and nearly every residence in the city is destroyed or much damaged. The town is largely built of adobe or brick. The Sante Fe Railroad has sent box cars to Socorro to take the people away, and many have already fled to old towns. Huge boulders have been jarred down on the railroad track and trains cannot enter the town. They stop several miles outside the place.

Hot Springs Hotter.

The water in the Hot Springs near Socorro has increased several degrees in temperature, and the inhabitants fear that the extinct volcano ten miles from the town will become active again.

The entire surrounding country has felt the shocks and much damage has been done, especially at San Marcia and Magdalena.

Menace to Railways.

Topeka, Kans., July 20.—Reports received at the general office of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe road tell of delay to traffic on account of New Mexico earthquake. Boulders shaken down from the mountain sides have covered the railway tracks in places and fully fifty carloads of lava covers the tracks south of San Marcia.

Monument to Champlain.

Bar Harbor, Me., July 20.—A monument to mark the discovery of Mount Desert Island by the French explorer, Samuel De Champlain, on Sept. 5, 1604, was dedicated Wednesday. The monument is a moss-covered boulder, placed just east of the Seal Harbor, facing the open Atlantic. On one side of the stone is a bronze tablet with the following inscription: "In honor of Samuel De Champlain, born in France, 1567, died at Quebec, 1635: Soldier, sailor, explorer and administrator, who gave this island its name." On the reverse of the stone, there is an inscription which is an extract from Champlain's dairy.

Estate of Wm. Hendrie.

Toronto, July 20.—The will of the late William Hendrie of Hamilton was filed for probate yesterday. The estate is valued in round figures at $2,300,000 The estate is divided equally among the ten children. The widow is left the homestead, and an annuity. The sons and Mrs. Hendrie are the executors. The succession duties payable to the Ontario Government, will, it is estimated, amount to $125,000.

Loses Good Place, Suicides.

St. John, N. B., July 20.—Horace Peters of West St. John, last night committed suicide by blowing his brains out with a revolver. Through a change of management, he had recently lost a fine position in a large Boston wholesale house, and worried over the matter until he became demented. Peters, who was 34 years of age, leaves a young wife. Both belonged to the first families in the city.

Borne to the Tomb.

Toronto, July 20.—Representatives of the Governor-General, of Bench and Bar, of the Masonic Order and many leading citizens attended the funeral yesterday afternoon of the late Walter Barwick, K. C., who was killed in the Salisbury wreck. At the cathedral a solemn and impressive service was held. There was a full choir.

Killed in Sawmill.

There are Teas and Teas

There is what we migh call the up-grade and the down-grade. Most teas come under the latter heading—not that they were'nt once good, but the average dealer buys a box of tea that he keeps under the counter where it gets sta'e and loses most of its goodness. Stroud's teas are of the up-grade variety. We receive our teas fresh every week from our head quarters in Montreal, and while we have them in our store we keep them in tins that are practically air tight, but we don't have them long enough for them to get stale.

Canadian Northern Successfully Tenders For Railway Bonds.

London, July 21.—In a circular issued by the bondholders committee of the Qu'Appelle Railway, it was stated that unsuccessful negotiations were carried on with the view to selling to the C. P. R. These proving a failure the offer of the Canadian Northern was accepted.

Mackenzie and Mann, give in exchange for every existing £100, 6 per cent. bond £107 in the Qu'Appelle, Long Shore and Saskatchewan Railroad and Steamboat Co., 4 per cent. debenture stock, not to exceed £1,050,000 in all, having 20 years to run. Principal and interest are guaranteed by the Canadian Northern Railway Co.

Shot Severs Artery.

Peterboro, July 21.—Thomas Robertson a lumberman living at Hamilton, was accidentally killed Thursday night at Cedar Lake. Robertson, with Daincourt and Willis Stone, of Peterboro, was scaling timber on the shore of the lake, and in getting out of a canoe, a rifle, held by Daincourt Stone, is reported to have accidentally discharged, the ball passing through Robertson's left thigh and severing an artery. Inside of an hour and a half Robertson died from loss of blood. Deceased was 26 years of age, and leaves a wife and three children.

Sharing With Employes.

Ingersoll, July 21.—The John Morrow Machine Screw Co. have set aside the sum of $1,500 to be divided among their employes and the employes of the Ingersoll Nut Co., which is under the same management. The generous policy of sharing their profits with their employes was adopted by the company last year.

The Jews Are For Victims.

Douma Says Government Incited Class Against Class.

Lower House of Parliament Scores Heavily—Expresses Distrust of Ministry and Demands its Resignation—Calling In Guards—Syzran Wiped Out by Fire and 35,000 People are Homeless and Without Food.

St. Petersburg, July 21.—At the opening session of the Lower House yesterday the question of the publication of the address to the country, which President Mouromtzeff Thursday night decided had not been carried owing to the lack of a quorum, was allowed to go over until Monday.

Without debate the House then adopted a resolution on the subject of the Bialystok massacre, demanding the prosecution of the military and police officials involved, irrespective of rank.

Strong Indictment.

The resolution, which constitutes a strongly worded indictment of the central Government, which is held responsible for the secret propaganda inciting class against class, says:

"Realizing its powerlessness to suppress the revolutionary movement the Government attempts to break it up by inciting one portion of the population against the other, especially selecting the Jews for victims."

The resolution concludes with another expression of distrust of the ministry and a demand for its resignation.

May Dissolve.

The Bourse Gazette says that an extraordinary council was sitting yesterday afternoon at Peterhoff, with General Count Ignatieff, the noted reactionary, M. Pobedonostseff, former procurator-general of the holy synod; General Trepoff, commandant of the palace; M. Stichinsky, Minister of Agriculture, and others in attendance discussing the advisability of the immediate dissolution of Parliament.

Calling in Guards.

The feeling of general alarm is increased by the fact that all Thursday night guard regiments marched into the city from the camp at Krasnoye-Selo. Moreover it is known several colonels were summoned to the headquarters of the commander of the St. Petersburg garrison, where they received instructions regarding the disposition of their troops in the case of certain eventualities. The evidence seems conclusive that the Government has deliberately prepared for the emergency.

So far as can be ascertained, however, no final decision has been taken at Peterhof.

35,000 Homeless.

Syzran, Province of Simbirsk, July 21.—The fire which was started here July 19 continued through the most of the day until the whole of the city, with the exception of a small section near the railway station was consumed. The conflagration has rendered 35,000 people homeless, who also are without food.

The Intercolonial.

One must wonder at the effrontery of the Grit Ottawa Free Press, which, with daring mendacity, ventures to say that—

> "When, ten years ago, the Liberals came into power, huge deficits were of yearly occurrence (on the Intercolonial Railway). There has been deficits yearly since, but they have been continually growing smaller until this year the first surplus in the history of the line will be announced and this without sacrificing efficiency, either."

The above, as everybody knows, who know anything about it, is rot, pure and simple. That there were deficits under Conservative rule of possibly a quarter of a million yearly, no one denies, but, since 1896, the deficits under Grit rule have increased year by year till the great sum of two million dollars was reached last year. As the London Free Press points out, the Minister of Railways, Hon. Mr. Emmerson, in despair professed to see no way out but to sell the road, or hand it over to one or other of the great railway corporations. He gave reasons in the House why the Intercolonial would not pay. One of them was the length of haul, and another the cheap competition by water along its route. This year's surplus must have been a great surprise to the Minister, if his previous statements were honest, and these arguments had any value. It is probable, however, that the scare raised in the Railway Department by the hugeness of last year's shortage and the criticism of the Opposition, caused such a shake-up on the Intercolonial that, together with the general prosperity, a fair showing is now made. How the management of the Intercolonial was abused was seen in the graft concerning ordinary supplies. The lubricating oil, bought from Petrolea producers at 5c a gallon, was sold to the Intercolonial (that is, the Government) at 10c a gallon. The New Brunswick Petroleum Company, of which the Minister of Railways, Hon. Mr. Emmerson, was president, reaped the enormous profit on these deals. Was it any wonder that a Government railway which paid 100 per cent. extra for supplies, to the Rake-off man, got so far in arrears? The coal, also, that was used in the locomotives, was so inferior that the engineers constantly complained that speed could not be got out of it, with the most extravagant use. Moreover, large quantities of coal were bought at points westward along the line at a cost of fifty cents per ton over the price at the mines. Such like outlays, conjoined with overmanning to an extent that would be ludicrous on a commercial line, and the gross favoritism shown in carrying traffic free, led to last year's exhibition of failure, when Mr. Emmerson had to confess to a deficit of two million dollars, and proposed to rid the land of the burden. It is now seen that by half-decent management and "without sacrificing efficiency to economy," the Intercolonial can be made to pay its expenses. But why was not this attempted before, during the ten years the Grits have held office?

Mining Rights.

Nothing, perhaps, more clearly reveals the benefits of the change in the administration of Provincial affairs than the new Government's handling of our mineral wealth. The old policy was to give everything away, care being taken in most cases that the recipient was a friend of the Government. Now the mines are disposed of with some appreciation of the fact that the people are entitled to a portion of the wealth. The Gillies limit has been reserved for the Province, and we may expect big returns whenever operations begin. The lands that are passing out of the control of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway Commissioners are being disposed of to advantage. For instance, eight Ottawa gentlemen, who have not yet formed a company, have secured the right to develop the portion of the railway right-of-way other than the track allowance, between mileage 101 and 105. This extends two miles to the north and south. The northwest 40 acres of the Cobalt town site has also been disposed of on somewhat similar terms to those exacted for the southwest 37 acres a little while ago.

The parties who have acquired the right-of-way will pay to the Government railway a bonus of $50,000, while the purchasers of the northwest 40 acres will contribute a bonus of $22,000 All will pay royalties while the 99-year lease is in force. These will be figured out at 10 per cent. of the gross value at the mouth of the mine of all ore mined assaying less than $400 a ton; 25 per cent. when the value is between $400 and $1,000 a ton, and 50 per cent. when the output assays over $1,000 a ton.

And try the atmosphere,

The golden days you used to know,
When there was wood to lug,
Potato patches, row on row,
And every row to "bug."
While all you cared for was to go
And hunt some corner snug.

Beside a stream with pole in hand,
To sprawl upon the grass
And feel the sweetness of the land
Into your being pass—
Instead, at duty's stern command,
Of hoeing garden sass.

The lazy days are creeping on,
The song of June is sweet,
The roses bloom upon the lawn,
Though toil is incomplete,
The eagerness of work is gone,
There's lead upon the feet.

The lazy days of summer time,
The lazy days of life,
When labor is a mortal crime,
And what's the use of strife,
When all the woodlands are sublime
With songs of robins rife?

You stretch, you yawn, you look away
From books that are to keep
You hunger for a holiday
Along the store to creep,
And underneath a bush to lay
And sleep—and sleep—and sleep!

The proposed locating of a branch of the Cudahy Packing Company of Chicago in Toronto shows the value of a good name, says a Quebec contemporary. The firm's Toronto product will be acceptable in Britain, while its Chicago product will be rejected. Our representatives in Britain must see that the law is enforced there so that Chicago products do not enter under Toronto labels, and our city authorities must establish a system of inspection that will make it impossible for Chicago abuses to develop in that city. We are exposed to all the dangers that resulted so disastrously in the windy city, and we must not trust to our good luck any longer.

A wide discussion is going on in certain newspapers following a report of the General Federation of Women's Clubs of America to the effect that no young man who enjoys a salary of $100 a month should shrink from marriage on account of the supposed cares, trial, and sacrifices it involves. This conclusion was reached by a special committee, which studied the question of simple and economic living from the point of view of the young man of small income. Starting with the assumption that an eligible young men has saved $500 and met a young woman whose training at home and in school has fitted her to do her part in the making of an attractive home, the committee concludes that a young man can and should, boldly and fearlessly, "pop" the question and ask that the day be named. By tables and diagrams it is demonstrated by the committee that on a salary of $100 a month, a married couple can in the circumstances supposed, not only live comfortably in a small home, but save upwards of $300 toward a little home in the country during the first year. In this estimate, however, no provision is made for sickness, accidental expenses, etc., but apart from these it is sought to prove that married life is not so expensive a luxury or heavy a burden financially as many young men have been led to believe. Such teaching is wholesome and sound and should materially advance the cause of clean, simple, manly and womanly home-making.

BERLIN IS MACHINE MADE.

English Writer Calls It Stiff, Rigid and Rectilinear.

Was Berlin made last year or the year before? It is impossible to say from looking at it. Some of the trees in the streets look at least ten years old, but they must have been planted long before the city was thought of. The houses and the streets and the lampposts and the statues are all much too neat and new to have endured the rains of more than one winter. It is all, in fact, quite too new to be comfortable. One feels afraid to sleep in any of the houses lest rheumatism should be lying in wait in rooms where the plaster has not had time to harden.

I drove from the station in a "droshki" with a monstrously old horse. Time had bent his forelegs into a very good imitation of a switchback railway, and as we plodded solemnly along the brand new asphalt roadway, with the brand new houses on either side and an occasional brand new electric car, with a brand new driver in a brand new uniform, I found myself wondering what the old horse must think of it all. One day he may have been grazing in an open field, and when he passed that way a week or so later he found a new broad boulevard, with hotels and shops and churches and great blocks of flats, all sprung up like mushrooms.

Berlin, then, is a great deal too perfect to be satisfactory. It is the machine made, not the hand made, article—it was very decidedly made, not born. There is no spontaneity in it, no life. Compared to, say, London, it is like a beautiful marble statue to a living woman.

Berlin is, in fact, an awful object lesson to emperors and others who try to make a capital city out of a respectable village. It is easy to put up imposing buildings—if you have the money—and to cut out broad tree lined roads and have everything neat and nice and fine, but you only make your village bigger and finer without making it any the more a capital city. There is no getting away from the feeling that Berlin is a village—a big village, a beautiful, rectilinear, new-out-of-the-bandbox village, but a village all the same.—London Chronicle.

GIRGENTI THE BEAUTIFUL.

"No Place of Ruins in the World More Beautiful Than This."

Every one has heard of Girgenti, as of Syracuse, before coming to Sicily. The most beautiful city of antiquity has left an endearing name, and if the Girgenti of today be far from the Agrigentum of Roman splendor and still further from the Acragas of Greek beauty and magnificence it is still nobly worth seeing. Even the least responsive imagination can hardly fail to apprehend some idea of what this town must have been of old, when Acragas, with its vast extent and over 200,000 inhabitants, looked out across the dark blue waters of the Greek sea or Mare Africano from a lordly wilderness of superb temples and magnificent buildings of all kinds. Today it is worth a pilgrimage from the ends of the earth. There is perhaps no place of ruin in the whole world more beautiful than this. To see it, as the present writer last saw it, in a golden sunset glow, with the great temples gleaming like yellow ivory and the town itself of a dusky gold and the sea beyond and uplands and mountains behind irradiated with a serene glory of light, is to see what will be for life an unforgettable impression, an ever deeply moving remembrance.

To localize the three loveliest views in Sicily (and I fancy that most travelers would agree with me) I should specify that from the terrace of the Hotel Timeo at Taormina, that from the monastery-hostelry of Madonna del Tindaro over Tyndaris and the Aeolian Isles and that from the terrace of the Hotel Belvedere on the south wall of Girgenti, looking out on the lovely temples, the beautiful uplands and slopes and the blue sea washing Porto Empedocle below.

How Canada Was Named.

According to an eminent authority, when the Portuguese under Gaspar Cortereal in 1500 first ascended the St. Lawrence they believed it to be the strait of which they were in quest, through which a passage might be discovered into the Indian sea. When, however, they arrived at the point when they could clearly ascertain that this was no strait, but a river, they exclaimed repeatedly in their disappointment, "Ca nada" ("Here nothing"). These words, remembered by the natives, were repeated to the next Europeans who visited the land. The newcomers, hearing the phrase so frequently, conjectured that it must be the name of the country, so "Canada" it remains.

Money Made No Difference.

A poor but worthy old couple had a rare stroke of luck. Some relative died and left them a fortune of £20. The night of the arrival of the lawyer's letter telling them of their good fortune they sat up late, discussing the future and what they were to do with the great sum they had inherited. When they had done and were rising to go to bed the old man said, with a grand air of magnanimity: "Weel, I suppose, Janet, this'll mak' nae difference. We'll just speak to the neebours as before."—London Standard.

The Fact For the Figure.

"Of course," said the bachelor girl, "I am lonely, but I am afraid marriage would be out of the frying pan into the fire."

"It's more likely," answered Miss Cayenne, "to be out of the chafing dish into the gas stove."

Service over the Lake Shore Railway may well be called spotless service. Throughout this entire system there is a noteworthy lack of dust and dirt. Sparkling linen and white-clad waiters greet the traveller in the dining cars, and this "spick and span" appearance extends throughout the train. Talks on Orange Meat
(THE PURE FOOD)

Never touched by human hands.

From the time the wheat is unloaded from the steamers, until you open the package in your own dining room—human hands never touch Orange Meat. Sifting, brushing and washing the wheat—steam cooking—malting—flaking and toasting—filling the cartons—carrying and packing—everything is done by machinery.

So careful are we to insure Orange Meat being not only clean but with all its rich, nutty flavor retained, that each package is lined with specially made mercerized paper.

Sun-shine Fur-nace

The slanting fire-pots in common furnaces provide a rest-place for ashes and clinkers, and these clog the draft, prevent radiation, make the furnace hard to shake, and fill up the fire-pot.

The "Sunshine" pot is straight up and down, which gives an uninterrupted course to the draft, and prevents ashes and clinkers sticking to the sides.

The same skill and thought has been used on every feature of the "Sunshine" furnace—it is Canada's greatest heater.

Send Down Grace.

A little Portland miss, whose first name is Grace, had never attended church, being too little and too lively to be trusted there, according to the Kennebec Journal. But at last her mother permitted her to accompany an elder sister, giving her grave warnings beforehand. The rector of the church was a frequent caller at Grace's home, and her mother feared that on this account she might take liberties.

"You must sit still," she said, "and you must not say one word, but let Mr. Hammond do the talking. Now, remember."

Gracie behaved very well in meeting. As soon as she reached home she reported:

"Oh, mamma, I did keep still—real still, and when Mr. Hammond called me right out in meeting I never stirred to go to him."

"Called you? Why, child, he never called you in meeting."

"Yes, but he did, mamma. He said three or four times, 'Send down Grace,' but I sat as still as a mouse."

The Meaning of "Bridge."

The story goes that years ago, long before bridge was known in London clubs, two families who played the game under the name of "Russian whist" were living in neighboring houses at or near Great Dalby in Leicestershire. The only road of communication lay over a somewhat dangerous bridge. It was a frequent occurrence for the departing guests to say to their hosts: "Thank goodness, it is your 'bridge' tomorrow," meaning that the other party would have to cross the dangerous bridge the next night; hence is said to have arisen the title of "bridge." We give this story for what it is worth, but in our own mind we have little doubt that the modern name of "bridge" is merely a very easy corruption of the old title of "biritch." The two words "biritch" and "bridge" have absolutely the same sound when spoken quickly, so that it is easy to imagine how the change came to pass.—London Saturday Review.

The Deer's Tracks.

A deer if walking always places its feet firmly closed upon the ground, and consequently the track is sharply drawn—that is, the hoof is not spread to any appreciable extent. Exceptions are sometimes the track of deer that are heavy with fawns, during spring and early summer, and those of old bucks during the rutting season. But even then the heels of their tracks are considerably closer than in tracks made by a hog or a sheep. The hoofs of the latter two animals are always rounder at the toe than those of deer, making the tracks they leave easily distinguishable, and if the difference is not discernible in frozen snow the fact that the trail made by hogs or sheep does not register should settle all doubts for the tracker. A deer if not wounded will always step with its hind foot in the track made by the front foot.—Field and Stream.

JESUS TEACHING HOW TO PRAY GOLDEN TEXT IS "LORD, TEACH US HOW TO PRAY."

HISTORICAL SETTING.

Time—December, A. D. 29, not long after the last lesson.

Place—Somewhere in Perea.

1. As He was praying. This is stated not because it was unusual for Jesus to pray, but because of the question that grew out of it.

There is no better way of teaching than by example. The fact that Jesus, the good Master, the ideal man, prayed, inspired the disciples to pray; for if Jesus found help and power in prayer, how much more His disciples; if He needed to pray, how much greater was their need. They saw also the answers to Jesus' prayer. "Men of the world in the best sense of the word—heroes of literature, like Scott and Johnson; men of research, like Maxwell or Faraday; statesmen like Gladstone or Lincoln; soldiers like Gordon, Havelock . . . have believed in prayer and used it." In a certain place. The place is unknown, but many of the solitudes of Palestine must have been holy ground like that around the flaming bush to Moses, because Jesus communed there with the Heavenly Father, and the heavens were opened to Him, as to Jacob at Bethel.

We must learn to do even the best things, if we would do them in the best way. With the holiest and most earnest spirit, we need to learn how to express it most perfectly. The one most full of music, or of artistic talent, takes the greatest pains to learn how best to express what is within him. So it is with the spirit of prayer. The more we have of it, the more we desire to learn to pray.

Prof. George Adam Smith, in his sermon on "Our Lord's Example in Prayer," points out three lessons we learn from our Teacher's example.

1. He based all prayer on the Fatherhood of God. Prayer is not an effort to tell God what He knows already, not an attempt to change His wise and loving will; but it is the unburdening of heavy hearts, the converse of our hearts with the Father.

2. Jesus made prayer the real battle and battlefield of life. His seasons of prayer were often seasons of struggle, trouble and strivings; as at the grave of Lazarus, when the Greeks came to visit him, in Gethsemane.

So General Gordon made his prayers the real battle of life. More than once he said; "I had a hard half-hour this morning hewing Agag in pieces before the Lord." Agag was his old evil self, "catering for notice and praise." His prayers were strivings for sanctification and character.

Professor Smith, climbing the Weisshorn, had nearly reached the summit, when the guide stood aside to let him be first on the top. Exhilarated by the thought of the great view, but forgetful of the high gale that was blowing on the other side of the rocks, he sprang eagerly up them, and stood erect to see the view. The guide pulled him down—"On your knees, sir; you are not safe there except on your knees." The summits of life—of knowledge, of love, of success, are full of perils. "On your knees!" Use every one as an altar on which to devote yourself anew to God.

Let the children learn many lessons of prayer; Be reverent. Be courteous toward your Heavenly Father, with devout attitude, closed eyes and open heart. "Irreverence is always a mark of a vulgar and shallow nature."

2. When ye pray, say. Matthew's fuller report is: "After this manner, therefore, pray ye."

This prayer expresses the true spirit of prayer. It is the spirit more than the form that is to be imitated. Thus the apostles understood it, so far as we can learn from their recorded prayers. The fact that Christ gave his prayer in two different forms shows that no exact form of words was required.

It is right, and often blessed, to use the Lord's Prayer as a form for bringing large numbers into the unity of worship, provided it is always filled with the spirit; but it must not be imposed upon the worshippers as a law, nor its mere repetition viewed as a virtue.

The order and movement of this prayer is full of instruction for our daily life. It implies the great essential teachings of Christianity.

Note on this prayer as a whole; It is based on the Fatherhood of God. We are children, prodigal it may be, often forgetting our Father, often disobeying him, and yet children still, who may come penitently, and become not only by birth, but by the new birth his spiritual children. The praying itself implies that we want to be His true children. The fact that God is our Father ennobles man. His soul is kindled from the divine, and partakes of the divine nature. The first petitions are for the kingdom and its righteousness. We have not the true spirit of prayer, we are not true children of God, unless we care more for His kingdom than we do for ourselves. Christ would fain exercise in us the demon of worldly, and even of religious selfishness, uplifting us to see a vision of all things in God, inviting us to open all our hearts to His transfiguring and inspiring effluence. Our personal daily needs, the basis of all that we can do for the kingdom. The ladder that reaches heaven has its foot upon the earth. God cares for our earthly welfare. We can ask what we desire, but put those desires in a subordinate place, as in this prayer. The petition is for more than bodily food. It includes supplies of spiritual food, food for the hungry heart, food for the taste, for every right hunger, food for the mind, food for the soul. All these are ennobled by being received from the hand of a loving Father.

Our personal spiritual needs. Forgiveness, without which no further advance can be made. Escape from temptations either by leading us away from those too great for us, or by giving us grace to conquer and change enemies into friends.

5. Go unto him at midnight. In hot climates travelling was largely done in the night. But for the householder it was a most inconvenient time, when it would require a good deal of patience to grant the request. Lend me three loaves. Thin cakes, of which it would easily take three to satisfy a hungry man.

6. For a friend of mine. Giving the reason for his inopportune but urgent request. The friend, arriving at that late hour, was doubtless suffering from hunger. There were almost no hotels in the east to which he could go. The host was entirely out of food, but hoped that his friend might have some left over, though usually they prepare bread enough only for a single day. Perhaps he did not even have meal to make bread of.

7. Trouble me not. Bruce makes this equivalent to "Don't bother me." My children are with me in bed. In the same apartment, but not in the same bed. Each had a bed, or mattress. I cannot rise and give thee. It is altogether too much trouble.

8. Not . . . because he is his friend. Though the higher motives will not avail, for the friendship is so weak. Yet because of his importunity. He will rise and give him. It was less trouble to grant his wishes than it was to endure the unwearied importunity.

V. A Lesson from Facts and Principles. Prayer is the door to the divine treasure house, which contains supplies for all our needs. It is a historical fact, of which the Old Testament history is full, that the way to receive is to ask. It is the natural method, according to God's laws, that the way to receive is to seek.

9. Ask . . seek . knock. These words imply three methods of prayer, and perhaps three degrees of intensity. Ask, express your desire, go to God with it, including and gathering up in itself the "seek" and the "knock," as in v. 13, for these are modes of asking. Seek by all active efforts, which are acted prayers, use all possible means; as in the parable of the pearl of great price. Knock at the door of God's treasure house of blessings which no seeking can obtain, but which must be given by God.

10. For every one that asketh receiveth. There is no exception. True asking will combine seeking and knocking. The answer will be given according to the kind of asking. And every one that seeketh findeth. Most of the best things must be sought for, as the graces, education, character. For others, as the gift of the Spirit, special providences, divine guidance, God's tender love, opportunities, revelations, we must knock at God's treasury door, and to him that knocketh it shall be opened.

11. If a son. Jesus appeals to parent nature. Ask bread (a loaf) . . . will he give him a stone? The loaves or cakes used in the east at that time are said to have resembled a smooth, flat stone. No father would deceive his son by appearances, and give him something useless and costless instead of what he asks.

Illustration.—Dr. Trumbull, at the convent of St. Catherine, saw the coarse, black bread made into hard balls from unbolted barley meal, with which some dependent serfs were fed. He obtained a ball of this bread, about the size of a small orange, intending to use it as a paper-weight, "but it was accidentally thrown away a few days later, being mistaken by me for a piece of granite. Then it was that I realized how a man might give to his son a stone, when he asked for bread."

If he ask a fish, will he . . . . give him a serpent? Which resembles some forms of fish. Here the substitute spoken of is not merely useless, but hurtful.

12. Ask an egg . . . offer him a scorpion? The white scorpion with the tail folded would not look unlike a small egg. Perhaps, however, the contrast refers only to the different properties of the egg and the scorpion, which is sufficiently emphatic.

There are few fathers who would refuse the necessities of life to a child, or give that which is harmful, or useless instead.

If the child asks for the stone, the serpent, the scorpion—anything injurious—the father will give him good food instead.

13. If ye then, being evil, imperfect, with more or less selfishness mingled with all you do, give good gifts unto your children. The parent that does not do this is a rare monster, probably does not exist. How much more. The difference is infinite. Shall your heavenly Father. The holy, heavenly, loving, perfect Father, who makes heaven what it is, who is able to answer every prayer, who loves his children and desires for them every good that is possible. Give the Holy Spirit. The best of all good gifts, the sum and source of all. It is like giving light to those in the dark, or sight to the blind, revealing all the glories of earth and sky. The good Father who gives this best of all gifts will not withhold any of the lesser good things.

Proof in Belleville.

Mrs. Green, of East James street, has proven what Anti-Pill can and will do.

"I think Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill is the best medicine I have ever known," says Mrs. A. V. Green. "For years I have suffered with constipation, and I got so bad at last that no ordinary dose of medicine would help me. I suffered with piles a great deal.

"I am a working woman and always very busy, and I got nothing to help me till I tried Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill. I found this a very satisfactory remedy and can cheerfully recommend it to any who may be suffering as I did."

Right at home here in Belleville is this case, and Mrs. Green will cheerfully testify to anyone in earnest what she knows of Anti-Pill, the Twentieth Century Cure for Constipation.

Cures Rheumatism

"I had an attack of Rheumatism—pains near my heart—which increased to such a degree that I became very anxious. I lost my appetite, and an intense itching or heating of the head made life miserable. I asked a druggist, was there nothing he could suggest that would help me, and he replied 'Why not try ABBEY'S SALT?' I did so, and can now state positively, and without solicitation that the Rheumatism has disappeared—my appetite is grand—and the itching of my scalp has ceased.

I suggested to my aged Father and Mother that they should try ABBEY'S SALT for their Rheumatism—and they tell me they have received immense benefit."

A Run-Down Woman Made Well by Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women

Miss Jennie Thomas, of Dixville, Que., was in a run-down condition—tired, and all dragged out. Thousands of women know just how she felt.

She was given a box of Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women by her family physician. She took them two weeks and then wrote us in these words:

"I have received such great benefit from taking your tablets, I desire to continue taking them two weeks longer. The benefit secured from the one box has been so great, and I feel so much better now, I am satisfied only one box more will be necessary to effect what you claim for your tablets, that is, make me again a healthy woman."

She was sent the second box. She took them and has since assured us of perfect restoration to health.

And they are doing this for women all the time. Every day we receive letters from grateful women, testifying to their gain in health since taking these tablets.

If you are in a run-down condition, or suffer from any weakness peculiar to your sex, they will restore you to perfect health. They make healthy women.

But you must do as Mrs. Thomas did—take the tablets. You will notice improvement the first week.

Honest, girls, you haven't changed a bit.

Ha. Ha! Percy, so you're growing a moustache. Well, really, if we do take anything it will have to be ice cream.

Come along and take a spin in my new automobily
Oh! my Lindy Lou.
The granolithic pavements I am sure will knock you silly,
Oh! my Lindy Lou;
We'll show you how the dear old town is a-hustling and a-growing,
We'll show you all the burdocks (don't you think they need some mowing?)
You bet your life you'll sorry be when the time comes to be going
Oh! my Lindy Lou.

Well, ladies and gentlemen, joking apart, here's a hearty welcome home. May the meetings with old friends be pleasant and profitable, may the service in your old home church to-morrow morning bring peace and joy to your hearts, and may your return next Monday evening, to strenuous duties in the city where you now hang your hat, be accompanied by the knowledge that the outing has done you good, and that there is no place, after all, like "Home, Sweet Home."

It is rather amusing to hear the roar some parties in Peterboro are putting up because the merchants of that place are this summer giving their clerks a half-holiday once a week. It disorganizes business, some people say; commercial travellers find it irksome, others say, and so on. The fact remains that the big cities have a half-holiday once a week all the year round; many smaller places manage to give their clerks a half-holiday during July and August without suffering, and why shouldn't Peterboro? The Strattonville merchants are probably afraid that 15 cents or so may escape them. Live and let live does not appear to be the Peterboro motto.

MISCALLED "HAIR TONICS."

Most Hair Preparations Are Merely Scalp Irritants, of No Value.

Most hair preparations are merely scalp irritants, miscalled hair tonics. When hair is brittle, lustreless and begins to fall out, the dandruff germ is getting in its deadly work at the root, sapping the vitality. Since science discovered that dandruff is a germ disease there has been only one preparation put on the market that will actually destroy the dandruff germ, and that is Newbro's Herpicide. It quickly reduces scalp fever, destroys the germ; and the falling hair stops, and hair grows luxuriantly. Ask your druggist for Herpicide. It allays itching instantly, and permits the hair to grow.

RESTORED EARTH.

THE ONLY HEAVEN SAYS CHICAGO PREACHER.

Chicago, July 20.—"A restored earth is to be the eternal home for redeemed man, and the only heaven we will ever see will be right here on this material earth," was suggested, last evening by Rev. A. H. Harnly, pastor of the First Baptist church of Austin, in a sermon on "Man's destiny."

The minister said in part: "I would not be so presumptuous as to suppose that the boundless universe of matter, the unnumbered suns and earths of the heavens, were spoken into being for man. But I am sure that infinitesimal part of creation we call earth, was made for man. And, so far as I have discovered, it is the only place in the universe of God that was made for him. Before the fall the perfect earth was a perfect home for perfect man, and will I shock you over much when I suggest that a restored earth is to be the eternal home of redeemed man — that our heaven, the only heaven we will ever have, is to be right here?

"Heaven will be a perfect earth, a place where weeds will cease to grow, a perfect Eden, peopled by perfect men and women, a place where dishonesty, lawlessness, and graft would cease.

"The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever. That is still prophecy; it will become history when Christ has returned and established the eternal region upon earth. The paradise will be a perfected nature, with all its natural beauties, and a perfected man, and not a city with golden pavements and dazzling brightness."

Cheeese Market Is Making New Record.

Montreal, July 20.—Cheese records are certainly being broken this year. Exports from the port of Montreal for the week ending July 14 were probably the largest on record for a single week, from this port, being 126,877 boxes. This exceeded by almost 30,000 boxes the shipments of the corresponding week of last year. Exports for the season up to date form a record as compared with shipments of the corresponding seasons of other years, being 778,000 boxes as against 685,000 a year ago.

In the matter of price, also, a record is shown. Quotations have advanced since this time last week and prices are now, 12 1-8 to 1-4 for finest Ontarios, finest Easterns being 11 7-8 to 12 or 12 1-8c. Never before at this time of year were prices so high. Demand from the other side appears to be good and sales at 12 1-4 have been frequent this week. No one appears to have a very strong opinion as to the course of the market in the near future.

What To Remember.

That a shovelful of hot coals held over a white spot on varnished furniture will remove white spots. Rub the spot while hot with a flannel cloth.

That apple and suet dumplings are lighter if boiled in a net rather than a muslin bag.

That salt which has been dried in the oven for table use should not be put in the sifters until cold, if you would prevent caking.

That a griddle rubbed with coarse salt before it is greased will not be sticky.

That stale nuts if soaked in milk eight hours may be rendered fresh and moist.

That shanks of mutton make excellent broth for any kind of soup and are much cheaper than soup meat.

That apples for dumplings should not be cored. The seeds add a delicious flavor to the dumplings.

That rice pudding may be made without either eggs or sugar if baked very slowly.

That charcoal powder is an excellent thing to polish knives.

Sunlight Soap is better than other soaps, but is best when used in the Sunlight way. Buy Sunlight Soap and follow directions.

Reunion Notes.

There was a large crowd at the Post Office corner to receive the train when it arrived.

"I've been waiting ever since half-past eight this morning," said an old lady, as she greeted an arrival by the excursion train.

There were 555 people on the excursion train, but hundreds more are expected on later trains which arrive to-day and to-night.

It was a jolly crowd which got off the train. Hand-shaking was the order of the day.

It seemed a pity that there was no band to play "Home, Sweet Home" when the train came in.

Some overgrown boys, who had been chewing a cork, made themselves very offensive when the visitors were getting off the train. They will have more sense in a few years.

At 8 o'clock this evening the Toronto Old Boys will have a parade through the principal streets, and will, about 10 o'clock, let off a quantity of fireworks on the vacant lot opposite Hotel Quinte.

At 9.30 on Monday morning a baseball match will take place on the Hospital lot between a team picked from the Toronto Old Boys and the old boys residing in this city. Ald. Marsh will captain the city team and Mr. W. H. Wallbridge the Toronto old boys.

There were sold at Toronto 740 excursion tickets.

Now, make yourselves at home, ladies and gentlemen.

A Big Bass.

Barton Babcock, of Rednersville, came to this office this morning, armed with the necessary papers to show that, on Saturday, July 14, near Nigger Island, in the Bay of Quinte, he caught a small-mouthed black bass weighing seven pounds two ounces, which measured 22 inches in length. The signatures of six witnesses appear on the paper who deposed, before a justice of the peace, to seeing the big bass. It is the intention of Mr. Babcock to enter the competition held yearly by the Toronto Star, which offers a fine fishing rod for the biggest black bass caught in Canadian waters. The Nigger island beauty should pretty nearly land the prize.

A Passengers 'Mistake.

A passenger went out on the early train from the K. & P. railway station, this morning, says the Kingston Whig. As the engine was pulling into Harrowsmith he excitedly sought the conductor and communicated to him the fact that a short distance back he had seen the body of a man, without any head, lying alongside the track. The conductor telephoned into the local office to ask the general manager, F. A. Folger what action he should take in the matter. That official had been up against such things before, however, and did not do anything rash. Instead of immediately sending out an engine to investigate, he awaited the report from the conductor on the 10 o'clock train with whom he communicated, and told to keep a sharp lookout when passing the spot. Accordingly, the train slowly proceeded towards Kingston and ere long the mystery was solved.

The headless corpse which the excited passenger had seen proved to be a live and hearty man who was watching his cows alongside the track. He was lying down when the train passed and the tall grass concealed his head, thus causing the vision alluded to.

This incident recalls many similar ones which have resulted from straw dummies, etc., being left in the fields nearby. On one occasion somebody placed one of these dummies on the track and the engineer ran over it. He thought for sure he had killed some one, and when he stopped and found out what had caused his alarm he swore vigorously instead of being glad.

The hold-up man's rule of three is "Put up, give up and shut up."

Kaffir Woman's Courage.

One of the first explorers of the interior of South Africa was William Cotton Oswell, a noted hunter and a friend of Livingstone, to whom he rendered important aid. In his biography the following story is given from one of his African letters: An incident highly creditable to Kaffir womanhood occurred just as we reached Mabotse. The women, as is their custom, were working in the fields, for they hoe and the men sew. A young man, standing by the edge of the bush, was chatting with them. A lioness sprang on him and was carrying him off, when one of the women ran after her, caught her by the tail and was dragged for some little distance. Hampered by the man in her mouth and the woman behind her, she slackened her pace, whereupon her assailant straddled over her back and hit her across the nose and head with a heavy short handled hoe until she dropped her prey and slunk to cover.

The Conductor's Mistake.

A conductor on the St. Louis and Suburban railroad had such a good run of business Sunday afternoon that he had difficulty in keeping himself supplied with small change. Many passengers who patronized his car handed him dollars and bills of larger denominations in payment of their fares. The conductor, however, managed to get along fairly well until a woman carrying a tiny infant boarded his car. When he approached the woman for her fare she handed him a five dollar bill.

"Is that the smallest you have, madam?" queried the conductor, fearing another stringency in change.

The woman looked at the conductor and then at her baby and made this surprising reply, "Yes; I have been married only twelve months."

Costly, but Lasting.

Johnny—What! Only married a year and yet you are so downcast? Wally—Ah, my dear fellow, I never imagined that a wife would prove such a costly article. Johnny—Yes, a wife is a costly article, that's true, but then you must remember that she lasts a man a precious long time.

Perfection.

Briggs—You call on the Dimpletons very often. What sort of children have they? Griggs—Perfect! Best in the world. Briggs—Tell me about them. What are they like? Griggs—Oh, I've never seen them.

Good Policy.

Teacher—Johnny, do you love your enemies? Johnny—Yes'm—when I meet 'em all at once!

Man is the only animal that knows nothing, that can learn nothing, without being taught.—Pliny.

The Beauty of the Snowflake.

The thin snow now driving from the north and lodging on my coat consists of those beautiful star crystals, thin and partly transparent. They are about one-tenth of an inch in diameter, perfect little wheels with six spokes, without a tire, or, rather, with six perfect little leaflets, fernlike, with a distinct, straight, slender midrib raying from the center. On each side of each midrib there is a transparent, thin blade with a crenate edge. How full of the creative genius is the air in which these are generated! I should hardly admire more if real stars fell and lodged on my coat. Nature is full of genius, full of the divinity, so that not a snowflake escapes its fashioning hand. Nothing is cheap and coarse, neither dewdrops nor snowflakes.—Henry D. Thoreau.

Undertaker For Pet Birds.

An old branch of business conducted by a New York establishment devoted to supplying and boarding feathered pets is that of bird funerals. Children who have lost their canaries or other songsters through disease or accident bring the little cadavers there to be laid out in becoming style.

Tiny coffins just large enough for a bird are kept in stock; also quantities of pale pink and blue cotton. The latter is used for filling the bird coffin, and on it the bird is laid. The effect when birdie's remains are "decently" composed upon the pink and blue is excellent, sufficiently so to console the little mourning master or mistress. The children then convey their coffin away for interment. Funeral expenses are light.

A Hint For Health.

It isn't the talking that convinces—but the earnestness—and the cheery smiles of gratitude, which say more than any words. You can't help smiling when you get rid of pain and feel perfectly right. Health smiles—gratitude prompts it.

If you must have something to right the kidneys, use Bu-Ju. But we hope you don't require it. You certainly shan't after giving Bu-Ju the trial we ask. Samples free. Get some.

A Message to Those Threatened with Lung Trouble

For the benefit of all persons who have a predisposition to Consumption, either inherited or contracted by exposure, unsuitable employment or other cause, we make this positive declaration, and stake our reputation upon its accuracy: If they will faithfully take FERROL three times a day, as per directions, it is impossible for the threatened disease to develop. Further, even in cases where the lungs are actually involved, provided the trouble is not too deeply seated, will arrest the disease and repair the waste already committed.

FERROL

These statements are based on the common sense theory that FERROL contains, in perfect combination, the Oil, Iron and Phosphorus which alone can and will repair the waste tissue, enrich the impoverished blood and tone up the relaxed nerves.

Thousands have put this theory to the test of actual practice, and not one has been disappointed.

FERROL is pleasant to take and is so scientifically prepared that it is ready for instant absorption, so that, even where the digestion is weak, no difficulty is experienced in assimilating it. Moreover, FERROL is the only Cod Liver Oil preparation that may be taken with advantage during the summer months.

Educational Contest Lists

Destroyed By Fire

CONTEST EXTENDED TO

July 31st, 1906

Messrs Armour Limited, Toronto, regret to advise all who have so kindly forwarded lists of names as per the conditions of their Educational Contest, that their building, with its entire contents, was destroyed by fire on the evening of March 29th, and all records of lists they have received, as well as all lists, were destroyed, and we ask that all who had sent in lists previous to this time, mail us duplicates. No metal caps required with duplicate lists. To make up for time lost by the fire, and to give all competitors a fair and equal chance, we have consented to extend the Educational Contest until July 31st, 1906.

We offer $200.00 in gold to those sending in the largest lists of correct words made from the twelve different letters used in spelling the four words

Armour's Extract of Beef

$100.00 in gold will be given as the first prize.

$25.00 in gold will be given as the second prize.

$10.00 in gold will be given as the third prize.

$5.00 in gold will be given to each of the next five.

$2.00 will be given to each of the next twenty.

CONDITIONS

Use only the following 12 letters:—A-R-M-O-U-S E-X-T-C-F-B. No letter to appear in the same word twice.

Only such words may be used as are found in Webster's International Dictionary.

No proper names, foreign words or names of persons, towns or places are to be used.

Words spelled the same, but having different meanings, may be used but once.

All contestants must attach to their lists a metal cap taken from a jar of "Armour's Extract of Beef." Failure to do this puts the list out of competition.

The names of the winners of these prizes will be determined by judges whom we shall appoint.

Write only on one side of the paper. After making out your list, state the number of words it contains, with your full name and address at the top of each piece of paper and mark on the outside of the envelope "Educational Contest Department," and mail to our address as below.

Montaigne and Marriage.

Montaigne went toward marriage with the quality of cheerful alacrity which would have inspired a journey to the whipping post. "Might I have had my own will," he tells us, "I would not have married Wisdom herself, if she would have had me." No quainter piece of polite literature can be found than the letter which our philosopher addressed to his wife as a kind of necessary compliment on the occasion of the death of an only daughter. And the alacrity with which he relegates to Plutarch the task of consoling her in her affliction testifies to the entire consistency of his habitual claim that the dignity of marriage is best subserved when a husband refrains from becoming too fond of his wife. Even in view of this consideration, however, such a brief and refrigerated epistle suggests an amazing degree of reticence in a writer who needs only the turning of a faucet to enable him to pour forth a quenchless stream of ideas on any and every subject from thumbs to immortality.—Martha Baker Dunn in Atlantic.

A Strange Feast.

A curious feast is observed by the Mohammedan inhabitants of India, in which the origin of the custom known as painting the town red may possibly be traced. It is called the Holi and consists chiefly in the plentiful sprinkling upon all and sundry of a certain red preparation called holi powder. It stains the white clothes of the natives with an ugly, dirty looking red that conjures up before timid eyes dread visions of bloody fights and ghastly mutinies. The powder is made in two shades—the one vermilion, the other rose red—and both are used impartially by the observers of the ceremony, who delight in bedaubing their faces with the powders until they look like strange and hideous denizens of hades come up, still glowing with the fires of that region. Among the better classes this festival is falling into disfavor, for it leads to many unpleasant excesses and had its origin in some decidedly dissipated scene in ancient heathen history.

Gladstone as a "Supe."

A reference to "The Corsican Brothers" recalls an amusing story of Mr. Gladstone's visit to the Lyceum when Irving was playing in this drama. Mr. Gladstone at the time was not burdened by the cares of office, and one evening he dropped in at the Lyceum, where he was occasionally accommodated with a chair at the "wings." On this night, however, when the stage was set for the opera ball in "The Corsican Brothers" his curiosity led him into one of the boxes for spectators in the scene. Up went the curtain; Mr. Gladstone was at once descried by the pit and greeted with shouts of joy which caused him hastily to withdraw. "This," says Mr. Austin, "was his first and only appearance in the drama outside of the dear old 'legitimate' at Westminster."—Westminster Gazette.

The Wife's Reproach.

In an address to a temperance society a lecturer told how drink had once caused the downfall of a brave soldier. In the course of the sad story he said:

"Sometimes, after a debauch, the man would be repentant, humble. He would promise his wife to do better. But, alas, the years taught her the barrenness of all such promises. And one night, when he was getting to be an old man, a prematurely old man, thin limbed, stoop shouldered, with red rimmed eyes, he said to his wife sadly:

"'You're a clever woman, Jenny, a courageous, active, good woman. You should have married a better man than I am, dear.'

"She looked at him, and, thinking of what he had once been, she answered in a quiet voice:

"'I did, James.'"

A Peculiarity of the Crow.

Most birds cannot carry anything which their mouths are too small to contain. The crow is an exception at times. In Vermont, near Manchester, five crows were seen to come down into an apple orchard. They came daily and after a time the owner discovered that they were taking apples from a tree bearing the mellowest fruit. Each crow jammed its closed bill into an apple, raised its head and flew to a tall pine tree, where the fruit was eaten. More remarkable still is the fact that crows will sometimes carry turkey and hen eggs from a nest in the same manner.

Proper Kind of Window.

Every window in a house should be as high as the ceiling, but a paneled top that can be opened in the summer and closed in the winter. If ceilings were only six feet high and every occupant of a house stood seventy inches the accumulation of fetid odors against the ceiling would soon kill.

Wouldn't Be Low.

"I understand that Mrs. De Style is a great stickler for having everything of the most exclusive kind."

"Yes; she discharged her doctor because he told her that her temperature was too low."—Exchange.

Some Puritan Names.

One of the customs practiced by our Puritan forefathers was that of inflicting ludicrous and terrifying names upon their children. One Puritan damsel, when asked her baptismal name, answered, "Through-Much-Tribulation-We-Enter-the-Kingdom-of-Heaven, but for short they call me Tribby." Another unfortunate maiden bore the name The-Gift-of-God Stringer. A sickly boy was christened Faint-Not Hewitt. Another labored under Fight-the-Good-Fight-of-Faith White. A little girl who had a propensity for crying was at the age of eight christened Weep-Not Billing. There also were Thunder Goldsmith, The-Work-of-God Farmer, Search-the-Scriptures Morton, Be-Courteous Cole and, worst of all, Kill-Sin Pimple.

The Way He Viewed It.

"Good news!" cried the lawyer, waving a paper above his head. "I've secured a reprieve for you!"

"A reprieve?" replied the convicted murderer indifferently.

"Why, yes. Don't you see you ought to be happy"—

"Ah," replied the prisoner gloomily, "that simply means a delay, and I've always been taught that delays are dangerous."

The Lava Lake of Hawaii.

One of the large volcanoes in Hawaii has a large lake of liquid lava in its crater or hollow. This seething, boiling mass looks like redhot bottle glass to the naked eye, but under the microscope pieces of the original rocks of very minute size may be detected. Where it has cooled in curious festoons along the "coast" it resembles slag from some mammoth furnace.

The Cantankerous Member.

Elder Keepalong—When we hear of these terrible calamities happening in other parts of the world, deacon, we ought to be exceedingly thankful that our lot is cast in a favored land.

Deacon Ironside—On the contrary, elder, I feel like resenting it. What right have we got, I'd like to know, to be better off than other people?

Goats as Mowing Machines.

A flock of Angora goats was put on a rocky hillside that it was desired to have cleared and got into grass. It was such a tangle of brush and briers that it was with difficulty one could make a way through it. The goats actually ate their way in until it was penetrated with paths in all directions. After the leaves within reach were eaten they would stand on their hind feet with their fore feet in the branches and so eat the leaves higher up, or, if the bush was not too large, would throw their weight against and bend it to the ground, where others of the flock would help strip it of its foliage. The leaves would come out again only to be eaten off, then sprouts would come from the roots to share the same fate, until at the end of the second summer everything in the shape of a bush not over six feet tall except the pines and laurel was completely killed and white clover was beginning to appear. These goats with their long, curly, white fleeces attracted more attention probably than anything else on the place; but, as can be imagined, they had to be well fenced in, for they would run over a stone wall like dogs.

The highest price ever paid for poetry was $1,875 a line, $15,000 for an eight line poem.

It was not a good poem either. James Smith, one of the authors of "Rejected Addresses," wrote it. Smith met one night at dinner in London Strachan, the famous English printer. Strachan, what with old age and gout, was most infirm. Indeed, he could hardly walk. But his mind was exceedingly powerful and brilliant, and he talked so well that Smith on his return home wrote the following doggerel about the old man:

Your lower limbs seemed far from stout
  When last I saw you walk;
The cause I presently found out
  When you began to talk.
The power that props the body's strength
  In due proportion spread
In you mounts upward, and the strength
  All settles in the head.

Though this was undeniably rank poetry and ranker flattery, it pleased Printer Strachan so well that he added to his will a codicil giving Smith $15,000.

Breaking the News.

"Alaska is a land of adventure and romance," said a gold miner. "Many queer things have happened in Alaska," he continued, smiling—"many wretched things. Sometimes it has been necessary to break sad news to mothers at home, and sometimes this news has been broken with wonderful skill.

"An Alaskan called on a woman in New Hampshire to tell her of her son's death in the Klondike.

"'Yes, lady,' he said to the weeping mother, 'I was with him to the end. I seen him die. And I tell ye, ma'am, as he wuz dyin' he looked jest like an angel.'

"'Did he?' the mother sobbed.

"'He certainly did, ma'am,' said the Klondiker. 'Swingin' back'ards and for'ards in the air thar ye'd 'a' thought he had wings.'"

For Umbrella Forgetters.

"Lost umbrellas, forgotten umbrellas," said the lost and found clerk, "pay my salary. We sell all that are unclaimed, you know, deriving from this odd source $100 a month. Nearly all lost umbrellas are left in trains. There is a thing to do with an umbrella on entering a train that will assure you of not leaving it. I'll tell you what that thing is. When you sit down in the car place the umbrella on the outside, between yourself and the aisle. Thus the umbrella is a fence. It bars you in. When you jump up hastily to get off at your station you fall over it. You can't forget it whether you would or not."

Man, the Monstrous Specter.

What a monstrous specter is this man, the disease of the agglutinated dust, lifting alternate feet or lying drugged with slumber; killing, feeding, growing, bringing forth small copies of himself; grown upon with hair like grass, fitted with eyes that move and glitter in his face; a thing to set children screaming, and yet looked at nearer, known as his fellows know him, how surprising are his attributes! —R. L. Stevenson.

The Dog's Kennel.

Damp is the greatest evil to which the dog confined outside the house in a kennel is liable. It will kill the strongest dog and must be carefully guarded against. If a dog is to keep in health, too, it is necessary that it should be able to enjoy plenty of sunlight, and the kennel should always be placed facing south, except in the hottest parts of the day in summer, when it should be moved into the shade.

Woes of Society Ladies.

There should be an eight hour day for "fashionable" women. We cannot talk scandal continuously for twelve, as we do now. The excitement and the strain upon the imagination are terrific.—Letter to London Truth.

Pretty Full.

"McLush has been arrested for drunkenness and wants you to bail him out."

"Bail him out!" ejaculated Colonel Pepper, who had heard the remark indistinctly. "Good gracious, is he that full?"—Exchange.

The Reason.

"I think the picture lacks atmosphere," said the kindly critic.

"Fact is," said the artist, "I had a hard time raising the wind while I was painting."

Hard to Shake Off.

Hewitt—He sticks closer than a brother. Jewett—Yes; he sticks like a church debt.

Question For a Question.

"John," said the distinguished lawyer severely, "have you been in swimming in spite of my express prohibition?"

"Father," said John earnestly, "isn't it one of the first principles of law that no witness is bound to incriminate himself?"

Not at Home.

Caller—Is your father at home? Little Daughter—What is your name, please? Caller—Just tell him it is his old friend Bill. Little Daughter—Then I guess he ain't at home. I heard him tell mamma if any bill came he wasn't at home.

At the Play.

"She must be fifty if she's a day. How can she manage to play the part of a young girl?"

"Well, you know, she was a young girl once."

REPEATS GLAD TIDINGS.

Ottawa, July 21.—The following telegram has been received at the Department of Agriculture from Dr. W. Saunders, director of experimental farms, now in the west:

"Have seen crops in Manitoba and Saskatchewan to Indian Head. Grain of all sorts well headed and generally very promising. Very fine fields of wheat seen throughout Manitoba. At experimental farm, Brandon, crops are all heavy, found some rust there. Found some rust on leaves, but none on stalks. No rust on oats or barley. Nearly all grain crops seen in Saskatchewan are good, many of them excellent. Wheat, oats, barley and peas on experimental farm very heavy. Think they are as good as have ever been seen here. No rust found on any of the cereals. Large excursion here today of farmers from all points between here and Prince Albert, and west to Moosejaw, and remark that crops of all this year promise to be the best they ever had."

Wheat Fields Changing.

It is feared there will be an insufficiency of farm labor.

At Portage la Prairie yesterday W. J. McGuire completed cutting his thirty acre field of barley. The grain was dead ripe and very heavy in sheaf. He expects an excellent showing from the separator at threshing time.

Engineer Killed.

Three Rivers, Que., July 21.—As the express from Montreal on the C.P.R. was coming into the station here at noon yesterday it ran on to a siding, where the switch was left open, and collided with a box car. The driver jumped, striking a car, and was instantly killed. His name is Grondina.

Sour Grapes.

A Perfect Flying Machine.

Gulls are masters in the air. I have watched by the hour birds similar to these following along in the wake of a steamer, but had never before had such chances with a camera. Often they poise, resting apparently motionless on outstretched wing. It is a difficult feat. A small bird can't do it. A sparrow hawk can only poise by the rapid beating of his wings. The gulls seem to hang perfectly still, yet there is never an instant when the wings and tail are not constantly adjusted to meet the different air currents. Just as in shooting the rapids in a canoe, the paddle must be adjusted every moment to meet the different eddies, currents and whirlpools, and it is never the same in two different instants. A gull by the perfect adjustment of its body, without a single flap of the wings, makes headway straight in the teeth of the wind. I saw one retain a perfect equilibrium in a stiff breeze, and at the same time reach forward and scratch his ear.

HAMLIN GARLAND

ing changed every current in my life. I became ambitious to do something, to be rich. I came here, I bought this mine, and there shines my gold." He held it toward her again. "Now I can go home. My court martial becomes a joke. Don't you see? My father is human. He would not receive me poor and disgraced. With a big mine behind me the case will be different."

"Are we all purchasable with gold?" she asked.

His high mood sank a little. "Don't misjudge me. It's not so clear in my mind as when I met you at the door. Money does help—you know it does. It extends a man's power; it makes him effective for good, if good is in him. I was a rancher when you met me; we stood in a different relation from that which we occupy now. Isn't that true?"

"Yes," she slowly answered, "but it isn't because of your mine."

"What is it because of?"

"It is because you have been kind and considerate of my brother."

He looked disappointed. "Is that all? I hoped you liked me for myself."

"I do—like you," she answered.

"Can you not love me?"

"Do not press me." She spoke sharply, a flash of resentment in her eyes.

"I didn't intend to do so," he humbly replied. "I fear I've made a mess of it, just as I have with all the rest of my life. But this morning when we uncovered that vein it seemed as though I had a chance to recover my place in the world. I've wasted ten years of my life masquerading here and there, but that is finished. Since I saw you life began to be serious business with me. You smile, but you know what I mean, and if you would only give me time I would make you proud of me." He paused and looked about him. The mist seemed lightening, as if infiltrated with a golden vapor. It was in motion also, and far to the westward small patches of blue sky showed momentarily. "It is clearing," he said in a quiet voice, though his eyes were wet. "The west wind is setting in."

The beauty of the girl as she faced him there in the mist was shining, all conquering in its pulse and glow. "I love you, and I want you to know it. Some time I will ask you to be my wife."

"You must not do that," she cried out. "You will only lead up to disappointment. Don't you see how impossible it is? You are of the west, I am a city dweller. I am not fitted to help you. My whole life and training have been such that I am totally unfitted for the life you would lead. Please do not misread me. It is not a question of your wealth or your poverty. It's my own way of life, my own mind. I don't want to hurt you, but I must tell you that it is impossible to think of—quite impossible!" and she turned away toward the cabin, now half disclosed.

The door was open and Kelly and the two lads were on the floor picking at a small sack or ore. Mrs. Kelly looked up at Ann, laughing, with tears on her cheeks. "I don't believe it, not one word of it! And if it's true, Rob, I want you to keep it for us."

"Yes," said Kelly, "I've been of use to you in finding it; now do you be of use to me in keeping it."

"I will, Matt!" said Raymond, and the two men shook hands on a new compact. Both Matt and Nora were too engrossed with their new found riches to observe the deep sadness of Raymond's face.

"Now," said Kelly, "watch out for Curran. He'll bate us out of it if he can. I depend on you to stand off the lawyers and the gamblers."

"The mist is rising," called Ann from the doorway.

As she spoke a tremendous report arose from the obscurity where the fog still clung.

"Now, what was that?" queried Matt, and all stood transfixed with surprise and vague apprehension.

Another and duller report followed—one that shook the ground. Kelly rushed to the door just in time to see a vast balloon shaped cloud of smoke rise majestically above the mist, bulging into the blue sky above.

"I love you, and I want you to know it."

"Now they've done it!" he called in a curiously reflective tone that was almost comic.

"What was that?" asked Ann.

"Some crazy divil under cover of the mist has dynamited the Red Star shaft house."

Even as they waited, listening to faint cries, the wind swept the hillside clear, and Kelly's fears were verified. mist has dynamited the Red Star shaft house and mill lay scattered over its dump, and toward it the whole camp seemed hastening.

"Oh, the unholy jackasses!" muttered Kelly. "They've opened the door to the witches now. Come, Rob. We may be the next to suffer."

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE blowing up of the Red Star mill and shaft house shook the entire district with its possibilities of further violence and concealed beneath its dust and smoke the rich discovery in the Kelly mine. The partners had time to calculate chances and plan for the buying in of the property.

The din of controversy was deafening. The labor leaders disclaimed all knowledge of the outrage and roundly condemned it for the foolishly destructive act it really was. Kelly marched in among them like a grizzly bear and stormed thunderously. "You are responsible," he growled. "You sit here and send out appeals to the world while these hounds work their will. Where was Munro and his regulators?"

"They can't be everywhere," explained Carter. "No one supposed such a thing could happen in the daylight."

"Ye're all a set o' chicken heads. Ye've created a power ye can't control. I give ye notice that if ye don't go after the thieves that did this work I'll organize a vigilance committee and take charge of the whole gang of yez." And he strode out of the room, leaving the officers of the union disgraced and angry. He confessed to Raymond on his return that it was a foolish action.

"It was, Matt. You couldn't have done a worse thing. A large number of these dago miners already consider us their enemies, and this will confirm them. We might as well take steps tonight to get our party of the third part in some sort of organization."

All this excitement and worry aided Raymond in tiding over the day, but when midnight came and the committee had slipped away into the night his sense of loss and a feeling of loneliness took possession of him. Ann had announced her intention to return to the Springs at the end of the week, and, though she had vaguely promised to visit the peak again, Raymond was not deceived.

"She's quite right," he admitted to his better judgment. "A mining camp is no place for her or for Nora. Since the destruction of that mill it is even less desirable than before as a place of residence."

While on his way to the bungalow the following afternoon he met Munro accompanying a stranger, a big, blond, handsome fellow in a gray traveling suit and soft hat. His face was plump and his brown beard close clipped, and, though he realized that he was more or less in durance, his eyes were smiling.

Munro called out, "Rob, do you know this chap?"

"I do not."

Munro turned to his prisoner. "I thought you were lying."

The stranger remained untroubled. "I didn't say I knew Mr. Raymond. I merely said that I wanted you to take me to him. Mr. Raymond, I am Wayne Peabody, an old time friend of Miss Rupert. Will you please explain to this knight of the hills that I am in nowise interested in his strike?"

Raymond looked at him keenly. So this was the eastern lover—this fat, fair man. "I think I have heard of you," he began slowly.

Peabody caught at the boy's hand. "Well, well, Louis, I'm glad to see you. You saved my life. How is Ann?"

"Fine! You ought to see her work. She's brown as oak. Come on, I'll take you to her. Gee, she'll be glad to see you!"

As Peabody excused himself and made off, Munro, with a world of meaning in his voice, softly swore. "Well, if I'd known that, I would have killed him and laid him away under a little rock. She turned me down flat the other day, and it hurt. It hurts worse now that I've seen the other man. I really hoped you were the winner."

"She's out of our world, Jack," replied Raymond, and a large part of his resentment of Munro's impertinence vanished with the knowledge that he was a fellow sufferer in despair.

Munro went on gravely: "She had me going, sure thing. Why, I stopped drinking—just as I told you I would—and I cut off Claire— Say, boy, that was a severe job! She raised dust for a day or two, but when the queen of heaven gave me my jolt I said, 'W'at the good?' and slipped into my old ways. Think of us strutting around the parade ground in front of 'the seats of the visitors' with intent to beat out old Grant, and here we are! I'm policing a mining camp, and you're pawing dirt like a woodchuck. 'What a fall is there, my brother!'"

Raymond did not enjoy Munro's tone and changed the subject. "What are you going to do now?"

Munro ceased to laugh. "I am going to cinch this whole camp a little tighter from this on. I'm going to turn back every nonunion miner. All you fellows who are friendly can go on working just the same, but your men must put themselves on record."

The Old Boys and Girls are Here.

SPECIAL EXCURSION TRAIN FROM TORONTO ARRIVED SHORTLY BEFORE NOON—NOTES

A hearty reception was accorded the old Belleville Boys of Toronto, upon their arrival here shortly before noon to-day. They came in by special train, every coach of which was filled with passengers.

At the G. T. R. station a number of prominent citizens were present to extend a welcome to our visitors, and as the train stopped at the market square Mayor Sulman and the aldermen were in attendance to extend to them the city's welcome. There was manifestly a buoyant spirit present and all appeared to be perfectly at home.

During yesterday afternoon and early this morning the merchants generally and many private citizens were vying with each other in decorating the fronts of their premises, and when the visitors arrived Front street looked very pretty. Many residences about the city were also beautified with bunting and flags.

The chief attraction for this afternoon will be the water baseball match and swimming contests in the harbor.

Exercise For Business Men.

(World's Work.)

The average city business man without physical impediments to fight against can probably get along successfully on such an exercise schedule as the following;

1 Five minutes each day of purely muscular exercise, such as can be taken perfectly well in one's room, without any special apparatus.

2 Short intervals during the day of fresh air, brisk walking, deep breathing. This can all be secured in the regular order of the day's business. A man can easily spend as much as half an hour walking out of doors every day. This is for heart, lungs and digestion.

3 The reservation of at least one day a week for rest and recreation, for being out of doors, for playing games, etc. This is an essential. This is for both body and mind. A man who thinks he can get along without at least one vacation time a week simply proves his ignorance.

An Excellent Showing

MUTUAL LIFE OF CANADA BENEFITED BY THE INVESTIGATION.

Whatever may be contained in the report of the Royal Commission which is making an enquiry into the insurance companies of the Dominion, there can hardly be an expression of anything but commendation for the Mutual Life of Canada. The evidence given at the investigation served to show that the company was in a financially sound condition, and under an honest and economical management. The assets at the close of last year totalled $9,296,092. This included not one dollar of unauthorized securities or speculative investments, none of its holdings were "written up," and at the same time the real estate held by the company outside its head office building at Waterloo, did not exceed $1,000 in value. The company's expense rate was unusually low, and yet its income showed a rapid growth. In 1895 its earnings were $745,079, in 1905, a decade later, its income was $1,956,519, or more than double the former figures. The interest income for the same period exceeded the death losses by $568,945. It is apparent that nothing but good can accrue to a concern with such a record from any amount of investigation.—S. Burrows is the general agent for this district.

Dancing was indulged in at Twelve O'clock point, good music being furnished by an orchestra composed of Miss Maud Blaind, piano; W. Holley, violin; J. Allan, cornet.

A FATAL CASE.

BLACK SMALLPOX CARRIES OFF A VICTIM UP NORTH.

Toronto, July 20.—A case of "black" smallpox, attended with fatal results, has been reported to the provincial board of health from Powassan, in the Muskoka district. The patient was a travelling man, who is thought to have contracted the disease from somebody during one of his recent journeys. He lived three days after his case was diagnosed. Every effort is being made to prevent the spread of the malady.

A Children's Circus.

It may be a pleasing fiction that the modern circus is primarily intended for the edification and delight of the children; but the fact remains that no memory lingers longer in the minds of men and women than that which is associated with the entrancements of the sawdust arena—the airy, fairy riders; the whirling acrobats; the gravity-defying aerialists; the fooleries of the clowns; the roar and dash of the hippodrome races, and the wonders of the animal world as displayed in the travelling menagerie.

In these days of big amusement enterprises the circus has become an entertainment for "grown-ups" as well as children, but no astute circus manager, who expected to win continued success, would neglect the younger generation in preparing his programme of arenic attractions. Manager J. A. Bailey, of the Barnum & Bailey Greatest Show on Earth, which exhibits in Belleville, August 8th, recognizes this fact by announcing a complete children's circus as an integral part of this season's programme. A recent visitor to the big show thus gives his impressions of this feature of the entertainment;

"Among the thousand and one wonderful sights are many that have been secured for the avowed purpose of delighting the children. Little elephants, tiny ponies, dogs, sea-lions, sheep, geese and even chickens execute tricks similar to those read about in story books, and the little ones fairly revel in what, to their youthful fancies, is a veritable fairyland of wonders. Such attractions as the zoological display, afford them an excellent idea of the beasts, birds and reptiles existing in the world, and prove of distinct educational value. 'Speck,' the smallest horse in the world, a troupe of tiny Lilliputians, who sing, dance and act, as big as ever fancy painted the Goliath of the Bible or the Magog of the fairy tales, a Finnish giantess, and the ridiculous antics of the clowns, are all features that irresistibly appeal to childhood and make impressions that will never be eradicated."

There are, it is said, many other interesting features of the Barnum & Bailey show, which, while not especially designed for the children, prove vastly entertaining to the younger element in the audience. In the menagerie pavilion, in addition to the notable display of wild animals, with its rare bi-horned rhinoceros and its herd of giraffes, there is a preliminary concert of singing, dancing and instrumental music by a band of Scandinavian Gypsies and other clever people. In the big hippodrome pavilion 300 performers from all parts of the world keep the three rings, two stages, aerial spaces and racing track busy with a varied assortment of new and daring performances; there are several novelties of a thrilling character, and, finally, a series of exciting races, one of which—a running contest between ponies with jabbering monkeys as riders—is designed to appeal to the youngsters in the crowd, and undoubtedly does.

THE THUNDER AND LIGHTNING

WAS HEAVY LAST NIGHT—BRIDGE STRUCK AT TRENTON—CHEESE FACTORY BURNED.

This section of the country was last night visited by a severe electric storm, which commenced about 11 o'clock and continued for some time.

In this city a slight amount of damage was sustained. A large gate at the residence of Mr. Thos. Wright, South John street, was struck by lightning and splintered. The inmates of the house were slightly stunned by the shock.

At Trenton a bolt struck the bridge, but no serious damage resulted. A lady passing over at the time was stunned, but soon recovered.

The Moscow cheese factory, situated at the Village of Moscow, near Napanee, was struck by lightning and destroyed. It was a large factory, making about 200 boxes of cheese every week. Mr. B. Vanluven owned the building. We are informed that the dwelling adjoining was burned, and also another small building near by.

Finding Most Interesting Chapters.

Women as a class are credited with having no scruples about opening a book at the middle or end or anywhere else they may expect to find the most interesting chapter. A frequent feminine visitor at libraries was overheard revealing to a friend of her own sex her secret of locating at once the most thrilling chapter in any book, no matter how unfamiliar one may be with it. "You simply close it tight," she said, "and glance along the edge of the leaves. It is seldom, indeed, that you do not notice a distinct line, or even more than one, caused by a number of edges soiled slightly more than those about them. Open the book there and you have the best chapter." A librarian explained this by saying that the reading and rereading of the particularly interesting chapters of a book naturally cause certain pages and their edges to be more soiled. Of course the longer the book has been in circulation the more distinct are the marks.

A Bit of Fairyland.

Cruising down Milford sound, New Zealand, when the clouds are clearing after a shower, the mountains are like fairyland. No longer grim and black and fearful, they are laced everywhere with the streaming silver of cloud born cascades. One day we watched the giddy journey of one of these cataracts. It sprang from the very top of the Lion rock, a 3,000 foot perpendicular wall. Long and slender and glinting like glass in the sun, it fell straight down over us, but never reached us. It had dropped, say, 1,000 feet, when it was caught by the wind, swayed this way and that, and finally blown clean away, dissolving in misty rain. We steamed right under it, or, rather, under the place where it ought to have been, and experienced the peculiar sensation of looking straight up at a waterfall that, as the launch skipper put it, "never fell anywhere."

Butter as a Food.

Butter is a hydro carbon, and all excesses of it are stored up as fat in the body. It gives energy and power to work to those who eat heartily of it. For any one afflicted with consumption butter cookery, if plenty of fat can be digested, is one of the best ways of curing the disease should it be in its early stages or of keeping it at bay if advanced. It is not economy to spare the butter at table even to the healthy people. Butter is not a simple fat composed merely of one sort. It is a mixture of no less than seven different sorts of fats, and no more complex oil can be taken than this. For dyspeptic and liverish people good bread and butter, along with fruit, should invariably take the place of pie, pastry and biscuits. Pastry for such people is only another name for poison, and biscuits are as often as not baked with lard.

Elizabeth Carter, Bluestocking.

Elizabeth Carter (1717-1806) was one of the original "blue stockings," of whom a biographer says: "A perfect knowledge of French, acquired at an early age from a Huguenot refugee minister at Canterbury, was the foundation of Elizabeth Carter's education. Her father taught her, together with her brother, Latin, Greek and Hebrew, though the slowness of her apprehension tired out his patience. Italian, Spanish and German she taught herself without any assistance, and later in life she set herself to learn Portuguese, but for want of books she made no great progress. Lastly she taught herself Arabic and made an Arabic dictionary, containing various meanings of words which elsewhere had been improperly translated."

SUNLIGHT SOAP

is better than other Soaps but is best when used in the Sunlight way. Follow directions.

SUNLIGHT WAY OF WASHING

FIRST.—Dip the article to be washed in a tub of lukewarm water, draw it out on a washboard and rub the soap lightly over it. Be particular not to miss soaping all over. THEN roll it in a tight roll, lay in the tub under the water, and go on the same way until all the pieces have the soap rubbed on, and are rolled up.

Then go away for thirty minutes to one hour and let the "Sunlight" Soap do its work.

NEXT.—After soaking the full time rub the clothes lightly out on a wash board, and the dirt will drop out; turn the garment inside out to get at the seams, but don't use any more soap; don't scald or boil a single piece, and don't wash through two suds. If the water gets too dirty, pour a little out and add fresh. If a streak is hard to wash, rub some more soap on it, and throw the piece back into the suds for a few minutes.

LASTLY COMES THE RINSING, which is to be done in lukewarm water, taking special care to get all the dirty suds away, then wring out and hang up to dry.

For Woolens and Flannels proceed as follows:—Shake the articles free from dust. Cut a tablet of SUNLIGHT SOAP into shavings, pour into a gallon of boiling water and whisk into a lather. When just lukewarm, work articles in the lather without rubbing. Squeeze out dirty water without twisting and rinse thoroughly in two relays of lukewarm water. Squeeze out water without twisting and hang in the open air.

☞ The most delicate colors may be safely washed in the "Sunlight" way.

$5,000 REWARD will be paid to any person who proves that Sunlight Soap contains any injurious chemicals or any form of adulteration.

5c. Buy it and follow directions. 5c.

A WIFE'S TRAGIC DEATH

Husband and Female Doctor Charged With Murder.

Crown Says An Illegal Operation Was Committed — Mrs. Agnes Bridant Died at Private House in Toronto as Result—Medicines and Instrument Alleged to Have Been Supplied by Lillian Miller, Alais De Voss.

Toronto, July 21.—Mrs. Agnes Bridant, residing at the Bristol House, corner of King and Jarvis, died at that address yesterday morning as the result of blood-poisoning caused by an illegal operation, and the husband, Edward Bridant, and Lillian Miller, practicing as the Dr. De Voss Medicine Co. at 210 Queen street east, are in custody, charged with her murder.

Too Late For Ante-Mortem.

It was at 10 o'clock yesterday morning that Crown Attorney Corley and Detective Sergeant Duncan were sent for to take Mrs Bribant's ante-mortem deposition, but on arrival at the Bristol House she was dead. The husband was present, and told them that his wife had been getting medicines from "Dr. De Voss." Sergt. Duncan and the Crown Attorney went over to "De Voss'" office and made a thorough search of the premises. They found a number of appliances used for certain purposes, and also a number of boxes of pills. There were also several hundreds of letters from women, ~~married and~~ otherwise, asking "De Voss'" advice. All these seizures were put on the patrol wagon and conveyed to the detective department.

Husband Arrested.

Edmund Bridant, husband of the unfortunate woman, was at the house with Dr. Winnett when Mrs. Bridant died. He stated that he went to the office of Dr. De Voss (Mrs. Miller) more than a week since and paid $5 for three boxes of pills for his wife. A few days later his wife went, and was given a slippery elm probe. He would not admit that he knew what the drugs and instrument were to be used for.

Subsequent investigation by the detectives unearthed evidence which will be produced in court to show that Bridant had threatened to kill his wife if she permitted her condition to reach the state of accouchement. On this evidence the husband was arrested.

Woman in the Case.

At the De Voss medical parlors the officers met Mrs. Miller. She was just preparing to go out. When informed of their mission Mrs. Miller accepted the information with indifference. She admitted that she had given Mrs. Bridant treatment, but denied all knowledge of pregnancy in the case. She was placed under arrest and her stock of medicines, consisting of about a thousand pounds of tablets, pills and sundry auxiliaries, were seized, together with packages of advertising pamphlets. More than 200 letters from city and rural correspondents were gathered in.

To give an idea of the volume of business Mrs. Miller was doing a glance at her bank passbook would indicate. Thursday the book showed that she had deposited from receipts $500.

Included in the "plunder" taken from the De Voss Institute was a "billy" twice the size of the ordinary thug dope.

At the police station Mrs. Miller gave her name as Lillian Miller, aged 37. She said she was born in Covington, Ky., and had graduated as a trained nurse.

Bribant's Career.

Edmund Bridant, the husband of the deceased woman is a Frenchman, born in Paris 24 years ago. He married his wife in Kingston shortly after his arrival in Canada, four years since and resided there until about a year ago, when the family removed to Toronto. In this city, he was engaged as a barber at various places, more recently at Brunel's, 71 Colborne street. He is described as a man of rather taciturn mind and a good workman. There is one child in the family, a girl of three years, who was ~~placed~~ in charge of the grandmother and an aunt, who arrived in this city yesterday.

Bridant and Mrs. Miller will be arraigned in the Police Court to-day.

Chief Coroner Johnston has ordered an inquest to be held at Millard's undertaking parlors at 11 o'clock, to-day, Dr. J. M. Cotton, presiding.

Business Was Continental.

The arrest of Mrs. Miller will cause consternation in many homes in Toronto and Canada. As the letters and books seized by the police show that the Miller woman has been doing business from Montreal to Vancouver. The letters are from young girls in trouble, and some are pathetic; some from married women, who are not much worried, but do not wish to be bothered with children; some from men writing in behalf of their wives; others from men trying to save themselves and the young women they have ruined.

Many of the letters are from illiterate people, many, by the writing and composition, show the educated woman.

While in Covington Mrs. Miller did business at 71 East 10th street, under the name of "The French Capsule Co." and lived at 75 East 4th street.

The Law Defective.

Chief Coroner Johnson said "there are criminal abortions committed every day in Toronto and I know it. But it seems that the law cannot get at the guilty parties. There is always some loop hole. I have instructed the detective department about certain places and that is all I can do."

Do Juries Condone?

"I am sorry to say it—I hope that I may be mistaken—but I am entirely of the opinion that no jury can be impanelled in Toronto that will convict a person charged with abortion."

This was the startling statement made last evening by ex-Crown Attorney Curry.

In support of his statement, Mr. Curry went on to say that during his long official service he had prosecuted many such cases, but however strong and direct the evidence for the crown might be, it was found impossible to obtain a conviction.

"Would it not be possible," he was asked, "to at least clean out the notorious and professional abortionists?"

"No. One man I prosecuted three times and the evidence in each case was overwhelming. Other offenders, of course, were tried, and the strongest possible cases made against them. The result was the same in every case; our juries will not convict."

Verdict at Orangeville.

Orangeville, July 21.—Coroner Henry's jury yesterday afternoon, after an hour's deliberation, brought in a verdict that Elizabeth Wells came to her death on June 27th last through abortion procured through Arthur C. Douglas, druggist, at the request of Walter Jackson, her brother-in-law.

It does do good baking

This is the range that bakes better because the diffusive oven flue draws in cold air from the kitchen-floor, carries it around the oven, and pours it HOT down into the oven FROM THE TOP in a current that moves all round the whole oven and up and out the flue. When that clean, hot air leaves the oven it takes with it all the moisture, all the odors, which in OTHER ovens stay in and saturate the baking food. Perfect draft control, perfect oven, draw-out oven rack for easy basting,—all points singular to

FOR PROMOTING UNITY

Empire Could Have Nothing Better Than State-Owned Cables.

Sir Sandford Fleming Urges Scheme at Dinner of London Eighty Club—Free Distribution of Empire News Matter Through Cable Lines Made Self-Sustaining Through Other Business—Liberals Endorse Underlying Idea.

London, July 21.—(C. A. P.)—Sir Sandford Fleming and Hon. N. A. Belcourt were last night guests at the special dinner of the Eighty Club, summoned to hear an exposition of the plan of the empire cable intelligence service.

Sir Sandford urged greater intercourse between the Mother Country and the colonies, as promoting the unity of the Empire. This could be secured by a system of cables entirely state-owned, connecting all parts and affording the free distribution of news information, in addition to being self-sustaining by other business.

Mr. Belcourt and Hon. Colon Campbell spoke in support, pointing out the inadequacy of the present arrangements.

General discussion followed. Many prominent Liberals heartily endorse the underlying idea, which they had heard for the first time. Although recognizing the practical difficulties of working out details, they promised careful consideration.

Hamar Greenwood, in moving a vote of thanks to the guests, praised the work of Sir Sandford Fleming in behalf of the Empire. He thought the difficulties and details could be overcome and affirmed that in the heart of the Liberal party there was warm sympathy with over-sea dominions.

Lord Lucas presided and other Canadians present were, W. D. Matheson and Col. Stimson of Toronto.

EMPIRE PREFERENCE BY INDIA.

Would Discriminate Against Three-Quarters of Her Best Customers.

London, July 21.—In introducing the Indian budget in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, Indian Secretary Morley sounded a warning note on the necessity of excluding India from the field of party politics.

The most engrossing of Great Britain's foreign relations, he declared, were the Asiatic, those involving this country with China, Japan and Russia, which was a great Asiatic, as well as a European power.

Any false step in India would land Great Britain in a confusion infinitely more dire and disastrous than had the false step taken in South Africa.

"India's case in the free trade controversy can be put in a nutshell," he declared. "Her prosperity and comfort, the growth of her trade and commerce, the solvency of India hang upon her exports. The United Kingdom takes 25 per cent of her exports, while Europe and the Far East takes 75 per cent. Thus, when the people of Great Britain asked India for preferential duties they were asking her to discriminate against three-fourths of her customers."

Mr. Morley considered the time ripe for an advance in improvement of the system of the Government of India. Everybody knew that there was a new spirit abroad in India. There might be discontent, but there was no disaffection among the people, and the present government of India was in full sympathy with the desires of the people for the introduction of more western ideas.

With this object in view the viceroy was appointing a commission to enquire how far the extension of the representative element in the Legislative Council could be expediently carried out.

The Indian Secretary also said he considered that the natives ought to be given greater access to the higher posts in the administration of India.

There are Teas and Teas

There is what we might call the up-grade and the down-grade. Most teas come under the latter heading—not that they were'nt once good, but the average dealer buys a box of tea that he keeps under the counter where it gets stale and loses most of its goodness. Stroud's teas are of the up-grade variety. We receive our teas fresh every week from our headquarters in Montreal, and while we have them in our store we keep them in tins that are practically air tight, but we don't have them long enough for them to get stale.

THE KING'S PRIZE.

Capt. Davies of the First Middlesex Volunteers Wins the Trophy.

Bisley, Eng., July 23.—The Kings's prize ($1,250, the gold medal and the gold badge), open only to volunteers, was won Saturday by Captain Davies of the First Middlesex Volunteers, with a total score of 324. Sergt. Ommundsen of Edingurgh, winner of the King's prize in 1901, carried off the silver medal, and another Scotchman, Sergt. Reid, of Glasgow, took the bronze medal.

Staff-Sergt. T. H. Hayhurst was the only Canadian who reached the final stage of the competition. The meeting of the National Rifle Association ended Saturday afternoon.

Hayhurst, at the commencement of the third stage, was 12 points behind the leader, and with but a small chance of coming out first. His performances were not so brilliant as to raise the hopes of his countrymen very high. His total scores at the three stages, and the possible number of points, are as follows:

	Score.	Pos.
1st stage, 200, 500, 600 yds.	95	105
2nd stage, 600 yards	84	100
3rd stage, 800, 900, 1,000 yds	126	150
Totals	305	355

Hayhurst will get about $40 in prizes money in this match.

Lord Roberts Saturday inspected the Canadians. He spoke a few words to each man, and hoped they would be the winners of many prizes. Later Prince Arthur of Connaught inspected the team and viewed the pavilion.

Dreyfus A Chevalier

Gets Legion of Honor on Spot Where Disgraced

Ceremony Lasted But Five Minutes But Was Impressive and Pleasant—Witnessed by His Wife, Little Son and the Military and Literary Men Who So Nobly Stood By Him, Including Brigon Picquart.

Paris, July 23.—In the presence of a distinguished military assemblage, Major Alfred Dreyfus Saturday received the Cross of Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. The ceremony, which occurred in the courtyard of the military school, was rendered doubly impressive by being held on the very spot where the buttons and gold lace were stripped off his uniform and his sword broken 12 years ago.

His brother officers, who were prominent figures in various stages of the controversy, were among the spectators, and outside the circle of troops stood Mme. Dreyfus and the little son of Dreyfus. Brigon Picquart, who shared in the court's acquittal of the famous prisoner; Anatole France of the French Academy and Alfred Capus and other literary men, who aided in Zola's campaign in behalf of a revision of the first trial.

The Ceremonies.

Major Dreyfus took up a position at the head of the two batteries of artillery by the side of Col. Targe, their commander, the man who made the recent discoveries at the War Office which led to the rehearing of the case. Stepping into the circle, General Gillian announced the decoration of Targe as a commander and Dreyfus as a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

Dreyfus and Targe, with their sabres drawn, then advanced to the centre of the troops, taking a position before Gen. Gillian. The general first bestowed the decoration on Targe, and then, turning to Dreyfus, said: "In the name of the president of the republic and in virtue of the powers entrusted to me, Major Dreyfus, I hereby name you a Chevalier of the National Order of the Legion of Honor."

After pinning the cross on Dreyfus' breast, the general gave the major the military accolade, the trumpets sounding and the spectators applauding.

The officers who had not taken official part in the ceremony also came forward to greet their comrade.

Turning to Anatole France, Dreyfus said: "I thank you more than I can say. You, who have always struggled for my cause."

M. France replied. "We merit no thanks, for what has been done was in the interest of right and justice. We felicitate you all the more, since so many others who have struggled for justice have died before it was attained."

Col. Targe terminated his felicitations by conducting Major Dreyfus to the officers' quarters, where Mme. Dreyfus was waiting for him. The meeting between the husband and wife was most affectionate, the spectators withdrawing to permit them to be alone. The ceremony was over in five minutes.

Seized With Weakness.

Shortly after this, Dreyfus, accompanied by his wife and son, emerged from the military school and entered a carriage amid cheers. The carriage was driven swiftly towards Dreyfus' home. On reaching his residence, Major Dreyfus, who is affected with heart trouble, suffered a violent attack, but, thanks to his strong will power, the faintness soon passed away, and he was able to receive Procurator-General Baudouin and Brigadier-General Picquart, to whom he expressed his sincerest thanks for their exertions in his behalf.

RUSSEL SAGE IS DEAD.

Great Wall Street Financier Goes the Way of All Mortals.

New York, July 23.—Russel Sage died suddenly yesterday, at his country home, "Cedar Crott," at Lawrence, L. I. The immediate cause of death was heart failure, resulting from a complication of diseases, incident to old age. The veteran financier would have celebrated his 87th birthday on August 4th.

His first position was in the store of his brother, Henry at Troy, N. Y., at a salary of $1.00 a week and his board.

The New York Central had held out a standing offer of $1,500,000 of first mortgage bonds of the albany system for it, but on the advice of President Russel Sage the two sold to Morgan. for $250,000. The latter immediately transferred it to the New York Central and the old heads of Troy, it is said, claim that their fellow townsman made $250,000 on this his first railroad deal. At any rate Sage was very shortly after made a director of the New York Central and he was the only living survivor of the original board.

Politics never had the fascination for Russel Sage that stock dealing had, yet he served as a congressman in the 23rd and 34th United States congresses, representing the district of Troy.

He entered Wall street in 1858; has been there ever since and death only retired him.

His greatest reverse was occasioned by the failure, in 1884 of Grant and Ward, by which it is said he lost $6,000,000.

What disposition of his vast wealth will be made on the death of the aged financier has often been a matter of speculation, but when approached on the subject his invariable answer, has been: "Wait until I'm dead; there will be more than one persons surprised."

The Lord's Day Act.

The more the Lord's Day Act, recently passed by the Fewderal House, is examined, the more apparent the utter uselessness of the measure becomes. La Patrie, of Montreal, expresses the opinion that the Act will not have any very material effect upon the observance of Sunday. The Act can be suspended by any Province at any time: it need not be operated anywhere, and it cannot be operated where the Attorney-General of the Province sets it aside. The section that opens the door to the law being made inoperative is fifteen, and reads as follows:

13. No action or prosecution for a violation of this Act shall be commenced without the leave of the Attorney-General for the Province in which the offence is alleged to have been committed; nor after the expiration of sixty days from the time of the commission of the alleged offence.

The provision that no prosecution shall be undertaken after a lapse of sixty days from the date of the alleged offence is not unusual, and will provoke little comment. The other provision, that the Attorney-General must give his permission before any prosecution for any breach of the Act, no matter how small, may be undertaken, is not usual. Commenting upon this feature of the bill, a correspondent of the Mail and Empire points out that the practice with respect to all legislation is to allow it to go into force automatically. In this case a different course is pursued. No infraction of the law can be brought before any court unless the Attorney-General of the Province says that action can be taken. It thus rests with the Attorney-General of the Province to decide whether or not there shall be any Sunday law. Where ever the Attorney-General declines to allow an infraction of the law to be brought before the corts the law is repealed, or is non-existant. The work cast upon the Attorney-General is very extensive. The Minister has not merely to say whether or not there shall be Sunday observance, but he is required to determine each particular case and to allow or disallow a prosecution, according as he is inclined. Nothing at all can be done to enforce the law without the consent of the Attorney-General, and it is in the power of the Attorney-General to order that there shall be no enforcement, and to allow all possible breaches of the law to pass unnoticed, and thus to become authorized. From the Attorney-General there is no appeal.

By the same authority it is shown that other provisions for rendering the law a dead letter are included in clauses 2, 5, 6, 14 and 16. Clause 2 says,

"2. It shall not be lawful for any person on the Lord's Day, except as provided herein, or in any Provincial Act, or law, now or hereafter in force, to sell or offer for sale or purchase any goods, etc.

This means that it shall not be lawful to trade or to work unless the Provincial Legislature says to the contrary, or that it shall be lawful if the Provincial Legislature says so. Clause 5 begins thus:

"5. It shall not be lawful for any person on the Lord's Day, except as provided in any Provincial Act or law now or hereafter in force, to engage in any public game or contest for gain,' etc.

This means that it shall be lawful for persons to engage in these games on the Lord's Day if the Legislature of any Province so says. Clause 6 has to do with excursions. It says;

"6. It shall not be lawful for any person on the Lord's Day, except as provided in any Provincial Act or law, now or hereafter in force, to run, conduct or convey any excursion," etc.

Here the declaration is that it shall be lawful to hold these excursions if the Legislature at any time agrees to them. While these sections permit the Lord's Day to be abolished by retail, another section, section 14, gives a general authority to the Legislature to wipe out the Act.

"14 Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal, or in any way affect, any provisions of any Act relating in any way to the observance of the Lord's Day in force in any Province of Canada when this act comes into force."

The Act, according to section 16, does not come into force until March 1, 1907, and in the meantime legislation can be adopted by any Province nullifying the Dominion law, and laying it aside, under the provisions of section 14, forever.

The law, according to a legal interpretation, is in this shape: Certain acts are declared to be illegal on the Lord's Day. Any province, however, can legalize those acts, by wholesale or in part, whereupon the Lord's Day Bill is repealed in so far as that province is concerned. If the province does not care to legalise the acts in question, then the Attorney-General of the province may do so by refusing to allow any prosecutions for violations of the law. It is, therefore, not without reason that the measure is regarded as meaningless.

CORNER OF THE CROSSROADS.

(San Francisco Call.)

At the corner of the crossroads, when you don't exactly know
Which is the better turning and which way you ought to go,
There's oft a man who sadly errs and takes the downward road,
To find that rue and wormwood on his pathway there are sowed.
And he walks with pain and doubting
as a host of men have done,
Missing ever in the shadows all the glory of the sun;
But there's still a consolation for the most astray of men;
He can go back to the crossroads and
try the thing again.

One may go back to the crossroads,
and, in brief, I'm telling you,
On my somewhat vagrant journey,
that I very often do;
And so must every man who hopes
at least to win a prize,
For, one and all, we sometimes stray,
as haply you surmise:
But there's no road that leadeth down which may not be retraced,
And many a man who journeys wrong another way has faced,
And still we'll hold it as a truth, the best of all we ken,
We can go back to the crossroads and
try the thing again.

WHEN IS A MAN 21?

Think a Moment Before You Attempt to Answer the Question.

"It is often said that law is applied common sense," said a professor of the Yale Law school the other day. "While it is true that law principles originated in common sense, the law itself is the combined experience of many men, for no two men uninstructed in law will agree as to what is applied common sense.

"Then there are many rules of law which undoubtedly have a common sense origin, but, conditions having changed, history fails to disclose this origin. Yet these very rules must be retained in order not to shake personal and property rights. Therefore no man can depend on his own uninstructed common sense to know the law.

"To drive this statement home I have frequently put to an incoming law class the question, 'When does an infant become of age?' The answer is always unanimous, 'When he is twenty-one years old.'

"The next question appears ridiculous to some and makes them laugh, while others set their alleged common sense at work and never with correct result, 'When is a man twenty-one years old?'

"One student says, 'On his twenty-first birthday,' but of course he does not mean it, for he is about a year out of the way. Another ventures, 'On the twenty-first anniversary of his birthday.' This sounds better, but even if correct is not specific enough. 'When he has completed his twenty-first anniversary,' 'At the beginning of that day' and 'On his twenty-first anniversary, at the precise hour of his birth,' are other answers.

"And then I surprise the guessers by saying that they are all wrong.

"In computing time it is a general rule that the law disregards part of a day. In applying this rule, suppose a man was born just one minute before midnight on Jan. 2, 1880.

"At midnight he had lived but one minute, yet the day on which he was born was ended and the law considered him one day old. So in computing the twenty-one years which a man must live in order to reach his majority we do not begin with the moment of birth, but with the commencement of the day of his birth.

"Now, since we must start with the first moment of Jan. 2, 1880, it is perhaps natural to say that this man did not become twenty-one years old until the close of Jan. 1, 1901. Mathematically speaking, this is true.

"Twenty-one years in that sense requires that the last moment of Jan. 1, 1901, should have arrived in order to make the man of age, and obviously he was of age at that point of time. But here again the rule is applied.

"As the man was of age on the last moment of Jan. 1, the law disregards the entire part of the day intervening between the first moment and the last, and consequently he became in law twenty-one years old on the first moment of Jan. 1, 1901, the day preceding the twenty-first anniversary of his birthday.

"This rule is a part of what is known as the common law and is applied in this country in all states where the common law of England has been adopted and remains unchanged by statute. A man may vote or make a valid will on the day preceding the twenty-first anniversary of his birthday, although the right in the one case and the capacity in the other are given only to persons who have reached the age of twenty-one years."

The Silence Cure.

Nerve specialists, it is said, are now recommending a "silence cure" for women who suffer from nerves. The patients have to set apart a certain number of hours in which no word is spoken. A woman we know tried this treatment, with a curious result. She herself came out in a rash, but her husband, who suffered from headaches, recovered.—Punch.

Every day is a new life, every sun rise but a new birth.—Jordon.

Overturned Boats.

"When a small boat capsizes," said an old river man, "the occupants should not try to climb aboard, but should lightly cling to it until help comes. Even a light canoe will in all probability sustain their weight until assistance arrives if they will only cling as lightly to its overturned sides as possible, allowing the body to float in the water, which it will do, and not under any circumstances to attempt to bear down upon the canoe or to crawl upon the overturned bottom.

"This is where the fatal mistake occurs in nearly all boating drowning accidents. A single man with a good sized plank in the water can in his struggles and efforts to save himself push the plank beneath the surface of the water and drown then and there, whereas the same plank will support the weight of three men who are well posted and cool enough merely to grasp its edges with as little downward pressure as possible. A single oar has saved many a sailor's life in this manner, which a landsman would grasp, push it down in the water and go down with it.

The Guessing Cook.

"I'd give a dollar," said the man who coddles his stomach, "to find a cook who doesn't measure. There used to be plenty of them. I remember the time when half the kitchens in the land gloried in a guesswork cook. Eating was a pleasure in those days. It isn't so now. In these whirligig times everything has a machine made taste. That is because the cooks measure so much. Instead of trusting to inspiration, as the heaven born cook is bound to do, the kitchen queens of today measure even the salt they put in the porridge. No wonder such cookery lacks individuality and is all on the same dead level of mediocrity. Merciful heavens, what ails these biscuits? They're heavy as lead."

"I think the cook made a mistake," said the man's wife. "I got a new one yesterday—one that doesn't measure. I am afraid she didn't put enough baking powder in the biscuits."

An Oddity in Building.

"If you want to see an oddity," an undertaker said, "go to a cemetery and note how in the erection of old fashioned tombs they lower into place the marble slabs. These marble slabs are not lowered by means of a derrick. They are lowered by hand. The work is so delicate, you see, and it is so necessary not to chip the edges of the stones, that only hand work answers. You wonder, I suppose, how the men avoid pinching or crushing their fingers as they lower a great slab of marble on to its marble base. Well, they accomplish this by lowering the stone upon lumps of sugar arranged in orderly lines, and then they gradually dissolve the sugar by squirting water over it. All the huge, flat stones of old fashioned tombs or vaults are lowered by hand on to lumps of sugar."

Cleopatra's Mummy.

Where does Cleopatra's body rest? Scarcely a layman who would not answer, "Why, in Egypt!" After her cajoleries, her wiles, her life of intense if not very exalted loves, Cleopatra was laid in one of the loveliest tombs that has ever been fashioned by the hand of man. But what a change 2,000 years has brought about! Today an ugly mummy, with an emblematic bunch of decayed wheat and a coarse comb tied to its head—a mere roll of tightly swathed dust—lies crumbled in a hideous glass case at the British museum. It is Cleopatra, the once great queen, a Venus in charm, beauty and love.—London Spectator.

Boston's Name.

Boston owes its name to a Roman Catholic saint. Early in the seventh century a Catholic monk named Botolph founded a church in what is now Lincolnshire, England.

As the years went by a town grew up around the church and was called Botolphstown. This was shortened for convenience into Botolphston, then to Botoston and finally to Boston. John Cotton came to America from that town and named the New England capital after his native village.

A DINNER DECEPTION

By Kate M. Cleary

Copyright, 1905, by G. T. Visknisski

The telegram dropped from the hand of Isola Ray.

"Now, what do you think of that, Funny?" she asked.

Funny, a big, tortoise shell cat, signified her sympathy by putting her purring head against the amber satin slipper of her young mistress. The latter picked up the yellow slip of paper and read it over.

"Will bring Edward Carden up to dinner this evening. Carte blanche in all things, of course, but do the best you can, dear girl."

Now, Isola Ray, but lately returned from college to make home for and with a wealthy bachelor brother, was ignorant of household lore and quite preposterously pretty. Thus suddenly confronted by an emergency under singularly exasperating domestic circumstances, the consciousness of her own inefficiency dismayed her.

THE DINNER IN THE COZY DINING ROOM WENT OFF DELIGHTFULLY.

"Funny" (she crumbled the yellow slip into a ball and aimed it at the wastebasket), "let us consider what we had better do."

Funny, not at all averse to being cuddled in lace draped, faintly fragant arms, promptly lost herself in somnolence.

"If only Delia had not gone to the funeral of that grandchild that expires with periodical regularity every three weeks!" Oblivious of the indifference of her auditor, Miss Ray kept murmuring on. "And—if Ellen Jane were not in bed with a jumping toothache—we might pull through, Funny. Dear, dear! All the years I was learning Latin, why could I not have learned how to cook something except fudges? Gracious! Who's that?" Funny was promptly and peremptorily dispossessed.

Miss Ray hurried in response to the brisk knock at the back door. "It's never you, my dear!" cried Isola Ray. She had flung open the door and was gathering a little sweet faced, apple cheeked countrified woman into the joyful embrace of her loving young arms. "I'd be glad to see you any time, Aunt Elvira, but just now—well, just now your coming seems providential!"

Aunt Elvira returned cordially the caress of the gracious arms and lips.

"Now, how does that happen, honey?" she asked.

She had entered the kitchen—all shining tiles, enamel and blue and white kitchen ware. She put her old brown, cracked, bulging bag down by the sink and with one dexterous twist had divested herself of bonnet and coat.

"Oh, Delia—that's the cook—has gone to one of her periodical funerals. Her relatives are legion, and every few weeks one of them dies. And the other maid has toothache. And Victor telegraphed he was bringing his best friend—who has not before visited this city—up to dinner tonight. You know how my brother detests any cooking except what is done at home. And—beyond fudges or a good salad—I don't know how to make a thing!"

"Don't you worry. Just you do what old Aunt Elviry tells you." The small woman had fished a fresh apron, a pencil and the back of an envelope out of her bag.

"You get the things I write down—never mind the spelling—sent in quick, dear. Then go and get some flowers, show me where the linen and silver are kept and put on the prettiest dress you've got to your back. Sure! Go on, now! Didn't I have you all the time your mother—bless your dear heart—was in the north? And 'tis even prettier than she was—you are. And they called her the beauty of her day."

"Oh, you lovable old flatterer!" cried the girl. Then she kissed again the little red, wrinkled face and fled to the telephone.

She slipped on a discreet and enveloping cloak of dark blue silk and went off to buy her flowers. And coming home she looked down upon the sheaf of long stemmed, dark red roses lying against her arm and the fanciful lines of Bessie Chandler recurred to her:

> Oh, the fate of a man is past discerning!
> Little did Jacqueminot suppose
> At Austerlitz, or at Moscow's burning,
> His fame would rest in the heart of a rose.

The dinner in the cozy dining-room, aglow with the softly tinted lights from Etruscan electroliers, went off delightfully. Victor Ray beamed his approval. He had not imagined that this beloved young sister of his could attend so satisfactorily to things, especially with one maid ill and the other a derelict. And Edward Carden, brown, rugged, keen of glance—a man whose name was known for scholarship and brilliance on two continents—appeared to find in his girlish hostess much grace and charm.

And Isola Ray was charmed by this stalwart friend of her brother's. He had seen so much of the world. He had seen so many much frequented—and little frequented places. Without arrogance or ostentation, he talked about his travels.

She, in the softness of black lawns and laces, her hair shining like burnished gold and her sea blue eyes sparkling, listened to the tales told as perchance Desdemona listened—long ago.

She was recalled to herself quickly by the action of the Japanese lad who had been hired to wait on the table. He had given a slight start and was staring at the door through which he had just come. Isola turned hastily and glanced in that direction also. A little red, eager countenance was visible. Anxious to see that her carefully prepared dinner was being properly served, Mrs. Devlin was peering in at the door. But Edward Carden had also caught sight of her.

"Aunt Elvira!" he cried, and sprang to his feet. "Why—Aunt Elvira!"

Then he was across the room and had her by the shoulders and was cordially shaking her. She was laughing like a child with pleasure.

"I didn't know it was you was coming, sonsie. I never knowed it was you!"

"I did not know you were acquainted with Mr. Carden!" cried Isola in amazement.

"I minded him when he was little, honey—same as I did you."

"Tell him," laughed the girl, "that you cooked this dinner! I could no more do so than I could fly to Mars. If you had not come to my rescue"—

She made an expressive little gesture of despair.

And when he had gone upstairs to reply to a telephone ring it was just a few lines of a familiar poem that brought the rosy tide back to a girl's delicate face.

"I rather agree with Mrs. Browning," declared Edward Carden. And he quoted softly:

> "A housemaid or cook
> One may hire with but little to pay,
> But a woman's heart and a woman's life
> Are not to be won that way."

Elvira heard—through the pantry window. She wiped her kind old eyes on her apron. "God bless 'em!" she said, while Funny purred acquiescence over her saucer of milk.

Going to Sleep.

"If you have never done so, watch yourself go to sleep," said a physician, "and you will be amazed to see how tense your position is. Your knees are drawn and bended, your back is curved, the arms are held more or less tightly to the body and the fingers are folded. The eyelids are held shut, not allowed to droop over the eyes, the neck is strained and the head seems to touch the pillow only at the temples. The points of contact with the bed are really at the temples, shoulders, hips, knees and ankles. Now look at a child sleeping. Every muscle is relaxed, every joint is inert and prone on the couch; his little frame finds rest at every point. The features are undone, so to speak, the nose widens, the mouth droops, the eyelids close easily, and with every line of expression obliterated he finds utter and complete repose. The abandon makes him fall out of bed sometimes, such an inert body has he become. You may imitate him even to that degree, if necessary. Begin at your toes to relax, loosen all your joints and muscles, unbend your fingers, shake your wrists loose, take the curve and strain out of your neck, go all in pieces, in fact, and see how the day's fatigue seems to slip off from you, and the gentle mantle of rest and oblivion to infold you like a garment."

Illustrating the Text.

In his book on India, "The Highroad of Empire," Mr. Murray enlivens a description of the carts of that country with a story of a fellow Englishman who had traveled in the east. He was a Kentish squire who was interested in giving his tenants an intelligent idea of what he had seen abroad. He had made a journey in Palestine and, being an admirable draftsman, had brought home a number of excellent sketches. One winter evening after his return the squire gave a lecture to his village and showed a number of his drawings. Among them was a cart very similar to that which I drew at Jodhpur. The squire explained to his audience that it was a type of the most primitive conveyances known and that it had existed in precisely this same form in Palestine from the earliest times—indeed, that it was probably a cart or wagon of this description that Joseph had sent down from Egypt to bring his father and his household goods from Canaan. Afterward an old farmer came up and expressed his great interest in what he had heard, adding that there was one thing above all others which had interested him, and that was the cart, "for now," he said, "I understand why Joseph said to his brethren, 'See that ye fall not out by the way.'"

RECKONING TIME.

Time is a perennially interesting subject. Before the chronometer in the jeweler's window a procession is constantly passing. The banker pulls out his $700 repeater, compares it with the chronometer and moves on. The office boy with just as much dignity consults the dollar timepiece that bulges his little waistcoat. Both are equally under the spell of time.

As most persons know, England supplies the world with that valuable but impalpable commodity, that purely arbitrary thing which we call time. The meridian of the Royal observatory at Greenwich is the point from which the day of the civilized world is reckoned, but in America the United States Naval observatory in Washington determines Greenwich time and distributes it by telegraph.

In the end the watch of the man in the street is set by the stars. Out of the vast number in the heavens there are some 600, visible either to the eye or the camera, which are known to be practically invariable. The astronomer selects one of them. Through the transit instrument—a telescope pointed at the meridian—he watches, telegraphic key in hand. On the lens of the telescope are eleven hair lines. The center one marks the meridian. As the star crosses each of these lines the operator presses his key, the wires of which connect with an automatic recording clock called a chronograph.

This shows at what time the star crossed the meridian. Astronomical tables determine the time at which it should have crossed. Comparison of the standard clock with these tables shows whether or not the clock is right.

The time is distributed at noon. Three minutes before 12 o'clock thousands of telegraph operators sit in silence waiting for the click of the key which shall tell them that the "master clock" in Washington has begun to speak. At one minute before 12 it begins, beating every second until the fifty-fifth. Then, after the pause, comes a single beat, which marks exact noon, and for another day the world knows that it has the correct time to the fraction of a second.—Youth's Companion.

A FEW DON'TS.

Don't be reckless, especially in your lying.

Don't give to the Lord and then go out and rob a widow.

Don't acquire the borrowing habit, or the day will come when you will run out of friends.

Don't marry an indolent man expecting him to brace up, or you may have to take in washing to pay for the brace.

Don't be so mean minded that you can see no good in a man. He may be the first to loan you money in time of need.

Don't lay up everything for a rainy day and go hungry all through life. Besides, where you are going it may never rain.

Don't spread butter on both sides of your bread just because you have $3 in your pockets. An earthquake may come along and shake the change out of them.

Development of a Chick.

The development of a chick within the egg is one of the most wonderful things in nature. At the end of the fifty-eighth hour of incubation the heart begins to beat, two vesicles are seen and a few hours later the auricles also appear. On the fourth day the outlines of the wings may be perceived and sometimes of the head also; on the fifth day the liver is visible; on the sixth other internal organs appear. In 190 hours the beak is fully formed; in 200 hours the ribs are clearly developed; in 240 hours the feathers are visible; in 268 hours the eyes appear; in 288 the ribs are completed and the feathers on the breast; in 330 the lungs, stomach and breast have assumed a natural appearance. On the eighteenth day the first faint piping of the chick is sometimes audible.

Noisy Old London.

Modern cities are not as noisy as those of other days. For example, in London in the time of King George II. the streets were still cobbled and the pack horse of Elizabethan memory had been replaced by heavy carts and wagons. Barrels of beer and heavy cases were dragged about on drays of iron without wheels, and to add to the tumult heavy signs in immense frames of ironwork hung out in front of shops and houses and croaked interminably. Street cries never ceased for a moment all day. All the smaller necessaries, such as pins, thread, string, ink, straps, fish, milk, cakes, bread, drugs, herbs, matches, were hawked in the streets.

The Modern Way.

"My dear, you must really take Freddy in hand about the way he uses slang. Today he asked me what entomology was, and I told him the science of bugs."

"Well?"

"Then he asked me if an entomologist was a crazy man."

A Good Answer.

A shopkeeper had for his virtues obtained the name of "the little rascal." A stranger asked him why the appellation had been given to him.

"To distinguish me from the rest of my trade," quoth he, "who are all great rascals."

LEGEND OF THE GARTER.

Contradictory Versions of the Foundation of the Order.

I knew, as every schoolboy knows, the legend that a certain Countess of Salisbury dropped her garter at a ball and that the king, picking it up amid the smiles of courtiers, handed it to her with the happy and now immortal phrase, "Honi soit qui mal y pense." But this legend, I recalled, had had to go the way of the story of King Alfred and the cakes, the story of William Tell and the apple and many another pretty fairy tale of history. At last I went to Sir Nicholas Harris Nicolas' "History of the Orders of Knighthood," where I found a delightful mass of contradictory authority produced.

The tale of the ensign and name of the order were first told by Polydore Vergil (1470-1555), who wrote in the time of Henry VII. and Henry VIII. and who said that the lady was "the queen or the king's mistress." Segar, whose work, "Honor, Military and Civil," appeared in 1602, 250 years after the order was founded, was the first to say that it was the Countess of Salisbury. Other writers say that it was the Countess of Kent. John Anstis (1669-1744), garter king of arms, who published several heraldic works, ridicules the whole story. He confesses that an author of Henry VI.'s time, who wrote in Latin and whose work is now entirely lost, upheld it.

Raphael Holinshed, a chronicler, who died in 1580, tells the story in detail and says the lady was the queen, which surely rather spoils the significance of the legend. Sir Harris Nicolas himself thinks the story is not improbable, although he urges the fact that Jean Froissart, who is the best contemporary authority on the reign of Edward III., while he has much to say about the order in his hundredth chapter, does not refer to it, and Nicholas admits that this tells very much against the supposed origin of the story, but Froissart may have thought the matter too trivial to relate. By the way, I feel very much aggrieved that G. C. Macaulay in the abridged volume of Froissart that he published through the Macmillans should have ruthlessly cut this hundredth chapter.

It is not, I may add, claimed that the incident caused the foundation of the Order of the Garter, but only that it gave Edward III. the idea for naming the order which he had resolved to found in any case. In the absence of any other solution than that which rests on these shadowy foundations I think we may still go on accepting the pretty legend, but I repeat my expression of dissatisfaction with the popular histories that they should leave such matters as this severely alone.—London Sphere.

One of the Wonders of Physics.

An experienced mechanic who was asked what he regarded as the most wonderful thing for general utility replied: "The tracking of a car wheel is the most wonderful thing to me in the whole range of science and invention. Here are two rails, uphill and downhill, round the sharp curves and along false tangents, and upon them fly at more than a mile a minute, without jar or jostle, a dozen heavy cars drawn by an engine weighing sixty tons. Passengers realize no danger, yet there is only the little flange of a wheel between them and eternity. An inch and a half of steel turned up on the inner side of the wheel holds up the whole train as securely to the rails as if it were bolted there in grooves."

Hide Your Fruit Trees.

As lawn specimens fruit trees are nearly always disappointing. They have more insect enemies and fungous diseases than first class ornamental trees and shrubs. If you spray them they are unsightly; if you do not your lawn is covered with wormy fruits, which look bad and smell worse. The peach is a short lived, delicate tree which is particularly subject to San Jose scale. Plums and cherries are sure to yield wormy fruit unless you jar the curculios out of them long before breakfast or unless you let the chickens run beneath the trees. Both are violent suppositions for a home lawn.—Country Life In America.

A Natural Inference.

For no other reason than that his poultry book told him to feed lime he slavishly fed lime and asked himself no questions.

The hens were variously affected.

The Leghorns found difficulty in keeping their hot Italian blood from open revolt. The Cochins, with true oriental apathy, said it was fate anyway. But the old Plymouth Rock had the American sense of humor.

"He thinks we're going to lay bricks," she cackled.

No Back Action.

Mr. Gladstone knew how to admit that he was in the wrong. On one occasion he did so candidly and handsomely, as becomes a gentleman. But he preferred to keep clear of the necessity for apologies and had scant belief in their efficacy. "You can't unpull a man's nose," he once said to his private secretary, Sir Algernon West.

Knew How It Was.

"I presume you spend all you make?"

"No; I don't spend a tenth of it."

"Then you must have a nice little balance in the bank?"

"Nope, not a cent."

"Shake, old chap. I'm married myself."

Had Heard Papa Say It.

Power exercised with violence has seldom been of long duration, but temper and moderation generally produce permanence in all things.—Seneca.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Hope everybody has been keeping warm lately.

• • •

Our visitors cannot say they were coolly received.

• • •

Front street looked very lively on Saturday night. It did one good to see the old faces again.

• • •

The Mayor should have known better than to ask people to observe this as a holiday. Why, it's wash day.

Perhaps the ice cream merchants didn't do a roaring trade on Saturday night!

• • •

One of them did, anyhow, for an irascible customer was roaring that he had been waiting half an hour and hadn't been served.

• • •

And the band played "The Old Oaken Bucket," and people got so dry they started out to look for the well at once.

• • •

Hope the preachers tempered the sermons to the warm limbs yesterday. A man who preached over twenty minutes yesterday should have a week of his vacation cut off.

• • •

Say, you Toronto folks, what do you think of our police force? Don't see any better looking cops on King St., do you?

"Oh!" said an attractive young lady from Toronto, who was talking on the street, "I just love Belleville. This is the third time I've been here, and I like it better every time. I'd love to come here and live."

• • •

N. B. — Any young man of good habits, with a fair sized bank account, can obtain the name and address of the above young lady from the man on the next block.

People sat around Front St. on Saturday night and waited for the procession, which failed to materialize. A rumor had got abroad that the Mayor was going to head the parade mounted on an Arabian steed. He would surely have looked like one of the Arabian Knights.

• • •

Funny, wasn't it. When you stood on the west side of the bandstand on Saturday afternoon you heard the Oddfellows' band playing. When you went round to the east side you heard the Imperial band quite plainly.

• • •

Hate to mention it, you know, but really it looked as though some people had put out the family washing is mistake for their decorations.

• • •

Whoever is responsible for that band concert fiasco at the park last night will kindly call at this office and receive a leather medal. It's no joke to go down and feed the mosquitoes and then hear no music.

NOTES.

A lady was struck by a rocket on Saturday evening whilst on the park, but fortunately she was not seriously hurt.

The Oddfellows' Band will give a concert on the park this evening, which will take the place of the regular weekly concert to-morrow evening.

During Saturday afternoon and evening rowboats were at a premium, and a number who desired the use of the same were unable to obtain them.

The steamers North King and Caspian which called here during Saturday night, brought to the city a number of visitors from Rochester, N.Y.

A lot of people went down to Queen Victoria park last night for the sacred concert which was advertised, but it did not materialize, and considerable disappointment was expressed.

Mr. C. R. Scantlebury is dedicating a new 75-foot flagstaff at his home, College Hill, in honor of the Toronto Old Boys'.

This afternoon's events include sailing races off Victoria park and a baseball match, Park Nine vs. Cobourg, on the Driving park.

BURLESQUE BASEBALL.

There was a whole barrel of fun on the Hospital lot this morning when nine old Belleville boys, now resident in Toronto, and nine old Belleville boys, still resident in this city played what was alleged to be a baseball match. There was a big crowd present, and the applause was deafening when Mayor Sulman pitched the first ball on behalf of the team representing Belleville. The ball described a startling curve, and the Toronto men protested against His Worship's pitching the game, as he had too much speed and curves. The protest was upheld. Mr. W H. Wallbridge, president of the Toronto Old Boys, pitched the first ball for his side, and then gracefully meandered to left field. The game was not nearly so bad as it might have been, but there was all sorts of fun. George Dulmage was umpire, and was at one time fiercely assaulted by four of the local players, none of whom weighed less than two hundred pounds. They said he gave a wrong decision. The idea! At last, when the trouble was at its height, somebody called on George for a song, and just as he appeared to be about to tear off "What's all This Noise About?" the aggressive players scattered and the game went on. At the end of the fifth innings the score was 9 to 7 in favor of the Toronto men, but the Belleville fellows were coming strong and tearing up the sod like Texas steers.

The final score was 15 to 14 in favor of Toronto Old Boys.

The players and their positions were as follows;

Toronto Old Boys — Howe, p.; Taylor, c.; Hamilton, 1st b.; Ling, 2nd b.; Wilson, 3rd b.; Hunter, s.s.; Badgley r.f.; Wallbridge, l.f.; Aikens, c.f.

A Gentle Lady Dead.

Many in this city who had the privilege of meeting her, will regret to hear of the death of Mrs. Marjory Irwin Holland, widow of the late R. Henry Holland, who died in Westmount, near Montreal, on July 16. The deceased lady was the mother of Mrs. (Rev.) W B. Heeney, formerly rector of Christ Church, this city. Deep sympathy will be expressed with Mrs Heeney in her sad bereavement.

SPLENDID CONCERT AT TWELVE O'CLOCK POINT

ST. ANDREW'S BOYS' BRIGADE ASSISTED BY THE CAMPERS, COVERED THEMSELVES WITH GLORY.

Twelve O'clock Point,
July 21, 1906.

One of the most delightful events of the season, at Twelve O'clock Point, took place on Thursday evening, July 19, in the form of a concert given by the St. Andrew's Boys' Brigade of Belleville, assisted by the campers. The concert was under the direction of Capt. D. Barragar, of the Boys' Brigade. Great credit is due the Captain, not only in regard to the concert, but also on account of the splendid manner with which he has conducted the brigade camp during the past ten days.

We cannot speak too highly of the boys, as they have proved themselves young gentlemen, and have adhered strictly to the regulations of the camp.

The following is an announcement which appeared on the "Pavilion Bulletin" on Wednesday afternoon.

THE ONE AND ONLY "EXCELSIOR" CONCERT COMPANY.

If the walking be good, will hit this neck of the woods to-morrow evening at about 8 p.m., and at the urgent exhortations of its denizens, and the kind permission of the proprietor, will give an exhibition of talent as varied as it is unique.

No expense has been spared to make a collection of artists, such as the world has never seen. We challenge the globe to produce such another aggregation of sweet singers, piano thumpers, jig dancers, choristers, slack wire performers, and the Amazonian Guard.

DON'T FAIL TO SEE

Signor Eduardo in his wonderful slack wire performance and mid-air juggling. He has never been equalled.

Our Amazon Guard, now thoroughly tame, will delight you, as they have performed before crowned heads and never failed to please.

THE CELEBRATED

Bugle and Drum Corps of the world-famous Boys' Brigade, will do a stunt.

OUR CHORISTERS

are the delight and wonder of the musical world. Do not fail to hear them. They are a combination of Pattis, Bernhardts and Albanis in one great aggregation.

THE "EXCELSIORS"

pianists have been brought at great expense from other lands and we are pleased to present them to you, knowing their ability to please even such a critical audience.

Come early and avoid the rush.

People afflicted with melancholia, hysteria or lucidity not admitted.

On the evening mentioned above the following programme was rendered to a good-sized audience.

2. Piano Duet—Mrs. and Miss Cumming.
3. Physical Drill—Boys' Brigade.
4. Piano Solo—Miss S. Pelletier.
5. Dance (Sailor's Hornpipe)—The Misses Waters, Springer and Brownlee.
6. Chorus—The Land of the Maple.
7. Manual and Firing Exercises—Boys' Brigade.
8. Piano Solo—Miss C. Cumming.
9. Vocal Duet—Mesdames Pelletier and Humphrey.
10. Regimental Calls—Messrs. Ponton and McGie.
11. Exhibition on Slack Wire.—Signor Eduardo.
12. Flag Drill—Amazon Guard.
13. Vocal Solo—Miss C. Cumming.
14. Chorus—The Red, White and Blue.
15. Vocal Solo—Miss S. Pelletier.
16. Chorus—Rule Britannia.

God Save the King.

The duet of Mesdames Pelletier and Humphrey was particularly delightful, and they had to respond to a most vociferous encore.

The physical drill and manual were two of the most prominent features of the evening and reflected great credit upon their captain.

The Sailor's Hornpipe by the Misses Marjorie Waters, Georgie Springer and Jessie Brownlee was danced to perfection, and they well deserved the hearty encore which was given them.

Prof. Mack Waters' piano solo was of the highest order and more than delighted the audience.

Miss Stella Pelletier and Miss Clare Cumming sang solos which fairly charmed. Is it any wonder that the yachts and other craft which sail through the canal, find it impossible to get further than the point.?

Signor Eduardo's performance on the slack wire was the most wonderful yet seen at the Point, the audience fairly holding its breath for at least twenty minutes.

The remaining portion of the programme was grand.

At the conclusion of the programme, Mr. Joseph James, of Actinolite, proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Captain Barragar and the Excelsior Concert Co. The audience expressed their appreciation by singing "He's a Jolly Good Fellow." The Captain responded in a courteous manner and Mr. James then invited the company to have ice cream. He also was saluted by "He's a Jolly, Good Fellow," and, with the singing of the National Anthem, a most delightful evening was brought to a close.

Mr S. M. Thomson, of Brantford, an agent of the Children's Aid Society, was in the city on Saturday interviewing leading citizens with a view to organizing a branch of the work later on in the fall.

Mr. Thomson spoke of the work in different parts of the province, where he has visited, and of the good results evident everywhere; of the growing interest in the work which in the fourteen years of its existence has justified itself, and has proved to be the most economical and practical method of dealing with children. He also told of the closing of Penetanguishene reformatory, and drafting of boys from Mimico Industrial School, and the placing of them in good homes with excellent results.

A Tune or a Joke.

"Was that a bonafide piece that Ethelinda was playing?" asked Mr. Cumrox.

"Certainly," answered his wife. "That was a selection from Wagner."

"Well, of course I wouldn't express any doubts in company, but half the time I can't tell whether Ethelinda is playing a tune or a practical joke."

HAMLIN GARLAND

COPYRIGHT, 1903, BY HAMLIN GARLAND

Raymond's face settled into stern lines. "Jack, I don't want to be mixed up in another man's fight. We are on good terms with our hands—they're a lot of cantankerous American citizens anyway and can't be coerced. I warn you not to monkey with our plant."

Munro laughed. "I'll fight shy, old man, so far as I'm concerned, but these dagoes and Poles are getting watch eyed, and if they stampede they'll run over somebody. You don't believe in me and my cowboys, but the time may come when you'll see that I'm about the only commander in this camp."

"I see that now, Jack. That's why I'm talking to you. But you've started on a line of action that means war with organized society. You had no call to join those jackasses who ran Mackay out of camp. It was none o' your funeral—had nothing to do with the question of wages."

Munro grinned. "He was such an ape."

"Yes, but it started you wrong. Now, I don't know who blew up the shaft house, but if you do your best plan is to cut those outlaws out and turn them back to the authorities."

"I don't know a thing. Of course the union had nothing to do with it. It was done by a few hotheads full of peaches. These mine owners have got to give up their nine hour scheme. We've got 'em dead to rights, for I can drive every nonunion man out of camp if necessary, and my advice to you is, have your men march up and sign our rolls double quick."

"They can do as they please about that. I will bring no pressure to bear on them, but I'd like to ask you as a friend not to make it any harder than you can help for Kelly & Raymond. We've got all we can stagger under now, and the worst thing that can happen to us is delay. We've opened our vein, and we're going to buy in our mine inside of six weeks if nothing prevents."

Raymond walked on to his cabin with a heavier heart than he had carried since he left Barnett's home. Part of this was due to Munro's warning, but the larger part of it sprang from his meeting with Peabody, who was not at all the sort of citizen he had expected Ann's eastern lover to be. He was a man of power, dignity and decision, not an erratic idler like Barnett, and his air of quiet authority sprang from a strong personality securely placed in the world.

Louis came back to the cabin with a sly smile on his face. "What did you think of Mr. Peabody? Darn him, he's here to get Ann to go back to New York. I don't go, I tell you that!"

The two men shook hands.

"Maybe she won't go?"

"I'm afraid she will," the boy gloomily replied. "He's got some kind of a 'drag' on her. He's been trying to get her, oh, a long time."

Raymond's voice was calm as he asked, "What is his business?"

"Lawyer. He's rich too. Ann wants us both to come over to the Kellys' to dinner. I don't want to go. Do you?"

"She's the captain," answered Raymond. "I reckon we'd better spruce up a bit."

"It makes me tired," the boy went on. "I wanted her to marry you, and then we could all live out here."

A half hour later Ann knocked. "Is any one at home?"

Raymond flung open the door. "We are all at home."

Ann introduced Peabody, who stood by her side, and the two men shook hands rather coldly while she said to Raymond: "Can you take care of Mr. Peabody for the night, and will you come over to dinner? You need have no more scruples, now that Woo is with us."

At the dinner table Ann studied the two men with highly amused interest. Peabody, easy, assured and calmly tolerant, did the talking, while Raymond listened, a little sullenly it seemed to Ann. The New Yorker was most admirable in his consideration for Mrs. Kelly and his interest in everything about him, and yet he did not stir the one he hoped to please. He had always been commonplace to her and was conspicuously so here on the mountain top.

Peabody did not attempt to conceal his intimate relationship with Ann, and every tone of his voice when addressing her was torture to Raymond, who began to talk at last in self defense, addressing himself to Mrs. Kelly as his hostess, leaving Ann free to listen unreservedly to her eastern suitor. The girl understood this mood in Rob, and it touched her.

As they all re-entered the bungalow Peabody rubbed his hands together in delight. "By Jove, this is something like! This chimney carries me back to my hunting lodge in the Maine woods." He was in the midst of a story when a knock at the door announced a visitor.

"Come in!" shouted Raymond, and Munro entered, entirely at his ease, graceful, jocose, making no account of the looks of surprise on the faces of Raymond and his guests.

"Remain where you are!" he called. "The house is entirely surrounded and no nonunion laborer will be allowed to escape."

Raymond mechanically gave him a chair, while Kelly nodded curtly. Ann bowed and said, "Good evening, Captain Munro."

Peabody alone smiled. "Ah, you were my guide up the hill! My guard as well as guide, I take it."

"I'd rather have been your executioner."

"For what reason?"

"Had I known you were coming to get the queen of the peak your blood had stained the heather."

"Good heavens, what an escape! Am I quite safe now?" he asked of Kelly.

This fooling over, they took seats, and the conversation ran to the prospects of the camp, and Peabody, with a feeling that Kelly was the man of richest experience, persuaded him to tell something of his wonderful career as a trailer of golden pathways.

Raymond sat in silence, while Ann awoke to a delicious excitement in the situation. Before her sat three very direct and forceful lovers regarding each other like tigers, instinct with hate, yet masking it, pretending to honor and good will while bitter jealousy raged beneath. She provoked Munro to the most audacious sayings merely to see Peabody stare, and she flung an appealing word at Raymond now and again as if valuing his opinion above all others, though he made but curt answers, returning to his fire, mystified by her gayety and by her subtlety of byplay. Munro, so far from being depressed by Peabody's presence, was carried quite beyond his usual self, and his reckless compliments had a keen edge. In the end Ann regretted her encouragement of his audacity.

Raymond's guests rose at last, and Ann and Peabody went away together. This cut deeper than all else, and Louis, who took a very pessimistic view of the whole affair, did not comfort him. "She'll go back with him. I can see that," he said. "And she'll want me to go, too, but I won't."

Munro went away outwardly jocular, but inwardly sadder than he had ever been in his life, for his love for Ann was mingled with respect for her mind, her character. Her calm and kindly attitude toward him that night had been a revelation to him.

Peabody on his return found Raymond sitting alone by his fire. Louis was deep in slumber.

"That man Munro is an interesting fellow. What do you know about him?" asked the lawyer.

"Not very much. He's rather secretive. He came here from Sylvanite, I believe."

"His jokes about getting under my ribs were a little grewsome. He struck me as just about mediaeval enough to do it—under proper conditions. Tell me about yourself. Ann has only praise for you. I want to thank you most cordially for your kindness to her and to the boy. He's much improved—less nervous and more manly."

"I doubt if he can be persuaded to leave. He told me tonight that he wouldn't go."

"Well, I'm glad I met you, Mr. Raymond. I shall feel easier about the boy in case we do go east without him."

These cordial, frank and manly words struck an icy chill to Raymond's heart. It was all over then. She had consented to go, and his life was laid waste. He rose unsteadily.

"You must be tired. Shall I show you your bunk?" he asked.

"I believe I will turn in," responded Peabody.

When the young miner returned to his seat beside the fire a big lump of pain filled his throat, and he owned a boyish desire to fling himself down on the floor and sob. He lost all shame of his weakness at length and went out into the night—to be alone with the deepest grief of his life.

CHAPTER XIX.

RAYMOND did not see Ann at breakfast next morning, but sent word by Louis that important work in the mine detained him, and the girl was hurt by the neglect. It was not a cheerful going at best, for Mrs. Kelly was broken hearted and frankly pessimistic.

"You'll never come back," she said. "You'll forget the Kellys—you'll forget you ever lived in a log hut and swept floors."

"Why, Nora, I'm only going to Valley Springs. Maybe I'll come back, and soon."

"You say so, but you are going far. I have two eyes, and I can see. You've broken Rob's heart too. I know why he isn't here this morning—he couldn't bear to see you go, and no more can I."

The tears came to Ann's eyes. Never had such sincerity, such directness of affection, touched her. "I'll come back. I promise you I'll come back unless you come to the Springs to live."

"Come back!" shouted Kelly, who had entered the door. "Why, sure thing! She can't keep away. D'ye think Louis is going to leave the peak? Not for long. He has just been telling me when to expect him." Somehow Kelly's tone helped Ann as well as Nora.

"I am not going back to New York till spring."

"Let me tell you something," Kelly resumed, with ponderous effort at being confidential. "Your Wall street lawyer is all right. He's a man of substance, but Rob is going to sluice a stream of gold out o' this hill that'll make the lawyer chap look like a worn dime."

They reached the Springs without accident, and were greeted as if they had escaped from a robber's cave. Mrs. Barnett and her friends were all greatly excited over the events of the high country, which had been distorted, magnified by the shadows of the clouds, till they were of the most monstrous proportions. Munro was already a bogy—a sort of cowboy Napoleon—and Ann laughed at the questions hurled at her head by the Barnetts when they found she had known and liked the captain of the patrol.

"Not at all," she replied. "I found him very amusing. No, he was not drunk, and I never saw any weapons upon him. Mr. Raymond considers him a dangerous force because of his zeal to serve the miners. Yes, it is true that Mr. Raymond is the leader of the free miners and that he and Mr. Munro are friends. Yes, Kelly and Raymond have made a strike, but they are unable to get the men they need to work their mine."

Barnett came home looking hard and worn, quite unlike his jovial self, but he greeted Ann warmly. "I am glad to see you here. I want to know all about things up there. Where is Peabody?"

Mrs. Barnett replied: "Dressing for dinner. Hurry, Don; you're late."

After he left them Ann remarked to Mrs. Barnett, "He looks worried."

"He is worried to death. He insists on trying to be the head and front of this citizens' committee of safety. He's chairman of it and is away all hours of the day and night. Do you know the whole city is patrolled?"

"Patrolled! What for?"

"So that the miners cannot come rushing down here some night and burn us all up."

This amused Ann. "How silly! Why should they do that?"

"Because we mine owners live here. It is not a laughing matter to us. Word has come to us through reliable sources that your nice friend Munro has planned a raid, and every young man in the town has been enrolled in the 'home guard.'"

Ann laughed outright at this. "Jeannette, you people have been eating too much lobster salad and ice cream. You're all suffering from nightmare. There isn't a word of truth in what you've been saying."

When Don came down she continued to mock, and all through dinner she perversely defended Munro and listened to Barnett's boastings of what they were going to do to open their mines with entire lack of sympathy.

"I don't pretend to comprehend what you men call business," she said, "but it seems to me that rather than waste millions on a useless war I would allow the miners a few more cents pay just as a matter of economy."

"But it's the principle of the thing. We don't intend to be dictated to by these 'red neckers.' They must come to our terms. I've been deceived in Rob. He and Kelly are playing a two faced game with us."

"I beg your pardon, they are not!" she hotly answered. "They are doing just what you ought to do. They're paying their men good wages and treating them properly."

Peabody put in a word. "If I might venture, I don't know a thing about it except what Munro and Raymond told me, but it seems to me Ann is right. As I understand it, these chaps are contending that in making this change from three shifts of eight hours each you shouldn't lay off a lot of men and put the rest on two shifts of nine hours each at eight hours' pay. Isn't that it?"

"Well, yes; but, you see, it's really a new system altogether."

"But in the change you don't intend to accidentally pay 30 cents or 50 cents or whatever it may be for that extra hour?"

"The pay for a day's work will remain as it is now."

Peabody smiled. "A mere shuffle. Come, be frank. You fellows have fixed up a new deal in which the cards go against the miners. They protest, and now it is a matter of 'gun play,' as you say out here."

Mrs. Barnett looked relieved. "I wish you'd talk him out of it, Wayne."

Peabody, with a lawyer's pleasure, went on with his analysis. "But there's a third party here which is of more interest to me than either you or the unionists, and that is Raymond's party of the third part. They are standing clear for the present, but if you crowd them to the wall they'll take hold, and then, as Kelly said, 'you'll have a wildcat by the tail.' I wish I could wait and see how you come out, but I've got a big case on for the 10th and must be in Washington."

"The whole thing will be settled in a day or two," declared Barnett. "When we go up there again it will be with a thousand men and fully armed."

"That is a harsh arbitrament," said Peabody, with a gravity which was almost solemnity. "I would advise you to settle this case out of court."

Ann interposed. "I think you both take too serious a view of the whole thing. Mr. Raymond laughs over it."

"Mr. Raymond was probably trying to keep you unalarmed," answered Peabody. "And now that you are out of it I do not think it well for either you or Louis to return to it."

Louis uttered indignant outcry. "Oh, see here! I've got to go back. I'm helping Raymond."

"I guess he'll have to stagger along without you, Louis," replied Barnett. "You better not go into this mixup again."

"I'll go back whenever I please."

The dinner was finished with a pleasanter topic, and when the men were alone with their cigars Peabody carelessly remarked: "I'm going to take Ann back with me if she'll go. I don't like the idea of this youngster dragging her into all this filthy turmoil. Why, I found her living in a log cabin with an Irish family—nice people, but no place for her."

"That's the singular part of it. She seems to enjoy it. She wrote Jeannette from up there pretty regularly, and she out and out said she liked it. And she is gay as a bird—she's lost some of her fat—I never saw her looking fitter."

Peabody mused. "She is changed. I can't quite make out why or how. She was like a schoolgirl for spirits last night. Do you suppose it's the high altitude?"

"My dear chap, I suspect it is a man, and I fear it is Munro," said Barnett.

"I hope not, for her sake."

"I do, too, and for your sake; but I've seen too many women go to pieces in that way to feel any assurance. It wouldn't have been so bad if she'd taken up with Raymond, for he is a fine fellow aside from his present stand; but there, again, he was too respectful, too near her own type. It needed a wild devil like this cowboy captain to stir her imagination."

Peabody's cigar was broken between his fingers. "Don, you scare me!"

Barnett, having fairly crushed his friend, now tried to comfort him. "All this may be a wrong diagnosis, and I hope it is, but if I were you I would go to her and use words that would startle her. She needs the strong hand."

Peabody rose, all the quizzical lines of his face lost in a plexus of doubt and hesitation.

Ann wondered at the change in Peabody, but had no chance to speak to him for some minutes, for a couple of young men were detailing their stern plans for invading Skytown.

The large library was soon filled with people who had heard of Ann's return from the peak, and the girl was profoundly amused to find herself taken for a fount of wisdom concerning the miners' war and their demands. The feeling against the camp was savage, and the men were loud in denunciation of the governor of the state, who had refused to order out the militia. "He is as bad as Munro, an absolute anarchist," declared one man, whose strident voice dominated all the others.

One by one the guests dropped away, and at last only the Barnetts and Ann and Peabody were left in the library.

At a signal from Mrs. Barnett Don sauntered out of the room as if on some errand and forgot to return. A few moments she, too, begged to be excused "for a moment" and was seen no more.

Both Ann and Peabody understood these actions, but as he was intent on making an appeal to her and she knew there was no escape from it they faced each other with a tensity of emotion which seemed impossible a moment before.

Ann broke the silence. "How indelicate of them!"

"How considerate, say I, for I want to talk with you," he hurried on. "I want you to go back with me, Ann, as my wife. I can't go back alone. I have missed you horribly. Dear girl, answer me, are you ready to go?"

Ann remained silent, her mind running over for the hundredth time the advantages, the duties involved, while his plea proceeded, earnest and manly, but leaving her cold. It permitted her to calculate, to criticise. He had much to give her. He was a man of large income, of unquestioned power, and his home was spacious. She liked him, she respected him very highly, she admired him, but—

The girl's dream was not yet faded out of her soul. She hoped—faintly, foolishly hoped—for a return of the glow, the mystery, the flooding, transforming power of a love that was more than respect, more than honor and admiration.

To be continued.

"SWISS FOOD"

SPLIT, BRITTLE, DULL HAIR.

All Come From Dandruff, Which is Caused by a Germ.

Split hair, hard hair, lusterless hair, brittle hair, falling hair, all owe their origin to dandruff, which is caused by a measly little microbe that burrows into the scalp, throwing up the cuticle into dandruff scales and sapping the vitality of the hair at the root, causing the several diseased conditions of the hair till it finally falls out. Modern science has discovered a remedy to destroy the dandruff microbe, which is combined in Newbro's Herpicide, the delightful hair dressing. Allays itching instantly and makes hair soft as silk. The Cheese Board.

The cheese market on Saturday afternoon was not quite so brisk as it has been known to be, but the drop in price which was expected did not materialize to any great extent. The market opened with a bid of 11 1-2c for 350 boxes. This was made by the representative of James Alexander. He got his cheese, and then the rest of the buyers calmly proceeded to ignore first bid and started all over again at 11 cents. The bidding then gradually raised till 11 7-16c for white and 11 1-2c for colored was reached, at which figures most of the sales were made.

The boardings were 3947 boxes white and 600 boxes colored. Sales: Jas. Alexander, 350 white at 11 1-2c; Grant, 310 colored at 11 1-2c; W. S. Cook, 200 white and 290 colored at 11 7-16c; J. C. Warrington, 215 at 11 7-16c; Lovell & Christmas, 1335 white at 11 3-8c; Hodgson Bros., 112 at 11 3-8c. For the balance, 1735 boxes, 11 3-8c and 11 7-16c was refused, but the figures mentioned were afterwards accepted on the curb.

The offerings last year at the same date were 3400 boxes, against 4547 on Saturday last. Last year's best price, at the same date, was 10 1-2c, against 11 1-2 on Saturday.

Men, Women and Fact.

Tact has always been considered the peculiar attribute of woman. "With a woman's tact," is one of the stock phrases of the novelist. But a writer in one of the American magazines—and his view is upheld by an English magazine which quotes him—upsets this tradition by declaring that men are more often tactful than women. Men, it is submitted, are swift to know when to speak and when not to speak—when it is wise to withhold even a look—and that is why a mediocre man will succeed when even a clever woman will fail, why men are greater in diplomacy, in all things that require finesse. Still it is a question whether men really succeed better in diplomacy. What about the woman who is the "power behind the throne?"

How the Daisy Was Named.

Of all the flowers of the field the daisy is the most appropriately named. Probably not one person in a hundred understands the significance of this little flower. Hundreds and hundreds of years ago it got its name, and in all parts of the world the name means the same thing. The nature lover who named the daisy had in his study of the wild flower observed that it opened its eye with the opening of the day and closed it with the setting of the sun. So with the simplicity of the true artist he called it the eye of the day, the days-eye or, as we spell it today, the daisy.

Regular Ostriches.

"This, ladies and gentlemen," said the guide, "is a real theatrical chop house. You will notice the signs on the wall, 'Watch your hat' and 'Keep an eye on your umbrella.'"

"Great gooseberries!" exclaimed the old farmer in the party. "I often heard tell that these here actor folks were half starved, but I didn't think they would eat hats and umbrellas."

"DARE TO BE A DANIEL"

DIET INFLUENCES THE CHARACTER OF MEN.

THE NEW LIBERAL THOUGHT

The Noted Divine Takes For His Theme the Refusal of Daniel to Eat the Unclean Food—Sins of the Palate Among the Worst of All Sins—Often the Forerunners of All Other Sins.

Los Angeles, Cal., July 22.—That diet influences character and that a man is largely what he eats is illustrated in this sermon, the preacher taking for his text Daniel i, 12, "Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days."

"What is a victory like?" said a lady friend to the Waterloo conqueror. "The greatest tragedy in the world, madam, except a defeat," was the answer. Well said, thou iron duke. None could speak more authoritatively. The world has supposed thy heart adamantine. But even the stones themselves might almost weep when they are drenched with human carnage. The cheers of triumph can never drown the sobs of anguish. The glittering rewards of victory cannot blind our eyes to the awful price at which that victory was purchased. Lord Roberts, upon his return from the Boer war, was hailed in England as a conquering chief. When he returned from Africa to London the whole nation rose to do him honor. But while the British were acclaiming the mighty deeds of "Little Bobs," Lord Roberts was wearing upon his uniform grief's symbol, the black crape. Lord Roberts' only boy had been shot among the African hills. So is it always with war. We praise the returning chieftains, but we cannot forget the bloody fields over which these heroes have waded and the many grave trenches they saw filled with the slain bodies of their valiant comrades.

But if the battlefields of the nineteenth century were the scenes of awful tragedies, what must have been the horrors of the battlefields of the fifteenth, the twelfth and the fifth centuries and the battlefields of a thousand years ago. In olden times the conquerors rarely took prisoners or liberated their captives upon parole, as we do now. The general custom was to slay their prisoners or, what was still more common, to sell them into perpetual servitude. This practice was almost universal. Thus many of the nations, like the Phoenicians and the Etrurians and the Cretes and the Sicilians, made war for human captives as well as for gold and silver. These nations were known according to an old historian's definition as "man stealers." They wanted human slaves as oarsmen to man their galleys and laborers to work in their fields and men and women to be their domestic servants as well as men for chariotеers. What was true of the great maritime states mentioned was also true of Egypt and Rome and Greece and Babylon. These mighty cities of olden times all had their human auction blocks. The greater the conquests of their returning warriors the greater number of slaves to be put up and sold as common cattle in the market places. Thus, having made this explanation, we can understand why Daniel and the finest youths of the Hebrew nation were carried to Nebuchadnezzar's capital after Jerusalem had been captured and overthrown.

No sooner was the Babylonish king back in his palace than he called one of his chief officers, Asphenaz by name, and said: "Ashpenaz, I wish you would go and look over those young Hebrews who I have brought back. Select three or four of the finest physical and mental specimens that are there. Then for the next three years take them and educate them and feed them from my own table. I want to develop these men for my own service. I want to re-enforce the intelligence of my own court with the best blood of this Hebrew nation." The result of this command: Daniel and his three friends, Hananiah and Michael and Azariah, were selected. Ah, this was high honor for Daniel and his companions. It not only meant liberation from human slavery, but in time it also meant membership in the king's council. But, alas, alas, it seems as though Daniel is foolishly going to upset all his political prospects. When the food and the wine from the king's table are placed before him, Daniel refuses them because they are forbidden diet—are unclean according to Jewish law. "But," says the king's chamberlain, "you must eat this meat and wine, for if you do not the king will not only punish me, but also will probably slay you. And he will surely know this refusal by your starved looks." Then Daniel spake the words of my text: "Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days, and give us pulse to eat and water to drink. Then let our countenances be looked upon before thee, and the countenances of the children that eat of the portion of the king's meat, and as thou seest deal with thy servants." So the royal officer consented to them in this matter and proved them ten days. You all know the result of this test. At the end of ten days the countenances of Daniel and his three friends were "fairer" and fatter in flesh than all the children who did eat the portion of the king's meat. Such to-day is the simple story from which we will draw our sermonic theme. And may our history in life be like that of Daniel, who refused to eat the king's meat.

Let us now look at our subject a little closer. Notice that this king's meat was to Daniel and his comrades a sensual temptation. It appealed to Daniel's eye and nostril and palate. It was the temptation of the banquet hall, which not only smelled good and looked good, but it appealed to Daniel the more enticingly because heretofore he had never had his appetite surfeited by the delectable viands of a royal kitchen.

But Daniel had never been an epicure. He had never been one who was a devotee of sensual pleasures. He had grown up with the plain, coarse, simple and yet wholesome food upon which most of us were reared in our fathers' homes. He had the simple breakfast and the simple dinners and the simple suppers common to Jewish childhood. This "pulse" which he mentions is the general name given to the leguminous plants, such as the beans and peas, etc. Thus you can see what a temptation must have come to Daniel in a sensual way when he suddenly had placed before him the viands and the wines of the king's banquet hall. Oh, they looked so good, and they smelled so good! The boy probably wanted to taste them. He wanted to feast on them. And yet, had he feasted thus and kept on feasting, he would surely have spiritually died. The meats by the Mosaic law were unclean. God had said, "Thou shalt not eat this food."

"True," says some one, "the king's meat may have been unclean food for Daniel, but it is not unclean for me. We are not living under the old but under the new dispensation. What was a sin for Daniel to eat is not a sin for me to eat." Oh, of course we are not asserting that there is a direct connection between what a man eats and what a man spiritually is. And we are asserting that the sins of the palate are among the very worst of all sins. They are the sins which are often the forerunners of all other sins. They are the sins which will turn man into a beast and may unkennel all the tigers and the wolves and the hyenas and the jackals of his lower nature. ~~Beware, O man,~~ of the king's meats and wines, which Satan is ready to spread for us in many a banquet hall! The Sicilians erected an altar in Ceres to Adephagia, the goddess of gluttony. May we, as servants of the true God, never be found worshiping at this brutalizing, this mental and physical and moral and spiritual depleting shrine.

I can hear Daniel's friends talking to him and trying to persuade him to eat this unclean food. "Oh," they say, "Daniel, of course your God is all right. But what is the good of being a bigot? Why are you so hidebound about this food Why do you not worship the Babylonish gods? Why do you not theologically broaden out? Why do you stick so close to your Jewish laws? Why do you not become a student of 'the new thought?'" "But what is the 'new thought?'" says Daniel. "Why," say the Babylonish friends, "don't you know? Have you not been reading our new theology? Why, the 'new thought' is a beautiful belief. This is it in substance: God is goodness. God is in us. We are all part of God. Just try to think of God as a good being and try to develop all the good in you, and you will grow better and grow like God." "But," says Daniel, "what has that to do with the first commandment, which Moses gave to the children of Israel: I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt and out of the house of bondage; thou shalt have no other gods before me?" "Oh, Daniel, Daniel, Daniel," say the Babylonish friends, "we have outgrown all that superstitious stuff. We have outgrown all the commandments and the Jewish dietary laws. We are the advocates of the 'new thought.' In that 'new thought' we just try to be good, and that is all one needs to do." My friends, cannot you hear Daniel's friends trying to get him to eat the unclean food and adopt the religious liberalism of the Babylonish capital?

Is not Satan trying to get you to eat of the unclean food in our modern Babylons by the same pernicious argument of theological liberalism? I am not the least bit afraid that you will become a blatant atheist. I am not afraid that you will turn your back upon Christ or upon the Bible. But I am afraid lest the insidious advance of the new liberal thought should undermine the foundations of your faith. I find it doing its deadly work in the church and in society. Men are giving up their anchorages and are drifting out on the sea of doubt toward the rocks of eternal disaster. Never let go your faith in the essential truths of Christianity. The divinity of Christ, his sinless life and his atonement on the cross, his resurrection and ascension, the work of the Holy Spirit, the necessity of the new birth and the inspiration of the Bible—these are the distinguishing doctrines of our faith. To abandon these is to surrender all that has made our religion a power in the world; it is to turn Christianity into a dry, dead system of ethics. In Christ alone have we life. The Bible declares it. If you deliberately go forth to eat of the unclean food in the Babylonish capital you must perish. O God, may we never become so liberal that we cannot make the words of Jesus Christ the centre, the circumference, the all in all of what we should believe and how we should live!

But there is still another fact which would have made the eating of the king's meat easy for Daniel. The king's food was spread in the presence of the young man's enemies. If Daniel did not eat the meat and drink the wine which came from the royal kitchens and wine cellars at once, in all probability the refusal would be reported to the king's higher officials, and Daniel's bright political prospects would not only be stopped, but without doubt Daniel would lose his head. "Well," you say, "that is strange. How can this be? Daniel did not have any enemies as yet. He had just been selected for future political favoritism and had not yet eaten his first meal in the palace." Ah, my friends, by that question I know one fact. You have not traveled much abroad.

In our country the word "clannishness" has not much meaning. When we go back to our Revolutionary days we find that Kosciusko and Baron Steuben and Lafayette helped to win our independence. Then we find that Hamilton and a host of other statesmen who helped make us what we are were foreign born. Then we find that scores and hundreds of inventors like Ericsson and moneyed kings like Carnegie and teachers like Agassiz were also born across the sea. And thus, strange to say, the highest recommendation that an artist or a writer or a preacher can have before the American public is that he was foreign born. But, though our own people seem to feel that all prima donnas who have a foreign name can sing better than our own, yet this is not true of foreign lands. The man whom the Germans are most ready to honor is the German. The man the English are most ready to honor is the Englishman. The man the Scotch are most ready to honor is the Scotchman. The same law was true of the Romans, the Greeks, the Egyptians, the Hebrews and the Babylonians. The people who were not of their own nationality were always looked at askance and despised. Thus you can see the natural prejudice which at once arose against Daniel after his selection by the king because he was foreign born.

"Aha!" the people cry. "Aha! If he does not eat the king's meat we will expose him. Then this foreign upstart will remain a slave, as he ought to do." And yet, my friends, as I hear the enemies of Daniel gloating about his overthrow, can I not hear your enemies gloating over your spiritual overthrow in the same way? You enter a certain line of business. The proprietor decides to keep his place open on Sunday, or, what is worse, his foreman comes to you and asks you to do something which is not squarely and uprightly honest. "But," you say to the foreman, "I never work on Sunday," or you say: "That is not honest. I am not going to do it." The foreman shrugs his shoulders and says: "All right. If you won't do it, I will tell the boss. Then I guess you will have to hunt another place." Then all your enemies will cry: "Aha! We will destroy him. Aha, aha!" What have you done? Are you to-day compromising your Lord in the presence of your enemies?

But there is yet one more fact about this king's meat to which I wish to call your attention. It was spread in a foreign land; it was spread scores and hundreds of miles away from the place where Daniel was born; it was spread in the Babylonish capital; it was spread so far away from home that methinks at first I can hear Daniel whisper to himself these words: "Well, what is the difference if I do eat the king's meat and drink the king's wine? It will only be for a short time that I will do it. Father and mother will never hear about it. They are away off now among the Judean hills, and even if I do go back to Jerusalem, why, then I will start all over again and be a consistent Hebrew, as I used to be." But no sooner does he speak thus than I hear him say: "Nay; I will not do this. God sees; God knows. I see; I know. And I will be true to myself and true to my absent loved ones and true to my God whether I am in the Babylonish capital or in my own dear Jerusalem or in my own father's house." Oh, my friends, has not the tempter come to you, as I have imagined he came to Daniel, whispering: "Why don't you eat the unclean food? No one knows; no one will know. Why don't you eat the fruit of the forbidden tree just once?"

But, though the tempter may come to us and whisper, "Child, just once, and no one will know of thy sin," believe him not; the tempter is a perjurer. For no man ever sinned but at last that sin found him out. In that fascinating book of travels, "On the Frontier," Mr. Campion tells us how in the Isthmus of Panama he tried to gather some beautiful green plants of a most delicate shade and form. No sooner would he reach out and pluck one than this leaf would become nothing but a withered, shriveled, brownish weed. "At first," said Mr. Campion, "I thought I was stricken with a delirium of the fatal Panama fever, but after awhile I found that I had been plucking a sensitive plant, so sensitive that as soon as I touched one immediately it lost its color and life." So it is with sin. We may think we can pluck the beautiful leaves of sin and press them to our lips to kiss them and no one will know it. But, alas, the world will soon see that we are not holding in our hands the beautiful flower of purity, but a withered stalk of sin. No sin can be safely hidden. Every sin will ultimately be found out. No Babylon is so far away but the misdeeds of a Daniel will be carried back to the home land and, what is far worse, carried up to be written down in the pages of the great book which shall be opened by the recording angel at the judgment seat of Jesus Christ. Hear it, man! Hear it, woman! Hear it, child!

Thus it is with great joy that I hold up before your eyes the character of Daniel for you to copy. The last time I ever heard D. L. Moody preach was about this mighty man of God. In that sermonic picture he showed us how Daniel was able to stand with unblanched cheek amid the gaping mouths of the lions' den. But if you have followed me you know I have not once mentioned Daniel as the mighty statesman of Nebuchadnezzar's court. My sermon has revolved about the first great temptation of Daniel's life, when he refused to eat the king's meat, as the first great temptation of Joseph's life was in Potiphar's home. When these two young men were found true to God in the first temptations of youth the way was paved for them to become the premiers of kings. So may we be true to God in the first temptations. May we be true to God in our youth. Then, whether we rise to positions of power and influence among the great of the world or continue in humble life, doing our duty in obscurity, we shall please him who, when this world's work is done, shall give to us our heavenly crown. Thus I close with the only five words I remember of D. L. Moody's sermon. They are these: "Dare to be a Daniel! Dare to be a Daniel! Dare to be a Daniel!" In God's name and with God's power, dare to be a Daniel and triumph on earth and in heaven. In God's name, dare.

Sale of Girls' Hair.

The Hair Fair of Limoges was held July 13, and the market place was filled with girls, who stood demurely while dealers examined with critical eyes their long and beautiful tresses.

Dealers from Paris, Berlin, Moscow and London were there. And it was curious to see them bargain with the girls, and, having settled the price march them off to be cropped.

Prices of tresses varied from $9 to $11 per pound, and a parcel weighing eighty-six pounds (taken from the members of one family) realized $1,000.

Hair dressers say that they can get better hair from the Limoges market than from any other in the world.

The Whirling of a Bullet.

Bullets from the thirty caliber rifles of the United States army whirl with great rapidity. The rifling gives one revolution of the bullet about its axis in ten inches. At the muzzle the velocity of the bullet is 2,300 feet a second, which means 2,700 turns a second, assuming that the bullet does not strip in the rifling. The circumference of the bullet is .942 inch, which gives a peripheral velocity of 2,600 inches each second, or 13,000 feet a minute.

The Solution.

The bankruptcy court can boast some delightfully naive rejoinders. "How, sir, is it possible," angrily demanded the opposing counsel of the bankrupt, "to live in the luxurious style you have affected on $200 a year?" The witness replied, with an air of justifiable pride, that that "was a problem to which he had devoted considerable time in the interests of social economy, and the results of his humble efforts were now before the court."

Old Boys and Girls Are Enjoying Themselves.

AND SINGING "HOME, SWEET HOME" — SATURDAY'S DOINGS —NAMES OF THOSE WHO CAME ON TORONTO EXCURSION.

Up to the hour of going to press, to use a rather trite expression, the 1906 reunion of the Toronto-Belleville old boys and girls has been very enjoyable, both to visitors and visited. The visitors were glad to set foot once more upon their native heath, and the visited were delighted to shake hands and "swap stories" with friends of other days. The fatted calf was served up both hot and cold in hundreds of Belleville homes yesterday.

One and all, the visitors express themselves as both surprised and delighted with the improvements to be seen in Belleville, and hope the improvement may be permanent, a wish, by the way, in which we can all heartily join.

In the different churches yesterday, reference was made to the reunion, and the old boys and girls heartily took part in the services.

SATURDAY'S DOINGS.

Music on Queen Victoria park and various aquatic sports in the harbor comprised the amusements provided for the visitors on Saturday afternoon. The Oddfellows' band played in the stand, and the different refreshment booths, under the management of the W.C.A., seemed to be doing a thriving trade. The young lady waitresses, in Japanese costume, looked quite chic, and gave a charming appearance to the scene. The park was thronged with people, many of whom, no doubt, had wended their way thither in quest of cool breezes.

AQUATIC SPORTS.

There were only two aquatic events during the afternoon, namely, a water baseball match and a swimming contest. The former was a novelty to many and was a means of providing an hour's amusement. The two teams contesting for the prize offered, namely, $5, entered heartily into the sport, and gave a fairly interesting exhibition of the game. The teams were known as the Park Nine and a picked team. In the first innings the Park Nine secured two runs, which were the only runs they secured. The picked nine in the third innings secured one run and that was their only score. Seven innings were played. Those composing the teams were as follows:

Picked Nine—Thomas p. Connolly c. Wilson 1b. Sharpe 2b., Geary 3b.

SWIMMING RACE.

A number of small boys entered into the swimming race, which proved to be a good contest between the three who got "inside the money." The boys were lined up upon the dock opposite the park and had to swim across the harbor to a point where the judges were stationed. The three first to finish were J. Guryea, E. Eustace and A. Burke, who completed the course close together. The prizes were $1, 50 cents and 25 cents. The judges were Messrs. F. Y. Brenton, T. Thompson and W. H. Campbell.

In the evening the band gave another concert on the park, and shortly before ten o'clock there was a procession of Toronto-Belleville old boys. It started from the Quinte, and headed by the band, marched to Queen Victoria park, those who walked letting off Roman candles, etc. The firework display on the drill shed site did not materialize. The procession up and down Front St. was kept up till a late hour, and our main isle presented the liveliest appearance it has for a long time.

CHEHALIS CUT IN TWO

Princess Victoria, Fast B. C. Ferry, Ran the Tug Down.

Seven on Board Out of Fourteen Drowned, Among Them Being Dr. W. A. B. Hutton, Late Registrar of Manitoba Medical College—Survivors Say the Princess Swerved From Her Course From Heavy Incoming Tide.

Vancouver, B. C., July 23.—Saturday afternoon the Union Steamship tug Chehalis was cut in two by the steamer Princess Victoria, the fast ferry that runs daily between Vancouver, Victoria and Seattle.

The tug immediately sank and of the fourteen on board seven were drowned. The dead:

Dr. W. A. B. Hutton, late registrar of Manitoba Medical College, recently surgeon on board Anglican mission boat Columbia, plying up northern coast. Dr. Hutton was an expert chemist and had made a special study of oyster culture.

Mrs. Bryce, wife of the purser of the steamer Cassiar.

P. J. Chick, formerly purser, recently retired.

Charles Benwell, little son of J. J. O. Benwell of Benwell and Peart, wholesale wine merchants here.

Crawford A. White, deckhand.

Two Japanese firemen.

Among the saved were P. G. Shallcross, Capt. House, J. J. O. Benwell, Mr. Bryce, R. N. Rich and three of the crew.

The tug was passing through the Narrows at the entrance of the harbor, en route to Blundel Harbor, with a party interested in oyster beds at that point. The Princess Victoria left her dock one hour late, or the disaster would not have happened. She caught up on the Chehalis in about two minutes, the former going about seven knots and the Princess from eighteen to twenty.

There is no explanation as to how the tug was struck. Both vessels appeared to have sea room if they maintained their courses. Survivors of the Chehalis say the Princess swerved from heavy incoming tide. At any rate the tug was struck six feet from stern on port side and went to the bottom in an instant.

An order for the arrest of Capt. Griffith of the Princess Victoria has been despatched to the capital. Chick and Bryce had large interests in the oyster beds. Mr. Shallcross was organizing a company with a view to exploitation and organized the trip to look over the ground.

TRAIN GOES THROUGH BRIDGE.

Nelson, B. C., July 23.—The Great Northern express from Northport to this city, about 5 p. m. Saturday, crashed through the bridge at Beaver Canyon. The known dead are:

Judge W. B. Townsend, formerly of Rossland, right-of-way agent for the Great Northern Railway, residing in this city, with his wife and son-in-law.

W. B. Smith, Kaslo, bar proprietor on steamer Kaslo.

M. D. Mackinnon, purser, steamer Kaslo.

Seven others are reported more or less seriously injured.

A special train was sent from Rossland with doctors and nurses, and the whole party arrived here about two o'clock Sunday morning.

Two Burned to Death.

Hamilton, July 23.—James Call perished in a fire that broke out in his rooms at the rear of 70 South Wamut street, about 2 o'clock Sunday morning and Mrs. Annie Beach, who passed as his wife, died at the city hospital the same morning. J. Cuzner, from whom the couple rented the rooms, discovered the fire and he says that before turning in the alarm he notified the pair, who answered, but were apparently unable to escape. Neighbors tried to rescue them, but were overcome by smoke. Cuzner was painfully burned.

Farmer Trampled by Cows.

Brockville, July 23.—Milking between two cows, Herbert Laing, a farmer living near here, was thrown under the feet of one of the animals, by being kicked from his stool. CZAR'S DARING UKASES

Dissolves Parliament and Provides For Outbreak Safety.

Coming Storm May Prove It to Be a Case of "Whom the Gods Would Destroy They First Make Mad"—Measure Sets Russia Back to Where She Was Two Years Ago in the Full Grip of the Autocracy.

St. Petersburg, July 23.—Russia's first experiment in Parliamentary Government came to an ignominous end Saturday night with the promulgation of two imperial ukases, the first dissolving the present Parliament and providing for the convocation of its successor on March 5, 1907, more than six months hence, and the second proclaiming the capital of Russia and the surrounding provinces to be in a state of extraordinary security, which is only infinitesimally different from full martial law.

This measure of safety is to provide for the outbursts which undoubtedly will be provoked by this daring measure.

It is now but a step to dictatorship.

The text of the two ukases, both of which are addressed in the stereotyped form to the ruling Senate, follows:

Parliament Dissolved.

"According to paragraph 105 of the fundamental laws, we order the Imperial Parliament dissolved and fix the time for the convocation of the newly-elected Parliament for March 5, 1907.

"Regarding the time for the new election to the Imperial Parliament we will later issue special indications.

"The ruling Senate will not fail to take proper measures to place this into effect.

(Signed) "NICHOLAS,
"Peterhof, July 21."

"Extraordinary Security."

The text of the second ukase follows:

"In consideration of a report of the Council of Ministers presented to us regarding the necessity in the future for the preservation of order and public safety in the city and province of St. Petersburg, we consider it necessary to declare in the above city and province, instead of the state, of reinforced security which now prevails there, a state of extraordinary security. The prefect of the city and the governor of the province are intrusted with the rights thereto appertaining.

"The ruling Senate will not fail to take proper measure to place this into effect.

(Signed) "NICHOLAS,
"Peterhof, July 21."

Sets Russia Back.

With these pithy but momentous orders, which were promulgated at 3 o'clock yesterday morning, Emperor Nicholas, by a stroke of the pen, set Russia back to where she stood two years ago, in the full grip of autocracy and irresponsible Government wiping out, for six months at least the whole structure of Parliament, created at such cost.

There is but little doubt that the convocation of the new assembly will still further postpone this time, unless new Parliament promises to be more amenable than the present.

The delay in fixing the time for the new elections seems to indicate a decision to change the present basis of suffrage to perhaps a basis of universal suffrage, with which the advisers of the Emperor hope to swamp the educated Liberals, the Socialists and the workmen with the vast mass of peasantry.

The Coming Storm.

The only uncertainty is the coming storm—when and where it will break. The advocates of the "Mailed fist" believe that by dissolving Parliament and provoking a collision now they will find the revolutionary leaders not prepared for an uprising, as at Moscow, whereas further delay would give the revolutionists the time needed to organize and to continue corruption of the army.

There are no precedents in Russian history for the execution of an order of prorogation, but Monday probably will find the Tauride Palace in the possession of the military and the surrounding streets held by the Emperor's Guards.

The Constitutional Democratic caucus, which had been in session for several hours, adjourned before the news of the dissolution of Parliament was received, but the information already has reached the leaders of the party.

Appeal to Faithful.

An imperial manifesto, issued last night, which is regarded both as a threat and an appeal to the Emperor's millions of mujiks to join in suppressing the revolution under promises of land, summons the "faithful sons of Holy Russia." Many Liberals consider this a direct incitement of the "black hundreds."

In spite of the excitement, yesterday passed with comparative quiet in the capital, and street rioting only began with the advent of darkness. The collisions generally were on a small scale.

Depend on Army's Loyalty.

With the imperial ukase dissolving Parliament, the curtain rose upon possibly the last act in the great drama of the Russian revolution. The people and the Government now stand face to face, and upon the loyalty of the army depends the immediate issue.

During Saturday night additional troops were brought in and disposed of according to plans previously adopted.

The work of gathering in revolutionary agitators began immediately after the ukase placing St. Petersburg in "a state of extraordinary security," was promulgated and hundreds of arrests were made before daylight.

The powers conferred upon M. Vonderlaunitz, prefect of police, and M. Zinovieff, Governor of the province, are little short of those of petty dictators.

Ready For War.

The proletariat organizations have been preparing for months for just such provocation to declare open war. It is impossible to describe the consternation with which the Constitutional Democrats learned the news. Although it has been bruited for the past three days, the ukase was received by them in blank amazement.

After a hurried secret conference yesterday morning, it was decided, on account of the possibility of the meeting being broken up and the members arrested, that they go immediately to Finland and decide the future course to be pursued, and small groups left yesterday afternoon and evening by train. Whether word was given them to meet at Viborg or Helsingfors is not known, but it seems probable that Finland in future Russian history will become synonymous with "the tennis court" of the French revolution.

Even Count Heyden, the leader and other members of the right are understood to have departed. It is quite improbable, however, that Parliament as a body will attempt to formally set up its authority against that of the Government.

General Strike.

The Constitutional Democrats and intellectuals generally recognize that they have no weapon with which to fight the Government bayonets. The initiative, therefore, will naturally fall to the proletariats. This, the Social Democrats and the Group of Toil in Parliament all along have recognized and the most elaborate preparations have been made to repeal the tactics of the last fall and paralyze the country with a general strike.

But the plans at this time have been perfected, with much more deliberation and involve not only the paralysis of cities, telegraphs, railroads and all means of communication throughout the empire, but a complete strike of peasants in the country as well. They confidently believe the loyalty of the troops has been so shaken that the military supports of the Government will give way and when put to the test, the army will be divided against itself.

Last night the trains are filled with foreigners departing abroad.

Killings and Mutiny.

Tiflis, July 23.—Tartars Saturday destroyed the village of Kaladjsk. Thirty persons were killed.

Katuga, July 23.—Anti-Jewish disturbances broke out in the village of Spasdelensk Saturday. A mob beat Jews and plundered their houses. The troops fired a volley, killing two of the plunderers and wounding many others. Order was restored.

Sebastopol, July 23.—A meeting of 2,500 sailors from the warships here Saturday drew up economic demands for presentation to Admiral Skrydloff. Unless these demands are fulfilled the men say the whole of the Black Sea fleet will revolt.

PLEAD "NOT GUILTY."

Edmund Bridant and Mrs. Lillian Miller Remanded Till the 27th.

Toronto, July 23.—Mrs. Lillian Miller and Edmund Bridant—or, to call him by his correct name, Edmund Antoine—were arraigned before Magistrate Kingsford in the Police Court Saturday morning on the charge of causing the death of the latter's wife. They were charged with murder.

The woman was defended by T. C. Robinette, K. C., and R. S. Neville represented the man. A plea of not guilty was entered in both cases, and an adjournment made until the 27th.

After the court proceedings, Mrs. Miller, who was attended by her husband, broke down. In the presence of an officer they had a short talk.

The request of Mr. Neville that the prisoner be allowed to attend the funeral of his wife was refused by Magistrate Kingsford.

LYNCH LAW IN CANADA.

Wife Beater Swears Off After Getting a Ducking in the Lake.

Kingston, July 24.—For several weeks past there have been many cases of wife-beating reported, and last week there were no less than five cases made public.

One of the brutal husbands, James Rankin, is in the County Jail awaiting trial, and on Saturday night another of the offenders was given a taste of punishment which he will not soon forget. This man, a Scotch emigrant named Patterson, had administered a terrific beating to his wife, and a number of citizens organized themselves into a tribunal, to give him a quick trial and speedy punishment.

A party of six well-known citizens seized Patterson, who, on learning their intention, admitted his guilt and prayed for mercy. He was carried by the citizens to the nearest waterfront, where at the end of a long rope, he was thrown into deep water and almost drowned.

When he was hauled out again he took a solemn oath never again to raise his hand against a woman. Similar offenders will in future be treated in a like manner.

Short Paragraphs Which Contain Meaty Wire News.

Basil Robins, a farm hand, near Thamesville, was killed on the G. T. R. track. He was the son of an English lawyer. Before leaving the house he destroyed all his letters, but it is thought his death was accidental.

Walter Claxton, aged 25, is dead from heat prostration at Sarnia, while working at the Sarnia Bay Mills Salt Block Co. He is survived by a widow and a small child.

The electric storm did considerable damage at the Village of Battersea on Saturday. One lightning flash struck Jos. Doucet's carpenter shop. Herbert Doucet was seriously injured. It was fully an hour and a half before he recovered consciousness. Giles Stoness, driver of the Battersea stage, and Joe Doucet were badly stunned.

William Morgan, aged 17, an English immigrant, underwent an operation in the Kingston Hospital, and had come out of the anaesthetic when he was seized with heart failure and died.

Rev. Dr. Snodgrass is Dead.

London, July 24.—(C. A. P.)—The death is announced of Rev. Dr. Snodgrass of Canonbie parish, Dumfrieshire, aged 79. For a quarter of a century the deceased took an active part in Canadian Presbyterianism. He went as a missionary of the Church of Scotland to Prince Edward Island in 1852; was inducted minister of St. Paul's, Montreal, in 1856, and installed principal and primarius professor of divinity at Queen's, Kingston, in 1864. He was one of four moderators to sign the solemn deed of union of the Presbyterian churches in Canada in Montreal in 1875. He returned to Scotland in 1877.

An Era Of Repression.

Russia Enters Upon New Stage In Great Fight For Liberty.

Czar's Coup Unites Enemies, and Liberal and Revolutionary Alike Will Support the Most Desperate Measures—Thousands of Arrests Are Made in The Russian Capital—Council of the Empire Will Be Prorogued.

St. Petersburg, July 24.—The Council of Ministers has recommended the Emperor to issue a ukase proroguing the Council of the Empire, or upper House of Parliament.

The Government's midnight coup d'etat is already having the effect of uniting all the discordant elements of the Opposition, and it requires little perspicacity to see that an era of repression and all which it entails will drive Liberal and Revolutionary alike to support the most desperate measures. It is already clear that resistance will be made.

Wholesale Arrests.

A correspondent of the Associated Press made a tour of the city early yesterday morning. At every block he encountered reinforced patrols, and met half a dozen squads of gendarmes with drawn swords, escorting little bands of arrested persons to prison. During the night over a thousand arrests of workmen, agitators and revolutionary suspects were made. The railroads leading out of the city have been placed under martial law, and the gendarmes search the passengers and baggage on all trains for arms and political documents. Systematic military perquisitions for political agitators, and especially members of the proletariat organizations are in full swing.

Not only the Tauride Palace, but the gates of the park leading to it, are closed, and the surrounding streets are alive with gendarmes and secret police. With the regular garrison, there are now more than 60,000 troops massed in the city.

End Freedom TWO ... ... jdAenn

Upon all the dead walls are posted proclamations of the prefect of police prohibiting meetings, public or private, without permission; the distribution of proclamations, the raising of flags and singing in the streets.

Gagging the Press.

The prefect of police placed officers in the newspaper offices Sunday night to see that they did not transgress the limits of the law, under threat of confiscation of their issues. Nevertheless, the edition of The Rech was seized soon after it left the press.

From every direction come reports that an era of repression has been inaugurated, including the confiscation of Radical newspapers and wholesale arrests of political and revolutionary suspects.

May Arrest the Members.

The great news of the day is the adoption of an address to the people by the deputies to Parliament who assembled at Viborg, the language of which affords pretext enough for the Government to lodge its authors in the fortress if it feels strong enough. A rumor was spread last night that this coarse had been decided upon.

A large crowd gathered at the Finland station last night, where the deputies were expected to arrive, but only a few appeared, and these were not molested and neither was there a popular demonstration.

Will Suppress Appeal.

Copies of the appeal to the people are in the hands of all the St. Petersburg newspapers, but it will scarcely be printed to-day for the reason that a detachment of police is posted at the door of every newspaper printing office in the city with orders not to permit any papers to leave the building until authorized by the censor.

Police last night were posted at the lodgings of M. Sedelnikoff and M. Ilyn awaiting the return of those revolutionary delegates who already have involved themselves by seditious acts since the dissolution of Parliament.

New Council.

A few days many witness the constitution of a "provisional Government' composed of an enlarged council of Ministers with the inclusion of conservative members of the dispersed lower House of Parliament, councillors of the Empire and men influential in the life of the Empire who can be induced to accept Ministries without portfolios and contribute their authority and advice to the hard pressed Government. This was the subject of deliberation at a meeting of the Cabinet Sunday night and again last evening.

Jews in State of Panic.

Odessa, July 24.—The Jews here are in a state of panic, fearing an anti-Jewish outbreak as the result of the killing of a drunken Cossack, who recently wandered through the Jewish quarter, brandishing his sabre and shouting "Death to the Jews."

Sage Left $100,000,000.

New York, July 24.—The funeral of Russell Sage will be held this afternoon at 4 o'clock. The burial will be in Oakwood Cemetery, Troy. Dr. Carl Schmick, the local physician, attending Mr. Sage says that, going by what he heard from Mr. Sage on various occasions, he felt positive that Mr. Sage had left everything in his wife's control. "Mr. Sage was undoubtedly the wealthiest man on the street. His fortune can be conservatively estimated at from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000," said Henry Clews yesterday.

British Steamer Sinks Swede.

Southampton, Eng., July 24.—The British steamer Roman, from Antwerp for Montreal, put in here yesterday and reported having been in collision with the Swedish steamer Talls, which sank. The Roman rescued the passengers and crew of the Talls and brought them to this port.

Captain Arrested.

Vancouver, July 24.—Capt. Griffin, in charge of the Princess Victoria at the time of the collision with the tug Chehalis, has been arrested on a charge of manslaughter and released on bail. The Princess Victoria later sailed for Victoria and Seattle in command of Capt Hickey.

Attempted Murder.

Montreal, July 24.—Two minutes before the C. P. R. Quebec train passed out Sunday night, the police found Adelard Turcot lying unconscious on the track, and drew him aside just in the nick of time. Turcot's pockets were turned inside out. Robbery and attempted murder is the only explanation. Turcot himself can throw no light on it, as he remembers nothing.

Gives Himself Up.

Orangeville, July 24.—A. C. Douglas, druggist, has returned. He is charged with being implicated in the death of Miss Wells, who died after a criminal operation. He came back from Niagara Falls. Magistrate Pattullo released him on $4,000 bail.

Irish Bill Passes.

London, July 24.—The House of Commons at an early hour this morning passed to its third reading the Irish laborers' cottage bill, by a vote of 195 to 19. The figures were received with laughter.

Woman's Rights in Britain

Writing in a British review Lady Agnes Grove throws light upon the motive for the women suffrage propaganda in the old country. The ordinary press despatches have given us only the details of the public disturbances of the "suffragettes," as they are called. Their swarming in the office of the Prime Minister, their mobbing of his colleagues and their quest for martyrdom in police courts and jails. This phase of the matter has helped to make the whole thing seem ridiculous.

Lady Agnes Grove, on the other hand, repudiates this hysterical method, but she shows cause for agitation for the civil and political enfranchisement of the women of England. These women, she says, are suffering from many legal disabilities. The laws as to their property and personal and other rights are chaotic and irrational. The laws of contract are unfair to married women, the criminal laws and the corporation laws create discriminations against them, and the same is true of the laws relating to inheritance lunacy, slander and libel. Even in the matter of court procedure and litigation they are placed at a disadvantage.

What makes matters worse, Lady Agnes continues, is that instead of progress toward fairness and legal equality there has been actual retrogression. The late government, she says, passed four Acts which resulted in four or five disfranchisements and disqualifications for women. These related to local government and education, spheres in which women had done excellent work.

There is now before Parliament a bill which is designed to enable electors to place women on education boards and secure their services in other matters of local administration and relief, such as the housing of the poor, the inspection and regulation of public lodging-houses, the management of the female wings of lunatic asylums, the enforcement of child labor laws, the supervision of industrial schools, the prevention and punishment of cruelty to minors, the supervision of baby farms and homes for women, of police court cells and waiting-rooms for women, and so on.

Lady Agnes asks if the trite phrase as to "woman's sphere" should debar women from participating in works of this class. It is quite plain that it should not, and Lady Agnes asks thinking women to rouse themselves and make things uncomfortable for the ministers and legislators until they decide to yield and enact the bill now pending, which stops far short of full equality of rights.

The discussion, as the Ottawa Journal points out, reveals the marvellous paternalism of British Government. Services similar to those which some women in England insist should be placed in their hands are performed in Canada, under the several Canadian governments without any perceptible tendency to the establishment of a shricking sisterhood. Moreover, spinsters and widows who are property-holders have the right to vote in municipal elections in Ontario and on election days most of them celebrate the enjoyment of their privilege by staying at home.

Bay of Quinte Boys.

Belleville and the Bay of Quinte district have reason to be proud of her boys.

Not long ago the Hon. Lewis Wallbridge occupied the important position of Chief Justice of Manitoba. New, another Bay Quinte boy has been elevated to that position, in the person of H. M. Howell, Esq., K. C., a native of the County of Prince Edward and until his removal to Manitoba, a resident of this city, where he commenced the study of the law. The Intelligencer congratulates him upon having attained the high and honorable position of Chief Justice. Knighthood no doubt will follow.

Not less gratifying is it to know that another of Belleville's sons has been raised to the Bench in the person of F. H. Phippen, Esq., K. C., son of John Phippen, Esq., an old and respected citizen. Young Phippen being a Conservative and partner of the Messrs. Tuppen in Winnipeg, it may be taken for granted that merit and legal attainment are the qualifications which led to his appointment.

Most heartily do we congratulate the parents on the proud distinction bestowed upon the son.

ANOTHER WIRELESS MESSAGE

A wireless message from Windsor Castle relates how the Belleville delegates, in response to a command from the King, went there to give a concert, His Majesty having erroneously arrived at the conclusion that everybody in Belleville belonged to the Kilties Band. The delegates were rather non-plussed at first when they received the command, but they rose to the occasion all right. The curtain rose, and the announcement was made that the first number would be a chorus, "The Maple Leaf Forever." The delegates would sing it.

"Surely not forever," said the King. "even three ex-members of the Belleville City Council would hardly have wind enough to sing forever!"

The Prince of Wales explained that that was simply the title of the song.

The chorus made a great hit, the King beating time with his sceptre and waving his crown hilariously during the chorus.

Next was a solo by Col. Ponton, "The Laird O' Cockpen," which caused the King to remark that anything Scotch, especially with soda in it, appealed to him strongly.

By way of variety, the Prince of Wales then obliged with a ballad, "Everybody Works but Father."

Ex-Mayor Johnson was next, and he sang, by request, "Kathleen Mavourneen." At the conclusion of the song the Princess Patricia of Connaught presented Mr. Johnson with a bouquet.

It was now up to ex-Mayor Graham, and in his own inimitable way that gentleman arose and remarked that, as nature had not endowed him with singing ability, he proposed to deliver a short monologue on prohibition.

There was a brief and hurried consultation between ex-Mayor Johnson and Col Ponton, and then the two voices, bass and tenor respectively, burst out with "God Save the King."

The concert was over.

This old world is getting swifter every day. No one ever thought the day would come when people might get arrested for trespassing in the air, but such cases may be common before long. Anyhow, London aeronauts are now agitated over the question of the ownership of the air, and are discussing the ethics of trespassing as applied to the position of a balloon when it is 5,000 feet above private property, though it is in strict accordance with the law, is likely to give much trouble. Aeronauts are always ready to compensate owners for damage to property caused by descending. An interesting point involves the liability of insurance companies for mishaps of this nature. So far, complaints have been few, but a general insurance company is now issuing policies against damages done by balloons. The first claim was paid to-day for damage done to a marrow frame, caused by ballast thrown out of a balloon when close to the ground, breaking the glass.

The developments resulting from the investigations into the affairs of Life companies in the United States have had their effect upon Life assurance in that country. The annual report of the New York State insurance department, shows that the companies doing business in New York State issued 83,386 less policies in 1905 than in 1904, the amount of insurance written last year showing a decrease of $151,724,834, and that 76,934 more policies terminated in 1905 than in 1904, and $98,518,756 more insurance. Fortunately in Canada, while minor irregularities have occured in some of the companies, nothing has transpired so far to show that the policy-holders suffered from manipulations of funds.

Some British army contractors have been heavily fined for supplying tainted and adulterated food for the use of the troops. The persistence with which such offences are followed up and punished in Britain should be a healthy deterrent to dishonest contractors.—Globe.

So it will be in any part of the world but Canada, under Liberal rule When such frauds occur in Canada, a Liberal parliamentary committee will prevent a full investigation, as was done in South Africa biscuit frauds. The punishment most likely to follow would be an appointment to some lucrative office.

"A Charles St. Resident" writes:—"Now that the Charles street sewer is being extended from Victoria avenue to Pine street, would it not be well to put the connections from the sewer to the separate lots in at the same time, and have the work all done on the street at once, so as to avoid the breaking up of the street for the next seven or eight years?"

• • •

The above suggestion seems to be so wise and timely that the wonder is it was not resolved upon without argument or discussion. By making the extension asked for the property-owners will be put to no more expense, and the city will, in years to come, be saved considerable in the way of repairs. But perhaps our civic powers that be like to be digging up our thoroughfares. It would certainly appear so, sometimes.

Port Hope and Cobourg Talking Money.

Port Hope Guide: Cobourg wants to play our ball team for money. Just think of it, for "money," now the first think you know the Cobourg Post will be accusing the management for being extravagant. But then the proposition that Cobourg makes is a rather queer one. They offer to bet $50 to $40 that they can defeat Port Hope in Cobourg on condition that Port Hope grants the same bet for the return game. Port Hope wishes to play for a hundred a side home and home games, and if a third one was necessary to play it on neutral grounds. Cobourg, however, will not agree to this. The local management are considering the proposition and as this is the first time that Cobourg has ever hinted at squandering a dollar, it will in all probability be taken up.

And He Died Worth A Hundred Millions!

While many of the stories that are told of Mr. Sage's miserly habits and eccentricities are fictitious, says an exchange, none of them are exaggerations. It would be almost impossible for anyone to imagine a man more economical and stingy than he. Although his income is reckoned at $5,000 a day, at least, and some people think it is twice that amount, he has lived at the rate of $5,000 a year or less, and his personal expenses have not been $100 a year. That is a very liberal estimate. He has two suits of clothes, one for weekdays and the other for Sunday, and he has worn them as long as anybody can remember. He has not bought a new overcoat for fifteen or twenty years, and his hat is quite as old as that, if not older. A few years ago he sent for a gentleman who had done him a favor, and in a confidential way said that he was going to reward him with a "tip" that he could work for a profit. Then, to the man's astonishment, Mr. Sage gave him the address of a store on Seventh avenue, where he could get shoes for $2 a pair.

To save time the Western Union Telegraph Company serves a free lunch to its operators, and Mr. Sage appeared every day at a certain hour. A seat was kept for him at a certain table up to the last day he came down town. He never paid fare on the elevated railroad, because he was a director, and the ticket-takers had instructions to let him go by without paying. He invariably helped himself to newspapers from the stand at Fiftieth St. in the morning when on his way down town, and did the same at Rector St. when he was going home in the afternoon. He has stolen his newspapers for a generation in the same way, of the same men, and they never dared say a word about it. He has always compelled the bootblacks on the elevated stations to shine his shoes for nothing. At first, years ago, they used to remonstrate. He would climb into one of the chairs and wait until they served him. If they demanded pay he would threaten to have them put off the platform.

The omnibus drivers and cabmen on Fifth avenue point out a crack across the top pane of glass in one of his parlor windows which, they say, has been there for 21 years. The story goes that Mrs. Sage negotiated with a glazier to replace it with a whole pane for $12. Mr. Sage would not pay more than $10. The glazier would not yield, and the deadlock has continued for almost a quarter of a century.

Causes of Insomnia.

KING'S PHYSICIAN SAYS TERROR AND NERVOUSNESS ARE RESPONSIBLE.

London, July 23.—King Edward's Physician-in-Ordinary, Sir William Broadbent, explains in a medical magazine the causes of insomnia. As Sir William is quite an authority on nervous affections, and as insomnia is a common distress, his opinions are of value.

There are, says Sir William, good sleepers and bad sleepers; light sleepers, disturbed by the least light or sound; heavy sleepers, who rest calmly through a thunderstorm. Some fortunate persons fall asleep almost as soon as the head rests on the pillow every night; others less fortunate must patiently woo sleep.

The quality of sleep also varies. The neurasthenic wakes tired after a long night's rest, the after-dinner sleep of undue repletion is unrefreshing and sometimes stupefying. On the other hand, a brief nap may dismiss at once the fatigue and languor of a busy man.

The greatest foe of sleep is, perhaps, terror; suspension and anxiety come next.

When cold feet interfere with sleep, it is not merely through the feeling of cold as such, but by an influence on the general and cerebral circulation. Coldness of the feet, indeed, is often a concomitant of sleeplessness rather than its cause.

When the feet are cold after hard brain work the blood seems to be positively shut off from the feet. A hot bottle is then often of no use, and the best way of warming the feet with a view to procuring sleep is to stand in cold water and then rub the feet dry with a rough towel.

The Barnum & Bailey circus is offering a new spectacle this season. It is entitled "Peace," and is founded upon the closing incidents of the Russo-Japanese war in Manchuria. Scores of horses, elephants, camels and other led animals and hundreds of brilliantly-costumed men, women and children are utilized in this big military and allegorical display. The final tableau shows Columbia joining the hands of the warring nations, under the prompting of the President of the United States.

DANDRUFF DON'T WASH OUT.

The Germ That Causes It Has to be Destroyed, to Cure Dandruff.

Many a woman spends an hour twice a week scouring her scalp, thinking that by scrubbing off the scurf she will cure the dandruff. Two hours a week, at the age of 40 years, she has spent 260 days of 12 hours each, or two-thirds of a year of her life in that vain hope; vain because you can't cure dandruff without killing the dandruff germ, and the only hair preparation on earth that will do that is Newbro's "Herpicide"—also a delightful hair dressing, and thorough antiseptic against all contagion from use of other's hair brushes. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

INNOVATION IN RAILROADING.

TRANSFORMING TRUNK LINE STEAM ROAD INTO AN ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

Railroad men and electricians, not only in the United States, but also throughout Canada, are intensely interested in the outcome of the adoption of electricity in place of steam on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

Thirty-five locomotives are being built by the Westinghouse Company, and it is probable that the first single-phase electric train will be run between New York and Stamford, Connecticut, before the summer is over.

The first installation of apparatus will have a capacity of 12,000 horse-power, consisting of Westinghouse-Parsons steam turbines and Westinghouse alternating current single-phase generators.

The progress of the work is being so carefully watched, not only because of the fact that the electric equipment which is being installed by the Westinghouse Company is a new departure from electrical propulsion already in vogue, but it also marks another step in the conversion of steam railroads into electric railways.

Here in Canada, the Grand Trunk Railway has decided upon electricity as the motive power in the St. Clair tunnel at Sarnia. The Canadian Westinghouse Company has the contract for the electrification of this part of the line, and will instal the same type of apparatus, etc., for the Grand Trunk as the Westinghouse Company are for the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad in the United States.

Notice.—Life insurance companies, will reduce the rate 33 per cent. to all who agree to use Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea. A wise measure. Tea or Tablets, 35 cents. D. M. Waters.

Barnum & Bailey's supreme "thriller" this year is the Auto-Bolide, which has been introduced to this country under the name of "The Dip of Death." It presents a young and pretty American girl, who takes a wild plunge into space in an automobile and finally lands on a runway, which carried the auto safely to the hippodrome track. This startling act is said to be the real circus sensation of the year.

YELLOWSTONE PARK.

This is the grand tourist resort of the people and one of the most beautiful parts of the American Continent. Only by a trip to this region can the tourist comprehend the endless variety and stupendous grandeur of the features embraced in this tract of country.

Very low round-trip rates to this resort have been put in effect this summer by the Union Pacific and its connections.

For full information in regard to rates, and Yellowstone Park folder, address

F. B. CHOATE, G. A., 11 Fort St., Detroit, Mich.

The Grunatho Sisters, who are featured among the acrobats with the Barnum & Bailey circus this season, comprise seven young women from Germany. They are said to perform in long skirts all the feats accomplished by the cleverest male acrobats, with many others that are original with themselves. One New York newspaper calls them the "best-dressed acrobatic company ever seen in the United States."

A MAJESTIC BAND.

The most gorgeously uniformed band in the British military service is that of the 2nd Life Guards. This is the band that will this year play at the Canadian National Exhibition. Every man is of imposing stature and with plumed helmet and steel breastplate presents a majestic appearance.

Sometimes a young man is turned down when he really should be turned up and spanked.

'Behold the Western sky,
Where people live but never die.'
The reason for this is plain to see,
They all take Rocky Mountain Tea.
—D. M. Waters.

While it may be just and right that a man should be humiliated, no right feeling man will rejoice at it.

Bright eyes are an infallible index to youth, windows from which Cupid shoots his arrows. Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea makes bright eyes, rosy cheeks. Tea or Tablets, 35 cents. —D. M. Waters.

Every new like or dislike you form only adds additional discomfort to yourself.

Even the milk of human kindness may contain a few germs.

Bad men are apt to make themselves scarce. Good men are already scarce.

Sunlight Soap is better than other soaps, but is best when used in the Sunlight way. Buy Sunlight Soap and follow directions.

YOUR MIRROR.

Make a Friend of It, and It Will Teach You Many Things.

Do you know how to look at yourself in the looking glass? Not one woman in a thousand looks into her mirror in the right way.

The most important thing about a mirror is to have it where the light will fall upon it. Most mirrors are too high and they are too obscure.

Place the dresser where the light will fall upon it. If possible let the light fall from both sides full upon the glass. If this is out of the question, do the next best thing. Let it fall upon one side. Now make arrangements to light the other side of the glass.

At each side of the dresser there may be fastened stout little brackets, and upon these can be set a good sized candle. This will give light enough for dressing oneself, and the candles will burn a long time.

The woman who makes a friend of her looking glass will find that she learns something every day. For one thing, it will show her the direction and the fault of her figure. If she is inclined to be large below the belt line she will soon know it, or if her hips are too big or her figure too flat it will not escape her eye.

The woman who is going into the matter thoroughly will arrange her mirror so that the full light falls upon it—that is, the full length mirror. Then she will want to make full preparations to see her back. You cannot be a beauty unless your back is well dressed.

UNCOOKED EGGS.

They Are of Value as Food For Growing Children.

An Austrian physician has called attention to the value of uncooked eggs as food for growing children. Of all the substances found in the animal organism albumen seems to be the one most directly concerned with the phenomena of growth and development. Its value as a food is correspondingly great and is not sufficiently appreciated. In the artificial feeding of children this should be borne in mind. The white of the raw egg is the most available form in which we can find albumen, and it should be used in the preparation of most of the foods for children. After the usual nursing period it is well to add raw eggs to the milk regularly taken by the child. Free albumen is one of the most easily digested substances and is rapidly made use of by the muscle cells. It is a valuable food for adults as well as for infants and should be freely given in all debilitated conditions, whether from disease, exhaustion or old age.

TOILET TIPS.

A good bleach for the skin is a pinch of boracic acid in the water in which you bathe.

A soft linen cloth which is employed for no other purpose is better to use when bathing the eyes than a sponge.

Massage with this cream for enlarged pores: One ounce of white wax, one ounce spermaceti, one ounce almond oil, one dram violet extract.

Tincture of myrrh is a breath sweetener, and only a few drops in a half glass of water—just enough to make a milky lotion—are needed.

A benzoin bath is excellent to contract the pores. This is made by taking a big basin of warm water and dropping a little benzoin into it. There should be just enough to make the water milky.

It is not how much of the tonic is put on the hair, but how much is rubbed into the scalp that counts. Recipe: Two ounces of castor oil, four ounces of alcohol, five or six drops of oil of rose. Put on every night.

Chinese Cooks Economical.

One advantage in having a Chinese cook is that he does the marketing and does it admirably. His calculations are exact. He wants nothing left over. When I saw a little cold fish in the pantry one day I was reproached gently (not in the least impertinently) because I had said there would be eight persons for dinner when there proved to be only six. Everything is closely used up, and bills are cut nearly in two. Of course, part of this is owing to the fact that one Chinese boy takes the place of two maids, is a small eater and cares only for the simplest food. He does not eat dainties or luxuries and almost no meat. Rice and vegetables are largely the sum of his diet. Another point with the Chinese is their exactness in money matters. They pay no bills that they do not understand. This makes for the interest of the employer, who must also remember that the exactness applies to both sides. Chinamen are very particular about being paid promptly.—Lydia Avery Coonley Ward in Good Housekeeping.

Uses For Old Stockings.

Don't throw away your old stockings. They may be past wearing as such, but there are several good uses to which they may be put. If the legs are in good condition and the feet worn out, cut off the latter and the body of the stocking makes a fine cleaning rag. For polishing brasses, candlesticks, door knobs and the like they will be found excellent. An old stocking also makes a good rag for rubbing up a shine on your shoes, and for wiping woodwork with oil it is about as good as flannel. One woman who does her own work always slips an old and footless pair of stockings over her arms when housecleaning in the cold weather and keeps one with the foot in to put over her hand when she has to wipe the stove. Another woman of original ideas puts on a pair of extra stocking legs on a very cold day, thus gaining the required warmth without anything burdensome on the feet.

INTERIOR DECORATING

That's Our Business

And we keep an experienced staff of workmen busy the year round.

True we do outside painting also, but we give preference to decorating.

We have been so busy with our interior work this year that we have found it impossible to do much exterior work.

The service we render our customers is par excellent—better far than is found elsewhere—we have the materials and the methods—have the ideas and the designs. This is why we have so much decorative work continually ahead of us.

Most people understand that we do better work and use better materials than is usually used by painters. This is another reason for our everlasting busy-ness.

We use white lead in all our work absolutely better than any other lead that can be found and superior to anything carried on sale in Belleville—and we can prove it. Work with this lead will wear longer by 40 per cent and look as much better.

SAFETY.

Never in all the history of transportation has travel been safer than it is to-day. Seated in perfect comfort in any of the mile-a-minute trains of the Lake Shore Railway you are in less danger by far than was your grandfather in the lumbering six-mile-an-hour stage of a half or three-quarters of a century ago. Trains over this line are protected and guarded in a way that is but little short of marvellous. Every device that skill or money can provide is used without regard to the expense and in spite of the high speed—the fastest in the world—you are as safe here as in your own home. Combined with safety and high speed are luxurious comfort and punctuality, all combined to make a service unequaled the world over. See that your ticket reads "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for full information to J. W. Daly, Chief Ass't G. P. A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G. P. A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. KNOW HIM?

(Cleveland Leader.)

I know a nice young fellow — one whom everybody knows—
Of whom I've never heard he doesn't settle what he owes;
He's always where the crowd is; you can meet him anywhere;
Good-fellowship's his motto, and he wears a jolly air.
But somehow, when a check's to pay —of course it's not a crime—
He reaches for his coin, but never gets out in time.

You meet him at the bar, sometimes, when no one notes or thinks
Which one it was that ordered up that second round of drinks;
The barkeep waits suggestively, and polishes the bar;
All start to pay at once—of course, you know how such things are.
This man says loudly, "That's on me!" His efforts are sublime.
To reach his money — but he never gets it out in time!

The waiter's check at dinner lies unnoticed till he sees
The other fellow take it — then his grief you can't appease!
Ride with him on the street car, and abstractedly he stares
About when the conductor comes along to take the fares;
The other fellow pays—and then he wildly waves his dime—
But I wonder why it is he never gets it out in time?

Thirteen hours is now the record for waltzing in France, and belongs to an Italian. Ten competitors, including several energetic children, started dancing in Paris recently at 1 a.m. At 5 the last child had dropped down from exhaustion and was put, none too soon, to bed. At noon, of two competitors remaining, one gave up—and then there was one. He waltzed on for two hours longer, but his legs sank beneath him—and there were none. He had danced six women nearly to death during his performance.

Earthquakes.

No prediction can be made safely as to future earthquakes in any particular region. If any conjecture is warranted, it is merely that regions which are known to have contracted the earthquake habit are, on the whole, more likely to quake in the future than are regions which have long been free from seismic disturbances. No part of the continent seems less likely to be shaken than the Mississippi basin. Yet there were disastrous earthquakes about the mouth of the Ohio river in 1811-13. Regions covered with thick layers of clay, sand, gravel, glacial drift, etc., like much of the basin of the upper Mississippi, are less likely to suffer severely than those where solid rock comes to the surface, for the loose material acts as a cushion to deaden the vibrations which come to the surface from the solid rock below.—The World Today.

Wore Out His Finger.

There was a brakeman on the Colorado Midland railroad who years ago lost his index finger on his right hand. One day a lady passenger who had been much interested in the wonderful works of nature the brakeman had pointed out to her along the road noticed the stub finger. When the conductor came through the car she said to him:

"Excuse me, sir, but can you tell me how the brakeman lost his forefinger? He seems to be such an accommodating fellow."

"Yes, mum, that's just it. He is so accommodating that he wore that finger off pointing out the scenery along the line," said the conductor.

"She talked on and on about things that didn't amount to anything and were all disconnected. I endured it as well as I could, but it does seem sometimes as if she was wandering in her mind."

"Well, there's one thing," said Mr. Lane grimly, "you needn't ever worry about her going far if that's where she's wandering."—Youth's Companion.

But in the small tribunals the salaries are as follows: Judge, 3,000 francs ($600); paid substitute, 1,500 francs ($300); substitute (juge suppleant), nothing.

WOMAN'S WORLD

MISS JOSEPHINE FOORD.

A Pottery Expert Who Is Working Among the Pueblo Indians.

Miss Josephine Foord of New York, whom Indian Commissioner Leupp appointed to go to New Mexico and organize the work of pottery making among the Pueblo Indians, to preserve their work in its native excellence and to make it a self supporting industry, is an expert in the business and has had considerable experience among the Pueblos.

It was some six years ago that this pottery work was first begun as a private enterprise. Miss Foord, who is a practical potter, having taken up the study of the art for her own pleasure, was then asked by a number of philanthropic people interested in the Indian pottery and its makers if she would not go down to New Mexico and see what help could be given the native potters to make the best of their work. Having first studied the practical part of making kilns and everything it would be necessary to know in a country with no experienced builders, she went. With her own money and that of the people who had interested her in the work she built a large kiln and started in to make the pottery marketable.

MISS JOSEPHINE FOORD.

As made by the native workers, it was seldom sufficiently baked—it lacked strength, and it was unglazed. From experiments with the paints and clays and glazes Miss Foord found that the pottery would take an inside glaze where it was not painted and that the clay with the paints would stand a thorough firing. This made the pottery more serviceable for use, strong enough to admit of transportation and at the same time the native effectiveness was retained. But life in New Mexico is hard for eastern people outside the large towns. It is difficult to obtain nourishing foods, and after a year Miss Foord was obliged to come away to regain her health.

But she believed in the work sufficiently to be willing to undertake it again when she was sent for by Commissioner Jones after a long rest. Again she went down, organized the work and remained until it was found that nothing more could be done at that end of the line. The Indians were doing their work, the kiln was firing it properly, but there was not a sufficient market. Again the potter missionary returned, bringing with her as much of the pottery as possible, and for the next two years she traveled at her own expense, telling of the work and finding places where the pottery may be put on sale.

Now Miss Foord is again hard at work among the Indians, and she is confident that she will succeed in the task assigned to her by the government.—New York Times.

Mending Laces.

Lace mending has always been one of the bugaboos of the mending basket. But valenciennes lace can be mended without betraying the fact if the torn mesh is filled in with the lace stitches used in doing the finer sort of renaissance. The mesh may be copied exactly. For lace that is badly torn the only satisfactory way is to cut the torn place entirely away and match the design where it unites again, perhaps appliqueing a separate motif on to the dividing line—a motif cut from one of the torn bits you've cut away. Smooth every little thread, or group of threads, out and wind them deftly with fine cotton. Heavy laces are always easier to mend than light ones, but light ones can be treated the same way if the mesh is cut in a straight line and a fine thread binds the two pieces together.

Aching Feet.

Many women suffer from aching feet. This is due to a congestion of the blood vessels and need not necessarily be attributed to tight shoes. The only cure for tired feet is rest. Take advantage of every opportunity to put the feet upon a chair or cushion in order that you may get the blood out of them. If you are employed during the day make it a point to take your shoes off the instant you come home. Do not spend the evening wearing the same shoes you have had on since 7 or 8 o'clock in the morning. Put on a comfortable pair of house slippers and sit back at ease in a chair, with your feet on a hassock or pile of cushions. Before retiring bathe the feet in hot water to draw out the inflammation and wrap them in cloths dipped in witch hazel.

Engagement Rings.

An engagement ring should never be regarded as a woman's property till the marriage service has been read. There may be urgent reasons for breaking engagements to marry, and the ring should then be returned to the giver. Should he ask that it be kept as a pledge of friendship, it can be done without offending good taste very much, but such a thing rarely happens. The ring is a money investment to a young man; and, besides, there are other girls in the world, says Home Chat. Usually men have the good sense to make no fuss over a woman's greediness, but an occasional man wants not only his ring, but all other presents he has given returned, and the law says he has a right to them whenever the law is asked to settle the question.

Cracked Statues.

Antique figures and busts in marble and porcelain show little cracks on the surface, which in time becomes filled with dust till the figures have the appearance of being veined with tiny black streaks. To remove these prepare a bath consisting of nitric acid and water in the proportion of one part of acid to five parts of water. If the article to be cleaned is small it may simply be left to soak in the bath for a short time, when the cleansing will be done and rinsing in cold water will complete the operation. The article should be put to dry where dust cannot get upon it.

The Middle Aged Back.

There is a thing known as the middle aged back. The neck goes forward, the back rounds and a wad of fat gathers along the shoulder blades, spoiling the outlines and making one look—well, middle aged. There are certain physical tricks, mannerisms, that belong especially to youth. There are others that belong especially to age. This is one of them. The remedy is simple. Imitate the young figure. Throw your shoulders back, hold your neck straight up—not out and then up—and have your gowns made to accentuate the effects you want to cultivate.

Things Beautiful and Refining.

Whatever is beautiful is refining. Whether in nature or in art, the presence of the beautiful softens and purifies. But let no young woman fall into the blunder of supposing that only that which is expensive can be beautiful. It is labor, care, skill, an artistic eye and a refined taste that beautify. Whether in home or in dress, in speech or in manners, money is not the main thing which provides the beautiful. The dawdy apparel of many a slattern has cost more money by far than the neat and beautiful garb of her indigent but orderly neighbor.

Laundry Starch.

Laundry starch is the despair of many housewives, who wonder why the home washed shirts and collars can never have the required stiffness and gloss. Try mixing an ounce of white wax with two ounces of spermaceti, melting them together by gentle heat. Then when you have made your regular starch add to it a lump of mixed wax and spermaceti about the size of a walnut (if you have a large amount of starch) and let this melt in the hot starch; mix in thoroughly. The result will be stiffer starch and a high gloss.

The Refrigerator.

The refrigerator should be looked over often, and food that will not be used again should be removed at once. It should be cleaned thoroughly at least once a week with hot water and soda and then clear cold water, wiped perfectly dry and left open often to the air before replacing ice or food. All food placed in the refrigerator should be covered, as one food is liable to counteract the flavor of another, as sliced cucumbers in the same compartment with butter spoils the butter.

Camphor Ice.

Camphor ice which is made with olive oil is an old, tried remedy for rough hands and is very easily made. Take three drams of camphor, three of white beeswax and three of spermaceti; add two ounces of sweet olive oil. Put the mixture into an earthen jar, set in a saucepan of boiling water and let it melt into a smooth mass. It will be white and almost translucent when cold. While it is in a liquid form pour into little jars.

Burlaped Walls.

There is this advantage to burlap as a wall covering: It may be recolored when it fades without removal from the walls. Either a dull or glazed finish may be given it. The first cost of burlap far exceeds that of paper of the same general effect, but its wearing qualities make it less expensive in the end.

To Brighten a Dull Fire.

Instead of hurrying a slow fire by pouring on kerosene, which is a very dangerous remedy, try sprinkling over it bits of grease or pieces of fat pork, and you will have a bright fire in a few minutes and with no danger of explosions.

A red nose calls for careful general hygiene. Take a quick bath every morning and keep out of doors as much as you can. No tight collars, snug corsets or choking sleeves for a girl with a crimson nose.

Never wash chamois skins in hot water. Use cold water and avoid soap if possible. The skins clean very easily as a matter of fact. This applies also to chamois skin gloves.

Keep a tiny vial of powdered slippery elm in your workbasket and thrust the needle into it occasionally. It helps to make sewing a pleasure.

Handsome towels may be made by adding insets of linen torchon above the two inch hems in plain huckaback.

MOTHER AND CHILD.

They Should Be Together at the Bedtime Hour.

There may be some mothers who feel it to be a self denial to leave their parlors or firesides or work to put their children to bed. They think that the nurse could do just as well, that it is of no consequence who "hears the children say their prayers." Now, setting aside the pleasure of opening the little bed and tucking the darling up, there are really important reasons why the mother should not yield this privilege to any one. In the first place, it is the time of all times when a child is inclined to show its confidence and affection. All its little secrets come out with more truth and less restraint; its naughtiness through the day can be reproved and talked over with less excitement and with the tenderness and calmness necessary to make a permanent impression. If the little one has shown a desire to do well and be obedient its efforts and success can be acknowledged and commended.

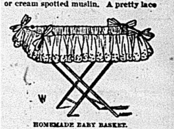
We must make it a habit to talk to our children in order to get from them an expression of their feelings. We cannot understand the character of these little beings committed to our care unless we do. And if we do not know what they are we shall not be able to govern them wisely or educate them as their different natures demand. Certainly it would be unwise to excite young children too much by conversation with them just before putting them to bed.

Every mother who carefully studies the temperament of her children will know how to manage them in this respect. But of this all mothers may be assured, that the last words at night are of great importance even to the babies of the flock. The very tones of the voice they last listened to make an impression upon their sensitive organizations. Mothers, do not think the time and strength wasted which you spend in reviewing the day with your little boy or girl. Do not neglect to teach it how to pray, and pray for it in simple and earnest language which it can understand. Soothe and quiet its little heart after the experiences of the day. It has had its disappointments and trials as well as its play and pleasure. It is ready to throw its arms around your neck and take its good night kiss.—Boston Traveler.

BABY'S BASKET.

A Pretty One May Be Made of a Cardboard Box and Camp Stool.

No baby need be without a pretty toilet basket even though the mother's resources be limited. Such a basket as is shown in the illustration requires only a small outlay in money and deft touches of clever fingers. The basket itself has as a foundation one of those nice flat cardboard boxes in which gowns are sent home. The inside of the box is first well padded with wadding and the whole afterward covered with silk or mercerized sateen, which in its turn is again covered with white or cream spotted muslin. A pretty lace edged frill of muslin must be put all round the box, and on no account skimp your frill.



HOMEMADE BABY BASKET.

The four corners of the box are finished off with ribbon bows or flat rosettes made of silk. Do not forget to make a large pincushion. A triangular one is convenient, as it fits in one corner. A cover for the basket when not in use could be made from a piece of silk covered with muslin to match that on the basket.

The basket is nothing more than an ordinary camp stool. Remove the canvas seat, sandpaper the legs and enamel them the color of the silk which lines and decorates the basket.

When quite dry place the box on it and securely nail it on the top bars. This can be done either before or after, but a neater effect is gained when it is put on afterward. Gilt headed nails would not be an eyesore showing on the inside if they were driven in strongly and evenly.

Suggestions For Decorations.

A dainty shade for table decoration and very effective in a glass candlestick is made of white net cut to fit an isinglass frame. Ornament the net with ruffles of fine German or French valenciennes lace. Line with a soft shade of pink or green. A similar idea can be used as lamp shade, using water color paper for shade, painting a conventional design in tulips to form sections on shade. Cut out paper between design and fill in with a shirred lining of chiffon in any desired shade. Fold the wings together, which will give the butterfly the appearance of flying. Still another idea is to use a large brass ring, the kind used for crocheting. Have little bells with ribbons attached to tie on a ring for each game won.

Banished the Roaches.

A housekeeper who was recommended to try cucumber peeling as a remedy for cockroaches strewed the floor with pieces of the peel cut not very thin and watched the sequel. The pests covered the peel within a short time, so that it could not be seen, so voraciously were they engaged in sucking the poisonous moisture from it. The second night that this was tried the number of cockroaches was reduced to a quarter, and none were left alive on the third night.

HAMLIN GARLAND

COPYRIGHT, 1905, BY HAMLIN GARLAND

She found herself saying: "I know, Wayne, we seem suited to each other—all our friends would say so—but I'm not so sure of it. It is silly in me, but I am still wanting to be sure. I don't care for you as I ought to do. I'm no longer a schoolgirl; I know what marriage means, and unless I can feel differently from the way I do now I shall not marry."

"Have you met any one else who rouses this other—emotion?"

She flushed. "I don't know. I am not sure."

He sank back in his chair, heavy and inert. The muscles of his cheeks drooped, giving him the aspect of a man of fifty. "Don't throw yourself away. Ann, for God's sake, assert your common sense! If you cannot come to my home, don't waste your beauty, your culture, on some savage. It hurts me to see you out here living among these sordid men"—

She interrupted him. "There is another inexplicable thing. This life has interested me. It has developed in me a capacity for physical effort that I didn't know I had. It will seem absurd to you, but I have grown to love sweet, little, patient Mrs. Kelly. I like grand old Matt. I like the rude walls and the 'handmade stoves,' as Matt calls the fireplaces"—

"I can never marry you."

"And the tall young miner?" Peabody suddenly interrupted to ask, and, leaning toward her, a flash of insight in his eyes, "Or is it the handsome, daredevil Munro?"

A swift flush rose to her face, she lost speech, her eyes fell. "Yes—I—I like them, too," she said. "They interest me. They are vital, unconventional, real."

In this swift interchange of highly emotionalized thought they had forgotten where they sat and all knowledge of time had failed them. Ann glanced at the clock and rose, but Peabody said: "Please don't go! We will never have a more important subject to discuss." She sank back into her chair and he went on quite calmly, his eyes very grave and sweet. "Ann, I want you to be happy. I am not the kind of lover who would make his bride a captive to her own sorrow."

She shook her head sadly, but decisively. "You do not understand me, but no matter. This you must understand. I admire you, and I like you, but as I feel now I can never marry you. I'm sorry, but you must go back alone."

He took his dismissal quietly, but he suffered. His voice was tremulous with passionate regret as he bowed over her hand. "I accept your verdict, Ann, and I can only hope that your new light may not lead you into a slough of despond."

CHAPTER XX.

FOR the first time in his life Raymond was lonely, almost to the point of despair. To have both Ann and Louis taken out of his life on the same day left a painfully empty space. He did not permit himself to hope that Ann would return—he had, in fact, advised against it—and after his supper was over he sat beside the fire listening to the wind and pulling at his pipe like one deserted of his kind.

It had turned cold, and a great current of air was sweeping down from the peak, a movement portending some great change in the clouds. Kelly predicted snow, but as most of the outside work on the mine was done he was not concerned about the weather. He was, in fact, taking account of himself and trying to address himself to a future without "Hesper." The glow of his pride had died out. The confidence which sprang from his possession of gold had dulled into doubt.

As he sat thus, pondering over his problem, he heard voices, and a moment later a loud rap shook his door, ominous with a decisiveness of stroke.

"Come in!" he shouted somewhat surlily, for he did not enjoy interruption.

Munro, Brock, Carter and one or two others he didn't know entered, covered with snow.

"Good evening, gentlemen." He indicated chairs. "What can I do for you this evening?"

Carter seemed very nervous and took a seat without looking at his host. Munro was smiling, but his eyes were aslant as he replied:

"Oh, we just called to pass the time of night and inquire about your good health."

Raymond glanced from Munro's waggish lips to the frowning or troubled faces of the other men and braced himself for trouble.

"Out with it, Carter! What do you want of me?"

Carter fidgeted on his chair. "Well, you see, it's this way, Rob: We held a meeting today, and we decided that in view of the struggle that labor is making here all the mines should either shut down or put their men into the ranks."

"You have asked my men to join, haven't you?"

"Yes."

"What did they say?"

Munro chipped in, "They said, 'Go to blazes.'"

Raymond smiled. "How impolite of them! Well, now, let me say once again, Carter, I am in sympathy with your main objects. I think a man should be paid for every minute he works, but I don't believe in any method of forcing men who are working and want to work into a strike. I can't afford to go into any such organization."

"You can't afford not to," growled Brock.

His tone angered Raymond. "What have you to say in this matter?"

"I'm a member of the executive committee."

"Since when?"

"No matter when. What I say goes."

"Does it? Well, you keep a civil tongue in your jaws when speaking to me."

Brock rose. "You'll close down tomorrow or we'll close you down."

Raymond faced him. "We will not close down, and you can't close us down. Carter knows, and you know, Jack, I've played fair in this. I have not believed in your methods. I stood with Larned, your own organizer, against violence. If you can't convince my men by argument you needn't come to me to dragoon them into your ranks. What difference will my hands make anyway?"

Carter seized upon this. "It will make all the difference there is. There are a dozen of these small operators holding out because you and Kelly do. Your men are all strong men and ought to be with us. Besides, it weakens our discipline"—

Raymond interrupted. "We've been all over that before. I am not concerned with your discipline. I have no quarrel with my men. They are satisfied with our present arrangement. You're going at this back end to. If you would turn your attention to reforming mining laws and crushing out these speculative owners of mining lands, you would really be doing something, but your assault on men who are paying labor full wages weakens your case."

Kelly opened the door and entered while Raymond was speaking.

"What's the meaning of all this?" he asked.

Raymond coldly replied, "These men have come to serve a final notice on us to discharge our nonunion men or shut down."

"Not at all!" cried out Carter, who feared Kelly. "All we ask is that you recommend your men to join the union"—

Brock sprang to his feet again. "Oh, rats! What's the use beating around the bush? We know that you fellers are the backbone of the free miners' association and that they would all come in if you said so, and we need you and your men. We want you to head 'em our way."

Kelly smiled. "Ye're not asking much. So far as I'm concerned, Carter, I don't believe a word in you and your schoolboy, tomfool antics. From the very start ye've gone wrong. You begun by defending a lot of drunken blaggards, and that queered ye with every decent man. Go back to camp, arrest Denver Dan, San Juan Jones, Hob Smith and the rest of the bunch and send them down to the valley as a peace offering; then serve notice on the men that blew up the Red Star that they'll be hung tomorrow morning. By that time I'll begin to believe in you and your love for the honest workingman."

Carter, utterly unable to stem the flood of Kelly's indignant speech, sat with drooping head. He stammered, "You—you're a traitor to labor."

"I am a traitor to nothing that is good, but I am worn out and weary with your yellin', cursin', gamblin', drunken loons that assume to be workmen. I have more respect for the weak little dagoes, for they do want work and need it, but the bums that fill the streets are a sorry threat to a decent man, let alone a decent woman. And here's Jack Munro"—Kelly turned, and the smile died out of the young desperado's face—"he's chief of a gang of hoodlum cowboys and still pretends to be keepin' the peace. If you want to help the cause of labor, Jack, me boy, close the saloons while this strike is going on, protect the women and children, arrest and throw out the men that blew up the Red Star mine—you know who they are"—

"I do not," said Munro.

Kelly was lionlike in his wrath, and the group of labor leaders cowered before him like revealed conspirators. Only Munro seemed unabashed.

"That's all well enough to demand, Matt, but to carry it out is another story."

"Because ye're one o' them," answered Kelly. "You boast of your power. Ye're a man of education—some say military education. You know what discipline is, but when it comes to controlling your men from insulting strangers and abusing women you set down. Now, listen to me. This is my last word on this subject. We are neutral. We have had no part in this row, and we will take none. Go on, work out ye're jackass plan, rouse the whole state, make a political issue of yourselves, but lave Raymond and Kelly out of it. Lave our men alone. They are satisfied and earnin' good wages. As for my good advice, take it or lave it. If you take it ye win; if you lave it ye lose. I am for peace. I've done everything a man could do to kape the peace; I must do so. Everything I have in the world is here—the mine, me wife and the babies. I want no quarrel with anny man, especially with a miner, for I have worked for wages half me life, but I tell ye once more, boys, this mob business must not circle round that little cabin over there. If wan of your loafers so much as puts his toe against my door I'll kill him where he stands."

He ended with a hoarse intensity that silenced the men who listened, and after a pause Raymond remarked, very quietly:

"I stand with Kelly on this matter. Is there anything further you want to say?"

Brock shook his heavy shoulders, as if to clear himself of a weight, and clumsily rose. "I reckon that's all—you stay out?"

"We stand clear," said Raymond.

Carter fumbled for his hat. "Of course you mustn't think we blame you, Kelly. You are right enough from your point of view, but what would become of labor if we all stood aside?"

"I don't know," said Kelly. "There are wise men who have studied this problem—Hennery Garge, for instance—ye might look into his way. I'm dom sure your ways of violence will never cure the evil."

As they stood on the threshold Brock spoke with a vicious sneer, "We'll report your answer."

As the door closed behind them Raymond turned to Kelly with a look of great solemnity. "Matt, this means war for us."

"Munro will stand between us and the union."

"I doubt it, Matt. His power will vanish the moment he goes against the wishes of the miners. He couldn't feed his men and their horses without the union. He is in their pay, for all his boasting."

Kelly looked thoughtful. "That is true."

"Matt, you better take the wife and babies down to the valley."

"I've spoken of that, but the little wife will not go without me."

"Then you must go. It is not safe for them here. The people below are in deadly earnest. They're coming up here with an army next time. You better take your little family and get out."

"I can't do that. I can't leave here. Do you take the wife and the boys down to the Springs while I stay here and see that the work goes on."

They tossed this duty to and fro, each arguing in favor of the other, till Raymond said, "Very well; let's leave it to the wife."

As they stepped out into the night Kelly cried out: "Here comes the snow. Munro's pickets have a hard night before them."

Kelly's sons were fast asleep in their bed, but the small mother still sat at her sewing, her head haloed with lamplight.

"I'm glad you've come," she said. "My heart is lonely without Ann. Do you think she'll ever come back, Rob?"

"I hope so," he replied, but his voice had no heartiness of conviction in it.

"I'm glad she's away—just now," said Kelly, coming straight to business, as usual. "And Rob thinks you'd better go down to the Springs also."

"And leave you here, Matt Kelly? I will not. You'd be sure to get into trouble at once. If I go, you go."

Kelly looked at Raymond with a comical lift of one eyebrow. "That settles it—we stay!"

"There's going to be trouble," warned Raymond, "and you ought not to be here, Mrs. Kelly."

"The fightin' will not be on the hill. You said so yerself, Matt."

"I did, and I think so still, but at the same time 'twould be safer far if you and the lads were in the Springs."

"What has happened tonight, Matt? You were not so blue when you went out."

He told her quietly while she rocked to and fro in her low chair. She seemed scarcely to listen, but at the end she said: "You did right. I am heartsick of these drinkin', carousin' miners who go about making trouble for others. The most of them have no one but themselves, and they don't care what they do. If Jack Munro is the man he boasts himself to be all the time, he'll come in here and protect his friends."

"Jack is up against a hard streak o' weather. He's either got to stand in with the union or put up the money to feed and take care of his men and horses, and that's no small item when the snows have covered the grass. If he should join us, his power would be gone. He can't"—

A knock at the door brought a smile to Kelly's face. "Talk of the devil and he's at your elbow! Come!"

Munro entered the room hurriedly, like a man pursued. His collar was rolled high and his hat pulled low. He shut the door behind him quickly, but when he turned his usual devil-may-care grin was on his face.

"Boys, this is on the q t. I mustn't be seen down here any more. This neutral game is up. They're going to make war on you independent operators, sure thing, and I can't hobnob with you. Oh, but they're wild up the street tonight! The report is that the sheriff has started up the old stage road, and the lads are crazy to do 'em up. I've got to go down the canyon and see."

"This neutral game is up."

"It's another false alarm. The sheriff isn't going to march on this camp, even with 10,000 deputies."

"Anyhow, that's what they believe up there, and they're hot against you. This neutral dodge of yours won't work. I can't do much for you, but anything I can do to keep this little home undisturbed I'll do." He bowed to Mrs. Kelly. "But, as you said today, I can't maintain my men without the help of the miners, and, besides, boys, I believe in organized labor. Labor is an army, and discipline is everything."

"Why don't you maintain it, then?"

The smile dropped from his face like a mask, and a sinister, older man faced them: "Give me time. What this camp needs is a little Napoleon—the whiff of grapeshot. It needs a dictator, and I may be able to lay my hand on the scepter yet."

"It's pure anarchy now," said Raymond.

"It was till I entered the game. I am in control of the situation tonight. If I could command $10,000 to take care of my men I'd bring order out of chaos or hang about forty of these hoboes."

"If you'll make this camp law abiding, Jack, you will be one of the great men of the state. Even the valley will praise you. It's up to you this minute to show your power."

"Yes, but there are a whole lot of other considerations. I can't afford to play into the hands of those cursed, one lung dudes. If it were a question of men like you and Kelly here—but it isn't. The Red Star company is made up of a set of pirates, who batten on labor like a lot of turkey buzzards. They have no regard for any human rights"—

"These howling dervishes up the street are not concerned with rights, not even their own."

Munro was in deadly earnest now. "That's where you are wrong, old man. In their blind, fool way they are fighting labor's battles."

"It's a queer mixup," said Kelly, with a sigh. "I have a hatred of them dudes meself. They want to run our end of the county and their own too. They despise a workin'man. They dodge 'im as if he were a polecat."

Raymond rapped on the table. "Now wait a moment. You're confusing the jury. The immediate question is, 'How can we keep that mob of deputies from coming up here?' I'll tell you what I will do. I will volunteer to go down and meet the leaders and try to stop their advance."

Kelly rose with a spring. "Go, you! I believe you can do the trick. Barnett is your friend. The sheriff is mine. I would go with you, but I dare not leave me home."

"Never mind me, Matt," said the small wife.

"You're both taking a big risk," remarked Munro. "They may arrest you both."

"I have no fear," Kelly said, "but I dare not go—just now."

"I will go if the executive committee will authorize me to treat with the opposition," declared Raymond.

"SWISS FOOD"

Best Kidney Remedy Known To Science

For pain in the back—scanty urine—highly colored urine—irritated bladder—irregular bowels—bad stomach—there is nothing that will bring such quick relief and so certain a cure as FRUIT-A-TIVES.

These marvelous tablets are nature's natural remedy for irritated or weakened kidneys. They act directly on the kidneys—soothe the irritated membranes—clean, heal and strengthen the organs—and help them to new vigor with their work.

Often kidney trouble is not due to any organic defect in the kidneys. If the bowels are constipated—if the skin does not throw off the tissue waste of the body—then these impurities are carried to the kidneys. In a vain endeavor to rid the system of impurities, the kidneys are overworked—the blood vessels are dilated—the nerves inflamed. That causes a host of kidney troubles.

Fruit-a-tives

not only heal and strengthen the kidneys but they also increase the action of the skin, and act directly on the liver, thus curing the constipation.

FRUIT-A-TIVES are the natural and logical cure for all kidney troubles. They are made of fruit and tonics—are pleasant to take—and a guaranteed cure when faithfully used.

50c. a box or 6 boxes for $2.50. Sent on receipt of price if your druggist does not handle them.

Yellow Sweet Clover

By Virginia Leila Wentz

Copyright, 1905, by R. A. Whitehead

"I think if you'd take a run home, dear, for a few weeks it would be all right with the governor, and you'd get your roses back." Jim gave his little wife a gentle pinch on her pale cheeks.

Five years ago, when he had married her, she had possessed something of the evanescent charm of a four petaled dog rose, exquisite, ethereal, but the kind to fall in a moment. Jim belonged to "the profession," and Madge always accompanied him upon tours, undergoing cheerfully the hardships that a player of "one night stands" must endure in the interest of art. Matters did not go well financially, so presently she became a "walking lady," finally a soubrette. This was only to last, however, until Jim made what the dramatic critics describe as a "favorable impression."

And now, although five years had gone by, they were still waiting for that distinct success. That it had not come—they were merely human—they ascribed of course to a lack of opportunity. Meanwhile Madge's health was beginning to fail. She was fretting for the country. So when Jim insisted (because she was yearning for her father's forgiveness, because she did want her "roses" back) for the first time since she had left it she set out for her childhood's home.

After she had got out at the little country station unheralded she wound her way up the old farm road. Nothing seemed to have changed. She heard the cows lowing far off; she inhaled the loamy incense of her ancestral land. It was so sweet that it pained her. The dear, familiar farmhouse came in sight, and her eyes grew misty. She opened the gate which led to the yard path, bordered by lilacs and hollyhocks. There, pulling up some weeds from underneath the lilacs, she came face to face with her father. At first he could find no words to say. He only glared at her through his spectacles. Then:

"Where is he—that scoundrel, that vagabond, that"—

"My husband," corrected Madge, drawing back with a touch of dainty pride.

"Then," thundered the old farmer, flinging down his trowel in a rage, "go back to him—go back to your husband!" The veins in his neck were swollen like cords. That he did not fall with a stroke of apoplexy was a miracle indeed.

So Madge passed out of the gate of her father's home once more. When she reached New York, Jim had just been taken to the hospital. At first she was conscious only of one thing. Jim was ill, terribly ill, and calling for her. Later the doctor's sentences returned to her. There had been an accident—injury to the spine—never walk again—a cripple for life. Why, ah, why, had she ever left her beloved?

When, at the beginning of the next season, it was time to go "on the road" again Madge had to start with a variety company alone. But while she was doing an eccentric dance in a crimson ballet skirt her whole heart and soul were with a man suffering in a stuffy, top room in Eighth street.

Something like six weeks after its departure from New York the variety company "collapsed" in Ohio. Madge was obliged to return east and seek another engagement. Each evening when she had come back from her weary tour of the theatrical agencies the question would come anxiously almost before she had closed the door.

"Anything today, Madge darling?" And always the answer would come with a brave smile as she shook her head in the negative:

"You see, this is the bad part of the season. And the profession is really overcrowded."

Meanwhile medicine was requiring cash and the landlady was insisting on having her weekly increasing lodging bill paid.

As Madge entered the room one evening, bracing her heart to meet the customary question, she heard new, cheery words instead:

"Come over here, little woman. I've something to show you."

Jim, who lay propped up by pillows, had a bright flush on each cheek, and his eyes were like stars. He held toward her a bundle of manuscript. It was a play he'd been writing unknown to his wife or doctor. It was constructed from incidents of his own life. Madge and he were the leading characters. In the last act they both made tremendous "hits" and were "discovered." Wealth poured in upon the long disappointed artists, and they were able to leave poverty behind them.

"When we sell the play, what shall we do with all our money, dear?" she asked, smiling through her tears as at last she finished reading the prized manuscript. He turned wearily.

"Ah, we'll move into the country, fresh and green. We'll buy a little home with trailing vines so we can hear the birds sing."

She made the rounds with the play, as many plays have made the rounds before—and no one wanted it. But just as she had kept Jim's hopes alive regarding her own possible theatrical engagement, so now she treated the disposition of his manuscript.

One manager—a round, French abbe of a man, with sleek, soft, fat hands, who had promised to give her beloved play a reading—laid one of these same hands upon Madge's arm one day.

"That manuscript you brought the other day fell off my desk into the wastebasket, and the boy burned it with the waste paper. I'm sorry, but the truth is, dear girl, it never would have done in the world—never! It was amateurish. It had no action. It was defective all through. Tell him to try again." He wished the woman would not stare at him in that bewildered, helpless way. He wasn't a ghost.

"Come, now. Don't look so white. I'll take you out to lunch, and then we'll call it square, won't we?" But she did not hear him. She had already started for home. Home? Before her Jim, wasted and expectant; behind her blank failure!

Old Farmer Gray and his elder sister were having some sort of discussion over the rightful age of a man whose death was published among the country newspaper notices. The paper stated it incorrectly, they were sure of that. But they couldn't quite agree on what was his proper age.

"He's pretty nigh Brother Hi's age," said Farmer Gray finally. "Leastwise he was born the same year—mebbe not to the month. I recollect a story mother used to tell about—but I'll just go an' look up Hi's age in the Bible."

The air of the "best parlor," which he entered, was a bit close. The sun never was allowed to shine in this room more than once a twelvemonth—it might fade the carpet. On a marble topped table, resting on a worsted mat, was the family Bible. The last time Farmer Gray had looked into this book he'd registered the baptism of his baby daughter, Madge. For his daily readings he used a little New Testament.

As he undid the heavy clasps of the big Bible the pages opened themselves at a place where there was some pressed yellow sweet clover. The mere sight of it somehow recalled faroff memories. It recalled a certain summer day so long ago. It was on his honeymoon, and his young wife had just plucked these sprays of yellow clover. "Think you can love me as long as this keeps sweet?" she had asked archly. How pretty she had looked, laughing up into his face! How precious she had been to him! After ten years of happy married life their long wished for child had come. When the young mother died he had clung to the baby daughter with double tenderness. He simply worshiped her growing girlhood. But she had run away from him and with an actor, and he had forbidden her ever to cross his doorsill again.

The old farmer scarcely knew what he was about, his head swam so. Doubtless it was that strong, sweet odor of the clover. Somehow it seemed to him to be suddenly flooding the whole room, filling his stubborn heart with something very like pardon and mercy.

Madge dragged wearily down Broadway in a dazed sort of fashion after she had left the unctuous little manager. Almost directly in front of a theater she found herself walking into a small group of boys. They were jeering a man who stood close to the theater's entrance, timid and self distrustful. But Madge moved mechanically toward the street curb in order to pass on. She did not observe him.

"Wants to know where you go to find out where the play actors live—did you ever?" sarcastically jeered one of the urchins. "I say, Reuben, hadn't you better 'tend to the hay crop?"

"Wot he wants t' do is ter go on de stage hisself an' find out," suggested another urchin. A "cop" came up the street at this moment, and the old man who had been affording the boys amusement took a few steps toward him. In doing so his eyes fell upon the slight, girlish figure who had just succeeded in passing the group of urchins. "Madge! Madge!" he gasped.

"Father!" Regardless of everything, like a very little child she threw herself into his outstretched arms.

"'Twas the yellow sweet clover done it, darlin'," said he, a bit mysteriously, while he patted her cheeks as of old.

Tame Grouse Strutting.

Toward the end of September my ruffed grouse began strutting, a performance similar to that of the turkey gobbler. The tail is spread, the black ruff thrown out around the head, and the wings are dragged on the ground, the object being to show all their new feathers. As with turkeys, the young hens strut as well as the cocks. In strutting the birds indulge in a deal of bowing, tapping the ground or log with the bill, and while shaking the head from side to side give vent to hissing sounds, slow at first and increasing in rapidity and culminating in a prolonged hiss—"chuu—chuu—chuu—chuu—chuu—chuu—chuu—chuu-chuu-chuu-chuuuuuuuuu" (hiss the syllables without vocalizing). The sounds are made in the same tempo as the drumming and remind one somewhat of an automobile starting up. A cock may be thus engaged for hours together, parading his charms before a demure little hen, while she persists in looking up at the sky or in nipping at a bud, with not so much as a casual glance out of the corner of her eye—the most remarkable example of true masculine patience and perseverance and of feminine heartlessness as well.—Country Life In America.

The Most Degraded.

The California Indians who used to inhabit the Santa Barbara islands are described by the missionaries as the most degraded of all human beings, with a morality lower than that of animals. Insects, especially grasshoppers, formed a portion of their food, and, like the natives of the adjacent mainland, they probably fed to a great extent on the larger kinds of earthworms. Possibly they belonged to the Shoshonean stock of the mainland. Their extermination is attributed to the changed conditions of existence imposed upon them by the missionaries.

KITCHEN ODORS.

Some Precautions to Be Taken With Cooking Vegetables.

One of the things that housewives have to contend with, particularly those who live in apartments, are the odors that will penetrate from the kitchen into the other parts of the house even when observing the utmost care.

Much of this sort of thing can be avoided if proper precaution is taken. For instance, with some vegetables, such as turnips, onions, cabbage and the sort whose odors are strong, there is one precaution that can be taken, and that is to soak them for several hours before they are put on the fire in weak cold salt water, when much of the essential oils will be thrown off, rising to the surface in a sort of scum. Allow vegetables to come to a boil in the salt water, then skim very clean. A dash of cold water will throw up another scum, and this can be taken off as the other. Cook all such vegetables uncovered, as the lid has the tendency to strengthen the odor tenfold.

Another cause of odors is stale grease that has been left on the stove from previous cooking. This is most offensive, but can easily be guarded against by having the stove cleansed after each meal. Vessels that have been used for cooking strong vegetables should be left to soak in soda water until the time comes for washing. This will obviate the difficulty. Another simple deodorizer is to burn quickly a bit of newspaper, straw or excelsior, which, with the windows open, will drive out any disagreeable odors.

BACKWARD CHILDREN.

Lessons In Speaking May Be Aided by the Use of Music.

Possibly one of the greatest errors in handling backward children is in trying to put them into the eye stage before they are through with the ear stage. A large number of so called idiotic and feeble minded children will give keen attention to music, whereas they give no heed to verbal sounds. Words to them have apparently no meaning. This indicates that, as language was developed by attention being directed to the external world and as language was first the result of a mental complex made up of the identification of certain sounds and certain objects present in space, in order to develop in an abnormal child the attitude of interest toward words and their meaning, we must first begin at his stage of development, at his stage of mental sequence—sounds. Lessons in speaking derived a new interest to speechless children by working music and speech together. It was found much easier to set up the ear and speech co-ordinations than to get the children to repeat verbal sounds by themselves. The physiological alphabet when supplemented by musical accompaniment was voiced much more readily by the child than when the teacher's voice was used without music.

LAUNDRY LINES.

If you get too much bluing in the rinsing water, put in a little household ammonia.

In laundering embroidered linens the design will stand out beautifully if they are ironed on several thicknesses of Turkish toweling.

If there are any pencil marks on the linen, erase them carefully with a rubber eraser before the linen goes into the wash. Hot water will set them beyond hope of removal.

A heavy flatiron, weighing seven or eight pounds, will do better work if it is passed over the clothes once with a firm, steady pressure than a lighter iron hurriedly passed over the clothes two or three times.

A clean firebrick is more satisfactory as an iron stand than the ordinary piece of filigree cast iron, which not only admits the air to the bottom of the iron, but conducts the heat from it. Being a nonconductor of heat, the brick retains the heat in the smoothing iron.

Paring Potatoes.

The foolish practice of paring potatoes is not only a waste of time, but a waste of potatoes. A horrible waste. The best part of the potato is pared off and thrown away in the garbage—the best part of the potato, mind you; not only a part of the potato, but the best part. The outside of the potato, usually pared off, contains all the nitrogenous or tissue building properties of the potato. It is altogether the most useful part of the potato, and yet this is exactly what is pared off in a ruthless way and thrown out. This not only takes hours and hours of time every week from the home, but filches from the home a great deal of wholesome food. The potato pared in the usual way contains very little else but starch, but boiled with the skin on it contains not only starch, but a large portion of nitrogenous matter.—Medical Talk For the Home.

How He Makes Tea.

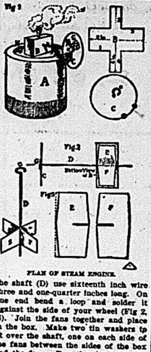
This is the way an Englishman makes tea. As this particular Englishman has been making his own tea for the last fifteen years regularly at 5 every afternoon, he really should know the best method. Here is his rule: Don't pour the boiling water on the tea. This scorches the leaves and they cannot exude their full fragrance. Fill your teapot full of boiling water, then put in your tea leaves. Cover tightly and let it stand for a minute or so. Now stir the leaves with a long spoon and allow the fusion to draw about four minutes more, and your tea will have all the delicious aroma of the real tea leaves. Strain the tea off into another pot, as the leaves if left in longer will add their only slightly less soluble bitter flavor. The clear tea can be kept hot over a spirit lamp.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

A STEAM ENGINE.

It Is Safe and Practical, and Any Boy Can Make It.

Get a quart sirup can for your boiler (Fig. 1, A), punch a sixteenth inch hole in the lid of your boiler one and one-half inches from the edge of the can. Take a piece of tin 5 by 6 inches and cut out of each corner two inches square (B). Bend the tin into the shape of a box. Punch a hole into the top of this box for exhaust steam to escape; also holes in the exact center of the sides for shaft to pass through. Cut two pieces of tin 1½ by ¾ of an inch. Trim the edges to look like Fig. 2 (E F). In the exact center of these pieces cut out a place halfway through, just wide enough for each fan to fit in. Cut out of tin a balance wheel (C) two inches in diameter. Punch a hole in its exact center. For the shaft (D) use sixteenth inch wire three and one-quarter inches long. On one end bend a loop and solder it against the side of your wheel (Fig 2, G). Join the fans together and place in the box. Make two tin washers to fit over the shaft, one on each side of the fans between the sides of the box and the fans. Run the shaft through the box and the washers. Solder the shaft to the fans near the center. Allow the straight end of your shaft to project through one side of the box about one-half inch.



PLAN OF STEAM ENGINE.

Solder the box on the lid of the can or boiler open side down, so that a direct stream of steam coming through the hole in the top of the boiler will strike the ends of the fan. Make a hole (outside the box in the lid of your boiler, if there is not one already), through which pour water in the boiler. Keep corked (H). Keep your boiler one-third full of water.

For heating the boiler use an ordinary alcohol lamp or set it on the stove, and it can be used to work any small mechanical device.

To make an engine of greater power use a larger can, increasing all measurements proportionately.—Woman's Home Companion.

A Jolly Peanut Game.

The children sit around small tables, four at each. A cupful of peanuts is placed in the middle, and a small pair of bonbon tongs is provided for each table. The children try in turn to remove one peanut at a time without stirring the other nuts. If a player succeeds he is entitled to another chance until he fails, when the turn passes to the child on the left. At the end of twenty minutes a bell is rung. The player at each table having the most peanuts wins. The winners at the different tables play another round until there is but one winner.

Conundrums.

Why is a historical event like a parcel untied and tied again? Because it is re-corded.

Why do doctors keep bad company? Because the worse people are the oftener they visit them.

What houses are the easiest to break into? The houses of bald people, because their locks are few.

Why does an aching tooth impose silence on the sufferer? Because it makes him hold his jaw.

Waiting His Turn.

One day George's mother asked him whether he wanted to go with her to buy a petticoat.

George answered with enthusiasm, "Oh, yes!"

When his mother got to the store she asked for a white petticoat. When George saw the skirt he asked:

"When are we going to get the pet goat?"—Little Chronicle.

"Happy to Meet; Sorry To Part; Happy to Meet Again"

OLD BOYS AND GIRLS, AFTER A DELIGHTFUL THREE DAYS' VISIT, LEFT FOR TORONTO LAST NIGHT — YESTERDAY'S DOINGS.

Everything in this world must come to an end, and the 1906 reunion of the Toronto Old Boys and Girls in their native city is no exception. For three days they had feasted their eyes on familiar and much-loved scenes; shaken hands with old and dear friends; talked over incidents of other days with a joy which only those who have themselves wandered away from home can understand, and, in short, enjoyed themselves to the full. And now it is past, like a tale that is told! But it is not altogether vanity, in spite of what Solomon said. For sweet are the memories which come from associating with those we love dearly; pleasant are the thoughts which arise in our reveries as we muse on the too rare meetings with those who, though absent, will ever be to memory dear: happy, indeed! the man or woman who can say, in the words of the old song, "Dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood, thank God I have seen the old places and the old friends, and in doing so I have renewed my youth." So the old Belleville boys and girls, now resident in Toronto, last night bade us good-by till some date in 1907. May they all return then, and bring more with them.

It is a matter for congratulation that the weather was perfectly ideal all the time the visitors were here. A little warm, perhaps, but then we don't expect icebergs and polar bears in the good old summer time. Monday's paper chronicled all that took place up to noon, and following will be found a summary of what occurred yesterday afternoon and last night:

The aquatic sports provided for the visitors yesterday afternoon, on the harbor and bay off Victoria Park, were enjoyed by a large concourse of people, and much interest centered in the various events. As a rule the wind during the afternoon from off the bay is rather light, but yesterday was an exception. There was wind enough and some to spare. It was very puffy at times and had not those on board some of the craft been excellent swimmers fatalities might have been the order of the day. There were several upsets and three boats had to be towed to shore. Many of the ladies present became frightened to see young fellows struggling against the waves, but owing to the fact that so many boats were about assistance was soon rendered to those in distress.

It was, indeed, a pretty sight to witness so many white sails spread out upon the bay at one time. The course was laid out so that at no time were the racers out of sight of those on the park. It was an afternoon's sport which will long be remembered by those who participated and also by the onlookers.

THE PUNT RACE.

The punts were first called up and at 3.05 were sent away. There were four entries, namely, Imp, owned by F. Duesberry; King of the Waters, owned by W. Reeves; Lipton, owned by W. Smith, and the Tornado, a double sail punt, owned by D. McGlenn. At the start the Imp took the lead and was able to maintain it to the finish. The race for second place between the King of the Waters and Lipton was close until just before the finish, when a sudden heavy puff of wind caused the King to upset a few yards from the winning buoy. The crew escaped with a ducking. F. Duesberry, the skipper of the Imp, was, by the breaking of an oar which he was using as a steering apparatus, thrown out and had to swim some distance to shore. The Tornado, which was looked upon by many as a sure winner did not complete the course.

THE DINGHY RACE.

There were four entries for this event, and it was a pretty race from start to finish, as all the craft entering were rather evenly matched. Those competing were the Y-No, owned by N. Jones; Senga, owned by E. Reid; Twenty-three, owned by F. Wallbridge, and Kemoh, owned by H. Rathbun. The Senga at first took the lead, but before the course had been once traversed the Twenty-three had forged to the front and was able to maintain that position until the winning line had been crossed. The Kemoh was second and the Senga third. Whilst no time was taken, the course was traversed by these boats in excellent time.

THE SKIFF RACE.

There were but two entries in the skiff class, namely, the May, owned by W. Larue, and the Unorna, owned by W. Redner. This proved to be an easy win for the latter boat, which at the start took the lead and maintained it to the finish.

Skiff race — 1st prize, $5; 2nd prize, $3; 3rd prize, $2.

Dinghy race — 1st prize, $3; 2nd prize, $2; 3rd prize, $1.

Punt race—1st prize, $3; 2nd prize, $2; 3rd prize, $1.

THE FREAK CLASS.

Three boats started in this race, but only one completed the course. The starters were the Unliked, owned by J. Aris; Togo, owned by F. Spangenberg, and Whirl, owned by W. Jones. The Unliked at the start took a decided lead and when the first round of the course had been completed she was leading her two competitors by some minutes. Seeing there was no chance to obtain first money, they dropped out.

A MATCH RACE.

A prize of $2 was offered and accepted for a match race between the Crusoe, owned by W. Allen, and the Dream, owned by W. Wills. For a short period it was a good race, but the Dream was rather unfortunate in that a squall struck her out in the bay and she was overturned and partially dismantled. The Crusoe finished the course and pulled down the money.

SWIMMING RACE.

Only two boys could be induced to enter the swimming race, namely, Chas. Durand and F. Day. They swam across the harbor and were rewarded for their efforts. Durand proved to be the better swimmer of the two.

This completed, the afternoon's sport.

The I.O.O.F. band was upon the park during the afternoon and rendered a number of selections.

THE BASEBALL MATCH.

Cobourg Had Too Much Class for the Park Nine.

The baseball match on the Driving Park yesterday afternoon, between Cobourg and the Park Nine, of this city, attracted a very fair crowd of spectators, who certainly got their money's worth. The game, for all the score was one-sided, was quite interesting. The local balltossers were somewhat over-matched by their older and huskier opponents, but showed that, with more practice against fast opponents they have the ability to eventually play good ball. It must not be forgotten that it is years since an outside team played in Belleville, and the Park Nine deserve credit for bringing Cobourg here. The Cobourgs had seven of their best nine on—the nine, which won the Championship of the Midland league last summer. Downs, their crack pitcher, played third base for seven innings and went in the box for the last two. He is a southpaw, and showed good speed and wide curves, his drop especially being deadly to the locals. Bulger, who pitched the first seven innings, is pitcher of Cobourg's junior team, and has a nice assortment of benders in his repertoire. Dick Turpin, famous as being with Col. Sam Hughes in South Africa, was the Cobourg catcher. The Cobourg infield was right on the job, and played snappily and well, but the outfield was a long way from coming up to professional form. Many fly balls got away which should have been gathered in. Saunders, who pitched for the Park Nine, was not hit hard, but his support could hardly be called gilt-edged—especially in spots. The features of the game were the battery work of both teams, and a fast double play pulled off by Cobourg in the seventh. "Pete" Young was the umpire, and did satisfactory work. The teams were:

Cobourg: Turpin, c.; T. Bulger, 2b.; Bentley, short; Payne, r.f.; Burge, c.f.; Harcourt, l.f.; J. Bulger, p. and 3b.; Rooney, 1b.; Downs, 3b. and p.

Park Nine: Boland, c.; Cornell, 2b.; Phillips, short; Smith, 3b.; Gordon, c.f.; Weir, l.f.; Burgoyne, 1b.; Saunders, p.; Thomas, r.f.

Score by Innings.

Cobourg	5	2	1	0	0	0	2	0	4	—14
Park Nine	0	1	2	1	0	0	1	0	0	— 5

THE EVENING'S EVENTS.

The band concert given on Queen Victoria park last night was very largely attended, and the delightfully cool breezes were greatly enjoyed. The seats were full, many were sitting on the grass and hundreds were promenading, the scene being an animated and pleasing one.

Shortly after 10 o'clock the excursionists could be seen wending their way down to the market square, ready to board the special when it arrived. Many had a long wait. The time of waiting however, was not dull, so far as noise can be said to drive away monotony. Boys and young men were abroad with drums and bugles, and they woke the echoes and surely made the welkin ring. They were evidently out to let people see they were alive and to give the visitors a send-off. As the noise-producers paraded up and down Front street the crowd on the street grew larger, and the racket certainly grew no less. All kinds of instruments of torture were used to make noise. Two old vehicles were obtained somewhere, and to these ropes were attached. Crowded with boys and young men, and hauled by ropes, the old ramshackles were drawn about the streets. The excursion train moved down to the market square, and the crowd, noise-makers and all, proceeded thither, to give the old boys and girls a send-off. And they surely got it. Shortly before midnight the train pulled out, amid waving handkerchiefs and ringing cheers. What wonder if many a female eye was wet with tears. There's no place like home after all. "Good-by, good-by, God bless you." Slowly the train passed from sight. The old boys and girls were gone.

Notes From The Police Blotter.

Although the police during yesterday and last evening answered several calls, no arrests were made, as all was quiet when the officer arrived.

Two business places were at a late hour last night found to be insecure.

A False Alarm Fiend.

Shortly after midnight last night the central telephone office received a message that there was a fire in Ald Sinclair's store. It proved to be false and no alarm was sounded. Some two other false reports were sent in later on. An effort will be made to find out the party or parties who sent in the alarms.

Pickpockets Got Little.

It appears that there were pickpockets in our midst on Sunday and yesterday, but they evidently did not reap much of a harvest. On Sunday afternoon, at the station, it was reported that a young lady had been relieved of her pocketbook, which contained a small sum of money and a cheque. The police shadowed three suspicious-looking parties, who left the city last evening. Two missing purses were reported to the police yesterday but these were evidently accidentally lost.

Stomach Troubles

Mrs Sue Martin, an old and highly respected resident of Feisonia, Miss., was sick with stomach trouble for more than six months Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets cured her. She says: "I can now eat anything I want and am the proudest woman in the world to find such a good medicine." To be had at R. Templeton and Co.'s Drug Store. Sample free.

What is said to be a remarkably expert high-wire act is presented in the Barnum & Bailey circus by a company known as the Carmen Troupe. There are five artists in the troupe, and they perform on the elevated wire with as much confidence as upon the ground. Single and double somersaults, from shoulder to shoulder, while balancing in the air, and many other difficult feats are among the novelties introduced. The feats of La Belle Carmen, one of the young girls of the troupe, are described as marvellous beyond precedent.

Ten artists simultaneously performing in mid-air is announced as a feature of the performance given by the Imperial Viennese Troupe of aerialists with the Barnum & Bailey circus. The flights of the Imperial Viennese gymnasts are said to be thrilling in the extreme. The apparatus used in their act extends almost the entire width of the big hippodrome pavilion, and the performers catch each other by their hands and even their feet, after traversing a distance of sixty feet through the air. The Imperial Viennese Troupe is credited with being the highest salaried aerial act in the world

Montreal, July 23.—(Special.)—Cable advices on Canadian cattle were generally stronger, and prices in Liverpool and London show an advance of ½c, wit hsales at 12c. In Glasgow, sales of Canadian cattle were made at much better prices than a week ago. There has been some demand for acean freight space, and 45s has been paid by shippers o ranch cattle for Liverpool space for August and September, but for prompt shipment 35s is the best rate, Ontario shippers will pay. London has been let at 35s for August, and Glasgow at 40s. Shipments for the week were 3035 cattle, 128 sheep. Receipts, were 1200 cattle, 250 calves, 50 milch cows, 300 sheep and lambs and 400 hogs. The heavy rains which gladdened the hearts of the farmers had a depressing effect on the market for cattle, and good cattle were nearl ya ¼c lower in price. A few head of good steers were bought by shippers at $4.90 to $5 per 100 lbs.; pretty good cattle sold at 3½c to 4⅝c, and the common stock at 2½c to 3½c per lb. RUSS DOUMA PROTESTS

Utters Strong Appeal to People of Russia in Crisis.

Asks Them to Refuse to Pay Taxes or Recruit in the Army—Russian Delegates of Douma Withdraw From Interparliamentary Union in London—Premier Campbell-Bannerman Utters a Dramatic Tribute—Conference Rises to Cheer Russians.

Viborg, July 24.—The Governor of Viborg announced yesterday that he has been ordered by the Governor-General of Finland immediately to close the meeting of the members of Parliament, by military force, if necessary. He informed M. Mouremtzeff that such meetings would not be allowed to be held anywhere in Finland.

The struggle over the manifesto, the text of which had been completed by the committee of seven in an all-night session, was proceeding behind closed doors. There was but a limited number of Constitutional Democrats present. The Polish delegates refused to participate in the discussion, and will adopt a separate statement.

Swing Into Line.

At the last moment the Constitutional Democrats, under the influence of the threat of martial law, swung into line with the Radicals and an address to the country was adopted with practical unanimity, only Count Heyden and M. Stakovitch voting in the negative.

It contains a protest against the illegal dissolution of the Parliament and appeals to the people to refuse to pay taxes or recruit the army or to recognize the issue of a Government loan.

The meeting then adjourned.

The Curtain Drops.

The curtain dropped yesterday afternoon on the final act of the Douma of Russia's first Parliament, when, under the spur of the threat of Governor Rechanborg to use military force to end the session, and with troops already converging on the Hotel Belvidere, where the meeting was held, the assembled members of the lower House, 186 in number, hurriedly adopted and signed an address to the people, which is thoroughly revolutionary in its nature, elected a perpetual executive committee, headed by Paul Dolgoraukoff, vice-president of the House, to carry on the work of liberation, and adjourned amidst characteristic Russian embracing and kissing. A few members, including President Mourentzoff, Ivan Pterundivich and Count Heyden, returned to St. Petersburg by evening train.

The Constitutional Democratic cohorts intend to go into St. Petersburg in a body this morning, but many of the Radical members, fearing arrest on their arrival at the capital, will remain for the present in Finland, or return by roundabout routes. The address follows:

Address to the People.

"To the people from their popular representatives:

"Citizens of all Russia.—Parliament has been dissolved by ukase of July 21. You elected us as your representatives and instructed us to fight for our country and freedom. In execution of your instructions and our duty, we drew up laws in order to ensure freedom to the people. We demanded the removal of irresponsible Ministers, who were infringing the laws with impunity and oppressing freedom. First of all, however, we wanted to bring out a law respecting the distribution of land to working peasants and involving the assignment, to this end, of crown appanages, monasteries and lands belonging the the clergy, and compulsory expropriation of private estates. The Government held that such a law to be inadmissable and upon Parliament once more urgently putting forward its resolution regarding compulsory expropriation, Parliament was dissolved.

On Brink of Ruin.

"The Government promises to convoke a new Parliament seven months hence. Russia must remain without popular representation for seven whole months, at a time when the people are standing on the brink of ruin, and industry and commerce are undermined, when the whole country is seething with unrest, and when the Ministry has definitely shown its incapacity to do justice to popular needs. For seven months the Government will act arbitrarily and will fight against the popular movement, in order to obtain a pliable, subservient Parliament. Should it succeed, however, completely suppressing the popular movement, the Government will convoke no Parliament at all.

Resist Taxes.

"Citizens, stand up for your trampled-on rights, for popular representation and for an imperial Parliament. Russia must not remain a day without popular representation. You possess the means of acquiring it. The Government has, without the assent of the poular representatives, no right to collect taxes from the people nor to summon the people to military service. Therefore, you are now the Government. The dissolved Parliament was justified in giving neither money or soldiers. Should the Government, however, contract loans in order to procure funds, such loans will be invalid without the consent of the popular representatives. The Russian people will never acknowledge them and will not be called upon to pay them. Accordingly, until a popular representative Parliament is summoned do not give a kopeck to the throne or a soldier to the army. Be steadfast in your refusal. No power can resist the united, inflexible will of the people.

"Citizens, in this obligatory and unavoidable struggle, your representatives will be with you."

CHEERS FOR RUSSIANS.

Interparliamentary Union Regrets Withdrawal of Delegates of Douma—British Premier's Enthusiasm.

London, July 24.—The 14th conference of the Interparliamentary Union was opened in the royal gallery of the Palace of Westminster. Adherents of international peace from all the Parliaments of Europe, as well as several of those of the western hemisphere, were present.

Lord Weardale (Sir Philip Stanhope) opened the congress, his preliminary sentences of welcome being specially addressed to the Russian representatives, whereupon the delegates rose in a body and turning toward the delegation of the late Parliament, cheered them to the echo.

Premier Campbell-Bannerman reminded his hearers that King Edward had always been a great lover of peace. The Government, he added, was in entire sympathy with the object of the conference.

Long Live the Douma.

He especially greeted the members of the Russian Parliament present, and also paid a tribute to Emperor Nicholas, who had done so much towards the enhancement of ideas of peace. It could be safely asserted, he thought, that the Russian Parliament, although dissolved, was sure to again come into existence. Then the Premier, in a sudden excess of enthusiasm, shouted: "La Douma est morte. Viva la Douma! ("The Russian Parliament is dead. Long live the Russian Parliament!")

Again the delegates rose to their feet and a storm of cheering continued for a couple of minutes.

Count Apponyi, the Hungarian Minister of Worship, followed, characterising the Premier's speech as a "direct message from King Edward, the latter announcing on his own initiative his complete adhesion to the work of the conference.

On his suggestion a telegram was sent to King Edward as follows: "The Interparliamentary Conference received the King's adhesion with profound gratitude. May he long be spared to promote the welfare of his people and the cause of international peace."

Dramatic Moments.

Then came a dramatic moment, Prof. Kovalevsky, a member of the lower House of the Russian Parliament, rose, but some minutes elapsed before he could gain a hearing, so prolonged was the cheering. Finally, in a voice somewhat broken with emotion, he announced the necessity for the withdrawal of the members of the Russian Parliament. He said: "We came here in behalf of the Russian nation to partake in the great work of the conference. The mission of the Russian Parliament was to snatch a great people from a regime of violence and substitute for it a sense of reality, liberty and justice. We hoped to take an active part in your work, but our mission comes to a sudden end, as our Parliament, having been dissolved, we are no longer official representatives. Our sympathy remains. We return home with the determination to continue the great struggle for freedom, liberty and justice.

To the Fight.

The announcement of the withdrawal of the Russian delegates was met with a storm of protests and shouts of "No, no," and attempts on every side to induce the Russians to remain, but they insisted that they must at once return to the "battlefield." They then left the hall.

Lord Weardale was then elected president and the discussion began of the reports of the commissions on the American proposals for an international congress and a model arbitration treaty to be submitted to the next conference at The Hague.

United States Congressman Bartholdt said he considered the scheme to convert The Hague into a permanent body, which would meet at stated periods, and to create a council for the codification and development of international law to be thoroughly practicable and timely, that no well-disposed Government could object to it.

Model Treaty.

The former Austrian Minister of Commerce Von Plener, then presented the report of the Brussels' commission, giving the proposed model treaty of arbitration. He moved the adoption of the treaty as amended by the commission, together with a recommendation urging on the powers that when arbitration is impossible to have recourse, singly or jointly, to the mediation of a third power, before declaring war.

At this point, Wm. J. Bryan rose, his appearance being heartily cheered:

"I cannot see," he said, "that people have any justification in killing each other before investigating the question involved. There is no question of the sufficient importance of this. I want to move an amendment to Herr Von Plener's recommendation, to be appended to the commission's report. It goes further than his without going too far. This is my resolution:

"'If a disagreement should occur between contracting parties, which in the terms of the proposed arbitration treaty need not be submitted to arbitration, they shall, before declaring war, or engaging in any hostilities whatever, submit the question to The Hague court, or some impartial international tribunal for investigation and report, each party reserving the right to act independently afterwards.'

"This resolution, I put in order that there shall be no more shedding of human blood."

Mr. Bryan's amendment and Herr Von Plener's recommendation were supported by the German delegates and will be discussed to-day.

Seize $16,000 Worth of Furs.

Wallaceburg, July 24.—A large quantity of valuable furs stolen in New York (valued at $16,000) was traced by detectives through Montreal and Toronto to Chatham, Ont., where the trail was lost for a time. A clue obtained at Chatham yesterday, however, put Chief Compeau on the track afresh and it resulted in the capture of Jos. Jackson and his two sons in a house here they had recently rented, and where they were at work dressing the furs. The thieves and their plunder were immediately taken to Chatham.

Lad's Brother Blamed.

SOLDIERS VS. SAILORS.

Four Privates of R. C. R. at Quebec Locked Up on a Probable Charge of Murder.

Quebec, July 25.—Shortly after 11 o'clock Monday evening three soldiers in khaki uniform made their appearance on the cross wall at the end of Dalhousie street and challenged some of the sailors on the schooner J. M. Taylor, from Barbadoes, unloading molasses at the wharf, to come up on the wharf and fight. The soldiers carried their insults to such a point that some of the crew went ashore. A general row then started on the wharf, in which the soldiers used their belts and buckles to advantage. One of the latter gave a whistle and several other soldiers put in an appearance. The sailors then ran towards the schooner, probably to get help, and as they did so, one of them, Thomas Powers, was stabbed in the back between the shoulders, and fell into the water, between the schooner and the wharf.

Another of the crew, William Tyor, also fell in, as well as a sailor from the Empress of Britain.

The two former never rose, but the sailor from the Empress was picked up by James Finn, a young sailor from the Arctic. Powers and Tyor were pulled out later, but were both dead. Powers hailed from Ireland, while Tyor was a resident of London, England.

At 3.30 the detectives arrested Privates Dominick Corrigan, 32 years of age; Peter Walsh, 27; Edouard Lapointe, 18, and W. Higgins, 29, all members of the R. C. R. Corrigan has a fresh cut in the forehead.

Most of the sailors of the Arctic are held as witnesses of a fatal row here, and the ship's departure for the far north is again delayed.

ENGINE PLUNGES INTO LAKE.

Locomotive and Crew Lost in 150 Feet of Water.

Spokane, Wash., July 25.—At least seven lives were lost, seven persons were seriously injured and a score of others sustained cuts and bruises in a wreck of the fast mail train on the Great Northern about a mile east of Camden, Wash., 35 miles east of Spokane, when the locomotive, mail, baggage and smoking cars left the rails on emerging from a tunnel, and plunging over a 70-foot embankment, were submerged in the waters of Diamond Lake. Spreading rails is given as the cause.

Immediately after the smoker struck the water there was a blinding flash, which spread over the part of the car not submerged, and a fire followed. The fact that the couplings did not break on the dining, tourist and sleeping cars, was the only thing that averted even greater loss of life.

Engineer Munson and Fireman Bell evidently stuck to their posts, and it is believed, too, that the locomotive is in from 100 to 500 feet of water.

Two divers have made a dozen attempts to find the locomotive, but they were not successful.

War to Knife Knife to Hilt !

Premier Stolypin's Instructions To Russian Governors.

Ordered to Strike and Spare Not the Enemies of Society—Events of the Day Show That Government Includes Among These Not Only Socialists and Revolutionists But Also Educated Members Of Constitutional Democratic Party.

St. Petersburg, July 25.—War to the knife and the knife to the hilt, with revolution, was proclaimed yesterday by Premier Stolypin in a telegram addressed to the division governor-generals, governors and prefects throughout Russia, and to the viceroy of the Caucasus, who are ordered to strike and spare not in efforts to preserve order and crush the enemies of society.

Included in this category, as shown by the events of the day, are not only Revolutionists and Socialists, but also the educated Liberal and landed classes represented in the Constitutional Democratic party, whose clubs everywhere have been closed, and all the progressive newspapers which are not permitted to lift their voices anywhere throughout the entire land.

Stolypin's Telegram.

Premier Stolypin's telegram is as follows: "In conformity with instructions received from the Emperor with the view to securing full co-operation between the different local authorities, I hereby inform you that the Government expects you to exercise your vigilant and untiring supervision over your subordinates so that order may be promptly and definitely restored.

Must Be Put Down.

"Disturbances must be suppressed and revolutionary movements must be put down by all legal means. The measures you take must be carefully considered. The struggle begun is against the enemies of society and not against society itself. Consequently wholesale repression cannot be approved of. Impudent and illegal acts are likely to give rise to discontent instead of conducing to calm and cannot be tolerated.

Intentions of the Czar.

"The intentions of the Emperor are immutable. The Government firmly desires to assist in the amendment of legal procedure and the laws hitherto enforced which no longer serve their purpose. The old regime will be regenerated, but order must be fully maintained. You must act on your own initiative, as you are invested with responsibility. Firm and vigorous steps taken on these lines will doubtless be upheld by the best part of society."

Anxious For Strike.

The railroaders are anxious to have the general strike declared at once. Members of the Railway Employes' Union, with whom the Associated Press correspondents here and in Moscow have talked, declare that they were ready to walk out at the first call from the League of Leagues, with which the union is federated.

Arranging Secret Caucus.

The Constitutional Democratic Club and two other political clubs were closed last night by the police. A caucus of Constitutional Democrats was being held at the time. Prince Paul Dolgoroukoff, chairman of the central executive committee appointed at Viborg on Monday, has called a meeting of that committee, which will arrange a secret caucus to-day, to discuss further tactics.

Meetings were held last night in a dozen houses here and just across the frontier railway employes, peasants, Socialists and Revolutionists are discussing the best plan of action to throw the whole machinery of the Government out of gear.

Agrarian disorders have broken out near St. Petersburg.

For Military Dictatorship.

The way has been prepared for a military dictatorship by a proposition now under consideration at Peterhof to create an advisory council to assist the Emperor. The plan, which is foredoomed to failure, seems to be a deliberate plot of the Court Camarilla to induce the Emperor to entrust the direction of affairs to an advisory council, and while nominally the council would retain the authority the camarilla would gradually absorb its power and exercise a virtual dictatorship, as did Count Loris-Melikoff's Committee of Public Safety during the terrorism preceding the assassination of Alexander II.

Douma Members Home.

Most of the members of the outlawed Parliament arrived here yesterday from Viborg. A popular demonstration was prevented, but the members were not molested. On the train it had been arranged that the members of the various groups, if not arrested, should hold a caucus last evening and confer on the next step.

Before leaving Viborg, it was arranged, through underground revolutionary channels, to distribute the address to the country, hundreds of thousands of copies of which have already been surreptitiously printed. The members of Parliament, therefore, have already opened an alliance with the purely revolutionary organizations.

Appeal to Army.

The members of the Group of Toil and their allies, the proletariat organizations of St. Petersburg, were in active consultation Monday night and yesterday. While they fully endorsed the Parliamentary address to the country, so far as it goes, they consider that it should be followed up by an appeal to the army, preparatory to an uprising, which they consider inevitable, in the cities and country. Such an appeal will probably be issued immediately.

The Polish members of Parliament has issued a formal statement, expressing full sympathy with the struggle for a constitutional regime on a Democratic basis, but adding that they preferred to consult their constituents before committing Poland.

Papers Suppressed.

No word of the proceedings of the members of Parliament at Viborg, or of the address adopted, has been permitted to be published. Telegrams from the provinces, telling of the universal indignation aroused by the dissolution and even those from abroad, outlining public opinion in foreign countries, have been emasculated or suppressed. The editions of The Rech, Strama and The Twentieth Century (formerly The Russ), were confiscated as they left the press yesterday morning.

Cossacks Refuse to Fire.

At two meetings Monday night the Cossacks sent to disperse them refused openly to do so, and fraternized with the workmen. This is partially confirmative of the revolutionists' boast that the troops will not fire again upon the people.

Death Sentence.

Proclamation announcing that the death sentence has been imposed on the Emperor, Gen. Trepoff, M. Pobiedonostseff, who was procurator-general of the holy synod; Gen. Orloff, the "pacificator" of the Baltic provinces, and others, have been scattered over part of Peterhof. The terrorists are said to have succeeded in nailing copies of the sentence on the doors of Gen. Orloff's and Gen. Trepoff's quarters.

The Dairy Industry.

President Creelman of the Ontario Agricultural College of Ontario indicates danger to the dairy industry through the scarcity of labor, and declared that if manual help cannot be obtained the only recourse is to machinery that will do the work equally as well. He further stated that "seventy per cent. of the cheese on the English market is Canadian. This amounts to thirty million dollars per annum. Hence anything that would affect this industry would be fatal. The danger is lack of help.

The President added that at the college at the present time a United States milking machine is being tried Like some other machines it does the actual milking in a capable manner, but its ultimate success does not depend upon that alone. Will the amount of production be as great with the new way as by manual labor? Such is the question for which an answer is being sought just now. It will perhaps take two years more for an accurate reply to be obtained. Facts and figures must be advanced which will be plain to the farmer and upon which the latter can rely with absolute certainty. So far those operating the machine are extremely reticent about giving out any of these results, lest something happen that would prove the instruments to be inefficient. Just now it is thought old cows do not produce the quantity of milk when the machine is used for a length of time, though the calculation does not apply to young cows. With the machine one man is enabled to milk eight cows at once. The actual milking per cow is not done any faster than by hand. An ordinary vacuum pump operated by an engine of even half a horsepower is sufficient to run everything. By vacuum the milk is forced through rubber tubes into a large pail. In favor of the new way it must be said absolute cleanliness is insured, for no dirt can possibly enter the milk.

The Globe Sized Up.

The Vancouver Province, the leading Grit paper published on the Pacific coast, hands out the following free, frank and refreshing roast for that prince of hypocritical journals, the Toronto Globe;

> In an editorial in last Friday's issue, the Toronto Globe intimates that it is probable the Dominion Senate may be lobbied to perpetuate ex-Ministers' pensions by defeating the bill passed in the Commons. The Globe is indignant at this prospect, and says that "such a course on the part of the Upper Chamber would bring down a far severer line of criticism than has yet been heard regarding that part of our Government machinery."
> The virtuous wrath of the Globe at the likelihood of such action by the Senate is in keeping with the mealy-mouthed hypocrisy for which it has for two or three years been known. No paper in Canada, no matter how subject to party dictation, has ever played the same slavish and dishonest role which the Toronto organ has filled during that period. For ten years, from 1892 until 1902, it built up a reputation for honesty and fairness such as no other journal in Eastern Canada possessed. Since that time is has employed the reputation thus made to delude the people and conceal from the party and the country the political immorality of their leaders in Parliament. As the organ and advocate of the Government it has possessed a full and intimate knowledge of what was going on behind the scenes at Ottawa. It has connived at conspiracies organized to rob the people of their rights; it has justified the action of the country's representatives in accepting money offered by the Government as a bribe for carrying through Parliament a measure hostile to the spirit of the constitution; it has applauded the administration for commanding its officials to withhold from a legislative committee the information necessary to the full investigation of a gross raid, by a private corporation, upon the public treasury; it has been the defender of corruption, no matter how coarse, and the champion of men whose success in public life is a blot on the political morality of the country.

Another classical master for the High School at $1200 per annum. More expense for a whole lot of people whose children will never attend that institution. There seems to be considerable force in the recent utterance of a member of the local Board of Education, who said the High School was simply an expensive luxury, and that those who wanted it should pay for it.

"One Who Pays His Taxes" writes: "I would like to know if it is true, as I have heard, that there are three tax rolls at present in the hands of the Tax Collector. If it be true, perhaps someone connected with the city's financial affairs can tell us why it is allowed."

Our correspondent's remarks astonish us. Three rolls in the hands of the Collector! And work galore, and times so good. Surely people can pay their taxes now. If not, how could they ever pay in dull times? Talking of tax rolls, it strikes us we remember the Council, some years ago, passing a by-law to the effect that no Collector should have more than one set of rolls in his hands at one time. Is that a dead letter, or what became of it?

The worst part of the back taxes situation in Belleville, if what one hears is true, is the fact that the ones who owe back taxes are not poor people, but people who are positively burdened with wealth and property, and who refrain from paying their back taxes because they can do so by paying 5 per cent. interest on their arrearages, whereas, for the money they thus withhold from the city, they are able to obtain a much higher rate.

An explanation of this matter seems to be in order. No doubt Ald. Marsh, chairman of the executive committee, can throw some light on our correspondent's dark picture. We very much hope the case presented is not a true one. Certainly, if true, it calls loudly for remedy.

Bitter complaints are made by many people of the rowdy vandalism alleged to have taken place on Monday night last. It is said that dozens of flags and scores of yards of bunting were torn down and destroyed by hoodlums, "just for fun." It is a pity the perpetrators could not be detected and punished. Some people whose flags and decorations have been stolen and destroyed say they will never decorate again, no matter what the occasion may be. Can you blame them?

One effect of all the sewer construction which is taking place on the East hill, it is pointed out, will be to overload the main sewer on Bridge street, which, even at present, is hardly large enough. After a heavy rain, nowadays, the sewer becomes choked and the water backs up into many cellars. It looks as though, before very long, the authorities may have to instal a larger main sewer on Bridge St.

"The transference of," says the Montreal Herald, Ministerial organ, "Mr. W. T. R. Preston from London to the Orient, must undoubtedly be taken as involving a decision against him." The following, from the Ottawa Citizen, should make interesting reading for cheese makers in this district; "There should be no hesitation among Canadian cheese makers to adopt the impressed brand upon their make of cheese, just as the New Zealand and Australian products are branded and thereby protected from fraud. The hall mark is the protection of the genuine article and is not resorted to in the case of inferior products except when fraud is contemplated. Canada is to-day making cheese that is sought after by the British consumer and commands remunerative prices. Self interest should control makers to adopt some device to guard against unscrupulous men, whether in Canada, the United States or elsewhere, who would seek to take advantage of the demand which they have created by selling as Canadian goods an inferior make of cheese. It is not easy to conceive of a good reason why factory men selling on the Ottawa board should hesitate to adopt the simple yet sufficient protection of their product which would be afforded by the impressed brand. Every business and selfish instinct cries out for the adoption of this device. It means dollars in the pockets of the farmers and factorymen. The general suspicion which has been aroused against American products furnishes additional reason for Canadians protecting their trade."

Russell Sage had a horror of lawsuits. A clerk of Mr. Sage's said the other day: "I sought out the chief one morning in his office. 'You remember, sir,' I said, 'my complaint against my wife's uncle?' 'Yes,' he answered. 'Well,' said I, 'the man is obdurate, and I think of bringing suit against him. What do you advise?' Mr. Sage was silent a moment, frowning thoughtfully. Then he said, 'Listen. When I was a clerk in Troy I had a case against a man that seemed quite as good as yours. I visited a prominent lawyer, and laid the whole matter before him in detail. When I was through he told me that he would be delighted to take the case—that it was a case that I couldn't lose.' 'It can't lose?' said I. 'It can't lose,' he repeated. I rose, and took my hat. I thanked the lawyer, and told him that I wouldn't bring suit, after all. And then I explained that it was my opponent's side, and not my own, which I had laid before him.'

Election trials have become farcical Judge Russell, of Nova Scotia, was a slavish supporter of Laurier when in the Commons, and sat in parliament with the appointment to the Bench in his pocket. This eminent jurist postponed the trial of the corruptly-elected politicians who hold the Halifax seats until the 17th inst. When the case opened on July 17 the same judge ruled that the trial ought to have commenced on July 14. As his Lordship had allowed the trial to be delayed for three days too long, the corruptly-elected members were confirmed in the seats to which they had not been properly elected. Judge Prendergast, of Prince Albert, has found a rival, and will have to look after his laurels.

Barnum & Bailey's supreme "thriller" this year is the Auto-Bolide, which has been introduced to this country under the name of "The Dip of Death." It presents a young and pretty American girl, who takes a wild plunge into space in an automobile and finally lands on a runway, which carried the auto safely to the hippodrome track. This startling act is said to be the real circus sensation of the year.

A young son has come to stay at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Bamber.

The annual Sunday School picnic of the Methodist Church which was held at 'Bleecker's Grove' on the 18th inst., was indeed a fine day's outing: a beautiful day, a refreshment booth on the grounds, ice cream served, and a large crowd all of which constituted a merry time for young and old.

Misses Lila and Florence Nelson, of Demorestville, are spending a few days with their cousin, Miss Effie Spencer.

What is said to be a remarkably-expert high-wire act is presented in the Barnum & Bailey circus by a company known as the Carmen Troupe. There are five artists in the troupe, and they perform on the elevated wire with as much confidence as upon the ground. Single and double somersaults, from shoulder to shoulder, while balancing in the air, and many other difficult feats are among the novelties introduced. The feats of La Belle Carmen, one of the young girls of the troupe, are described as marvellous beyond precedent.

SPORTING NOTES.

A remarkable game of ball was pitched recently by Wilhelm of the Birmingham team. Montgomery was shut out without a hit or run. Only twenty-seven batters faced Wilhelm, and not one of them reached first base.

Englishmen have taken the victory of the Belgian eight for the Grand Challenge cup at Henley philosophically, and no secret is made of the fact that as much was expected. For some time past the Belgians had been coached by Englishmen and had used an English boat. But there is an opinion that Leander could have beaten them had they been on hand with a crew.

It was stated some years ago, just about the time that Mr. Duggan removed to the lower provinces, that he might some day or other become the designer of an America's cup challenger. When this statement was made it was made without any apparent foundation. This year Mr. Duggan has designed a boat which is now in the water and which is said to be as much of an America's cup defender as any boat, about a third the size of the boats that are used for the cup races can be. This boat is about twenty feet waterline and about forty feet over all. The creation of this boat has again revived the old rumors.

Major Delmar (1.59 3-4) trotted the last half of a comparatively slow mile at Cleveland a few days ago in 59 1-4 seconds.

Major Brino, the well-known pacer, reduced his record to 2.14 1-2 at Montreal on Saturday last in the second heat of a race. He was forced out by Gracie Pointer.

King Edward is to have a big racing cutter built for him on the Clyde. She will be designed by Mr. Barnett, who was the late Geo. L. Watson's draughtsman, and will be built by D. & W. Henderson of Meadowbank. It is probable that the Marquis of Graham will have a similar craft built for him.

HOT AND COLD WATER.

How to Use These Remedies to the Best Advantage.

Hot or cold water is excellent as an application for inflammation, congestions or abrasions, but how many people know which to apply in particular cases while awaiting the arrival of medical relief? Not many, and the mistakes made in some instances are ludicrous.

Take the barber, for example, who has cut his patron's face. He generally washes the face with a towel soaked in warm water, often pressing it right into the injury, and then wonders why the blood flows from the cut so freely. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred if he had used cold water, and the colder the better, the blood would have ceased to flow from the injury altogether, as the cold would have a tendency to contract the openings in the torn blood vessels. In all cases of such cuts or abrasions very cold water will at least reduce the amount of bleeding if it doesn't stop it altogether, and yet, singularly enough, boiling water will have the same effect.

Water below the boiling point increases the flow, but above that degree decreases it. In surface inflammations or congestions cold water ought to be used, while if the condition is situated below the surface hot water is necessary as an application because it draws the blood toward the surface and thus stimulates the circulation through the part where it is most needed.

In cases of abscesses or pimples with pus forming in them, but which have not yet come to a head, the secretion of pus can be rapidly increased and the duration of the annoyance thereby decreased by applying hot water to them at frequent intervals.

Where the eye is inflamed or smarts, after a period of eye strain, such as night work often induces, hot applications are the things for relief, but the water used should be gradually allowed to cool off toward the end. Tired eyes will invariably be rejuvenated by adopting this method of treatment, and many headaches resulting from such a condition may thereby be prevented or cured.

BLEAK SHETLAND.

Its Swarms of Sea Gulls and Its Lone Tree.

Up a little lane off Lerwick's one street there is a garden. At least, it is an inclosed space. In the middle of this space there is a tree. It is not a very tall tree; you could, in fact, toss a biscuit over its branches, but still it is a tree—the only tree in Shetland. And Shetland is proud of it. Children who are brought for the first time to see the wonders of one streeted Lerwick are shown this tree. This is not fiction. It is the only tree in Shetland.

As there are no trees in Shetland, there are no birds, except, of course, the sea gulls, which you can number by the thousand. The sea gulls are the sparrows of Lerwick, and, as such, they have a greater share in the town's life than have the sparrows of London. In the morning time you will note that a sea gull sits on every chimney pot. Sea gulls swoop and hover over every roof in the town.

The air is full of their strange, high, plaintive, haunting cries. Their sad, shrill, long drawn cries are to Lerwick as the chattering of sparrows or the cawing of rooks are to us in England. Every house has its own familiar sea gulls and every street its own band of sea gulls. They never mix. The children in each house have a pet name for their own particular sea gulls, and, having called them to them by those names, they feed them every day. And each sea gull knows what is meant for him. No sea gull attached to one house ever seeks to eat the food scattered from the house next door. He does not dare; the other gulls would kill him. So all day long the sea gulls hover and call over the roofs of Lerwick. The people of the town, if they come across a little pile of rice laid upon the roadway, step over it with care. They know that it is placed there for some sea gull. And at night the sea gulls leave their own appointed chimney pots, and fly gracefully away to their resting places on the rocks of the Isle of Noss.—London Express.

Hiccough at Dinner.

Many persons are debarred from dining out owing to their liability to contract hiccough during a meal. As a rule when caused by food it comes on at once, and equally as a rule the food causing it is hot. Soups are more likely to provoke hiccough than solids are. It is a good plan to forego soup, which can be done without causing remark, says Home Notes. Or one may eat a little bread before taking it. A third plan is to drink a little cold water and to take the soup in very small sips.

The Best of the Poem.

Naggus—What are you going to do with the hero and heroine of that magazine story you're running now? Marry them? Borus—Certainly. They will be married in the last chapter. Naggus—I'm glad of it. It will serve them right.

A Hard Case.

"You say you had to give the patient chloroform twice?"

"Yes," replied the dentist. "I had to give it to him the second time to extract the money."

DRINK WHEN YOU EAT

TAKE AS MUCH WATER AS YOU WANT WITH YOUR MEALS.

It Is Excellent For the Digestion, It Is Claimed, as Neither Gastric Juice Nor Pepsin Work Properly Unless Largely Diluted With Water.

How much water should we drink and when should we drink it are questions so simple that at first sight their discussion seems superfluous. One would naturally answer, "Drink all the water you wish when you are thirsty," but authorities say, "Drink more than you wish when you are not thirsty," for they recommend that a gallon or so be drunk between meals, which is more water than we need and the very time the system least demands it. Usually we experience thirst during or directly after eating.

Inasmuch as 87 per cent of the whole body is water, which is, of course, being used up every moment, there is no question that we should drink of this element copiously, but it is a serious question whether we should refrain from water at meals—the time we particularly desire it.

There is a class of persons, ever growing more numerous, that believes that whatever is is wrong. For the natural and simple they would substitute the artificial and complicated. To drink water while or directly after eating is a natural instinct. Give a dog his dinner, putting a bowl of water near it, and observe that he will first eat all he can and then immediately drink. Wild animals look for a stream after feeding. Cage birds will stop pecking at seed to peck at water. Children have a perpetual thirst, and I have seen babies that, unlike young Oliver, have refused to eat more when denied water after every few mouthfuls.

It is especially important that babies be given what water they wish and at the time they wish it, which is usually at table.

The thinner food is the more easily and thoroughly is it digested; in fact, it cannot be digested until it has been made liquid by the gastric and intestinal juices. Indigestion is caused often by food that has not been sufficiently moistened by the digestive secretions.

There are sound physiological reasons for our craving water with meals. Water is the solvent that constitutes 95 per cent of the gastric juice. Now, when one eats a hearty meal and does not drink, the amount of water in the stomach is not sufficient thoroughly to moisten the great quantity of food, and this makes digestion difficult. On the other hand, when enough water is ingested with the food the latter is well moistened and broken up, the digestible particles being then readily acted on by the gastric juice and afterward absorbed. Again, when the partially digested food (chyme) passes into the intestines it is most important that it be very moist, particularly as water is constantly absorbed from the chyle in the large intestine. Bad cases of constipation are caused by dry chyle remaining in the intestines, where it sets up an inflammation that sometimes proves fatal, dry faeces, of course, resisting peristaltic action. The excrement of persons suffering from constipation is always dry and hard and is a potent cause of appendicitis.

The idea that water drinking at meals unduly dilutes the gastric juice is nonsensical, water being not so palatable that one is apt to drink more than his digestive functions require. As a matter of fact water generally facilitates the digestion of albuminous substances. In this connection Dr. A. Jacobi in his work on "Infant Diet," page 67, says:

"In experiments upon digestion of albumen with gastric juice obtained from the stomach of animals it was noticed that after a certain time the process began to slacken, but was renewed merely by the addition of water. The gastric juice became saturated with the substance it had dissolved and ceased to act upon what remained until it had been diluted. In the living stomach this dilution is of even greater importance, for it permits of the immediate absorption of the substances soluble in water and which do not require the specific action of the gastric juice." Neither the gastric juice nor pepsin has any true digestive action unless they be largely diluted with water.

It goes without saying that it is not the food that is ingested, but that which is digested, that does good, and this principle holds good with water, which is practically a food. Now, when one resists the perfectly natural desire to drink while eating he may be not thirsty several hours afterward, but he is advised nevertheless to force himself to drink at that time. But if he drinks then, the water, having no food to mix with it, will go through him, as it were—that is, it will do no good.

The importance of water to the human economy may be inferred from the various purposes it subserves. First, it softens and dissolves solid foods, thus facilitating their mastication and digestion; second, it maintains a due bulk of blood and the structures of the body; third, it keeps substances in solution or suspension while moving in the body; fourth, it supplies elements in the body's chemical changes; fifth, it makes easy the elimination of waste material; sixth, it discharges superfluous heat by transpiration through the skin and by emission through other outlets, and, seventh, it supplies in a convenient form heat to or abstracts heat from the body. Some of these functions are performed by water in its liquid state and others in a state of vapor.

Have you indigestion? Try water instead of drugs with your food.—G. Elliot Flint in New York World.

INTERIOR DECORATING

That's Our Business

And we keep an experienced staff of workmen busy the year round.

True we do outside painting also, but we give preference to decorating.

We have been so busy with our interior work this year that we have found it impossible to do much exterior work.

The service we render our customers is par excellent—better far than is found elsewhere—we have the materials and the methods—have the ideas and the designs. This is why we have so much decorative work continually ahead of us.

Most people understand that we do better work and use better materials than is usually used by painters. This is another reason for our everlasting busy-ness.

We use white lead in all our work absolutely better than any other lead that can be found and superior to anything carried on sale in Belleville—and we can prove it. Work with this lead will wear longer by 40 per cent and look as much better.

Fatal Fall From Car.

Detroit, July 25.—Mrs. M. I. Youmans, 49 years old, of Orillia, Ont., is dead as the result of stepping from a rapidly moving Jefferson avenue car late Monday night. Her injuries were not apparent on examination, and in a short time she was able to walk upstairs to bed. Yesterday morning a relapse came, and an hour later she died. She leaves a husband at Hamilton, Ont., a son at Peterboro, three other children at Orillia, and a sister living in South Grove street, Ypsilanti. She came to Detroit May 10 for treatment for deafness.

Six-Year-Old Boy Hero.

New York, July 25.—To save a little boy and girl, each a year older than himself, Willie Murphy, 6 years old, of Neptune avenue, Coney Island, bravely met his death on the trestle work of the culver line across Coney Island Creek. He was killed by a train which he could have avoided in the seconds he used in pushing the other children off the trestle to the mud banks and shallow water below.

Too Much Married.

Detroit, July 25.—Theodore H. Marcey, the Hamilton, Ont., man, arrested on a charge of bigamy made by his first wife, who was a Miss Califas of Morriston and Hamilton, and who now resides in Flint, Mich., is bound over to stand trial.

Stomach Troubles

Mrs Sue Martin, an old and highly respected resident of Faisonia, Miss., was sick with stomach trouble for more than six months Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets cured her. AS SMOOTH AS A BILLIARD TABLE.

Your comfort on a railway journey very largely depends upon the roadbed of the route you select. No matter how luxurious the coaches, or how much personal attention you receive from the employees, you cannot be comfortable if jolted and jarred by a poor and irregular roadbed. On the Lake Shore Railway no expense has been spared to make a roadbed as nearly perfect as the most skilful engineering could build, and as a result, throughout the entire length and breadth of the system the right of way is as smooth as a billiard table. No jolts or jars, nor dust nor dirt. This perfection of service extends throughout the entire system. Lake Shore trains are the most luxurious, they are equipped with every comfort and convenience and are run at highest speed and in safety. They run on time. For your own sake you should see that your ticket reads "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway." Write for full information about rates and routes to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, O., or W. J. Lynch, Passenger Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

TYPHOID FEVER.

Sources of This Dangerous and Protracted Disease.

Although there is always more or less typhoid fever in most of the larger cities of this country, the late summer and autumn are the seasons when it is most to be feared.

The disease is not so formidable, as regards the mortality, as some others, but its great length and the evil consequences which sometimes follow it in the form of weak heart, weak spine or nervous disorders make it quite as serious as some which are more fatal, but far less protracted.

Unless one knows how the disease is usually spread one cannot hope to avoid it, and so it may be useful to consider in what ways the germs of the malady find their way into the system.

Water is the usual vehicle for typhoid germs, as is well known, and probably all great outbreaks of the disease in cities are due to an infected water supply. This has been strikingly shown in Philadelphia, where some parts of the city are supplied with filtered water and others with unfiltered or mixed water. Comparing two parts of the city in which the conditions, except as to water supply, are almost the same, it was found that in the one supplied with filtered water the occurrence rate of typhoid fever was one in five thousand, while in the others, in which the unfiltered water was drunk, it was one in sixteen hundred.

But a city with an ideal water supply may be scourged with typhoid fever, although less severely, through the medium of impure ice, and it is almost as important to know where the ice is cut, or with what water it is made, if artificial, as where the city water comes from. Not long since a number of officers on one of the United States ships in the Mediterranean squadron were taken down with typhoid fever. When the source of the infection was traced it was found to be some ice bought at Athens, the ice machine on shipboard having broken down.

Another source of infection is found in oysters that have been fattened in streams contaminated with sewage. Not only has typhoid followed the eating of these fish, but the typhoid bacilli have been found in the stomachs of the oysters.

Raw vegetables used for salads may have been grown in soil contaminated with slops used as fertilizers or may have been washed in infected water.

Unless a water supply is above suspicion all that used for drinking, tooth cleaning and in the kitchen should be boiled and the drinking water cooled by putting vessels containing it on the ice, not by putting ice in the water itself.

Finally, great care should be taken to screen all food from flies, for if there is a case of typhoid fever in the neighborhood flies may become most active distributers of the poison.—Youth's Companion.

TIMELY TOPICS.

"IN A MINUTE."

O woman in our hours of rush,
You, all our "hurry ups" to hush,
Call to us from the floor above
In gentle accents; "Yes, my love,
"In a minute!"

Five moments ere the train be due
We make one last appeal to you—
And when the hasting train we miss
We moodily remember this;
"In a minute!"

No doubt in Eden's good old days
Poor Adam sat in dumb amaze
And with his wrath was like to burst
At hearing then and there the first;
"In a minute!"

Did Cleopatra on the Nile
Make Antony wait quite a while,
Until she hooked the final clasp?
Perchance she murmured to that asp;
"In a minute!"

Ah, history might have been changed;
Great nations had not been estranged;
The block had not known some one's head
If some fair woman had not said;
"In a minute!"

What is a minute? Woman, pray,
Is it an hour, or half a day?
How's that? You call in tones of glee
That you'll be glad to answer me
"In a minute!"

When o'er the world rings Gabriel's trump
And all the saints and sinners jump,
I know I'll stand on some pink cloud
And hear, from back of all the crowd;
"In a minute!"

At the volunteer competition at Bisley, England, the Canadian marksmen held their own and carried off a number of prizes. In the Grand Aggregate Captain Mitchell, 39th, won £2; Lieut. Semple, 93rd, £2; Major Dillon, 111th, £2; Capt. Forrest, 123rd, £2; Staff-Sergt. Hayhurst, 136th, £2; Capt. Skedden, 147th, £2. In the Volunteer Aggregate Captain Mitchell, 59th, won £2. In the Handsworth contest Private F. L. Allen, 7th Fusiliers, London, Ont., took first place, winning £16. Other Canadians who figure farther down the prize list are Mitchell, Huggins and Bayles. In the shooting for Martin's Challenge Cup Sergt.-Major S. J. Huggins 13th Regiment, Hamilton, won the second prize of £26. In the Wantage Sergt.-Major Huggins was in 8th place. For the Service Rifle Championship Staff.-Sergt. Kerr, 48th Highlanders, Toronto, won the bronze jewel and £2 4s. Sergt.-Major Huggins was first in the Prixley shoot, winning £11, and third in the Burt contest, winning £15 17s.

An Anglo-colonial lodge of Free Masonry has been consecrated by the Grand Secretary of England, in London. It is intended that the lodge shall meet every month throughout the year, thus affording a Masonic meeting place during the off season, when nearly all the lodges in London are in recess, but when many visitors from the colonies are in that city. The number of lodges of English register is now upwards of six hundred in the London district, and 1,500 in the provinces.

A short time ago the News of Toronto, when the moon was at its full, raved against the Ontario Government for dismissing Hastings, license inspector, of Toronto. Now it has Bastedo, fishery commissioner, on the brain. What its attitude will be ere the moon wanes, it is difficult to foretell. The Intelligencer is as strongly opposed to what is understood to be the "spoils system" as the News possibly can be, but in the two cases referred to, they richly deserved dismissal, unless political brigandizing by civil servants is to be recognized as a virtue. In the Bay of Quinte district fishery and license officials were the head and front of all election manipulations. They earned their reward and have got just what they deserve.

Andrew D. White, former President of Cornell University, declared the time has come when technical appeals in criminal cases should no longer be allowed by the courts. Referring to the situation in New York City, Dr. White said; "One of the worst results of these cases is the growing opinion among the people at large that men with money can so delay justice by every sort of chicanery that there is virtual immunity from punishment for the highest crimes." In Canada technical objections set free all election frauds, and allow the guilty ones to sit in parliament, instead of a jail.

Warning to Bearded Men.

"It is well that old men should wear beards," said a physician, "for when one becomes old one should be spared the exertion of daily shaving. But I would like to issue a warning to all beard wearers. I would like to shout 'Keep your beards dry!' in a voice loud enough to be heard around the world. Were those words heeded many cases of sore throat, cold and influenza would be avoided, and many deaths would be indefinitely put off. So many men with beards neglect when they wash their faces to wipe their beards dry! A beard a foot long demands a lot of toweling. It should be toweled after every wash a good five minutes. Otherwise it is damp. The owner goes about with this damp thing upon his delicate and sensitive throat. Then, if he takes tonsilitis or influenza, he blames the American climate. There are too many damp beards among us. Too many men, washing their faces three or four times a day, have their beards damp and clammy a good three hours daily."

I Love You.

A Danish paper compares "I love you" in many languages. Here are some of them—the Danish paper is our only authority for their correctness: The Chinaman says, "Uo ngai ni:" the Armenian, "Ge sirem ez hez;" the Arabian, very shortly, "Nehabeeck;" the Egyptian, similarly, "N'achkeb;" the Turk, "Sisi sevejorum," and the Hindoo, "Main tym ko pijar karyn." But overwhelming is the declaration of love of an Eskimo, who tries to win the chosen one by the pleasing sound of the dainty little word: "Univifigssaerntdluinaierfinajungnarsigujak."

The Checkerboard Town.

Improvements, as St. Paul said of science, is often "falsely so called." If the real estate men would but forget the checkerboard idea in laying out a new town and would take a good landscape gardener into their confidence and the contour of the land into their consideration and plant trees accordingly suburbanites would rise up and call them blessed.—Country Life In America.

VARICOCELE CURED

☞ NO NAMES USED WITHOUT WRITTEN CONSENT.

Confined to His Home for Weeks.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on a double varicocele. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy and Kergan, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skillful. He wrote them and got the New Method Treatment for me. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $12 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $21 and never lose a daily. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment.

Leather Breeches.

A hundred and fifty years ago the farm hands and house servants of England were clothed in leather. A good pair of leather breeches was said to pass from father to son as an heirloom. Then a boy went to school as well protected as an armored cruiser. The author of "Didisburye in the '45" offers some observations upon these articles of common wear: The test of a good pair was to try if they would stand upright of themselves when nobody was in them. If they would do so they were good, strong stuff and likely to last for many years. My father remembered a prentice lad coming to his father, whose fond mother had provided him with such a pair, and they were the means of a "vast of fun" in a game that is unknown in these days—that is, for the boys to set the breeches upright and then jump into them without touching them with the hands. It was probably a pair of such leather breeches that the Windsor boy was wearing when George III. asked him if he did not know that the man before him was the king.

"Yes," said the boy.

"Then why don't you go on your knees, and you might kiss the king's hand," said the king.

"Because I'd spoil my breeches."

Queer Names.

There are some queer nooks and corners in the state of Maine, and many of the titles of the smaller towns and localities are worthy of special mention. Near Otisfield is Pugleyville, while Hog valley is a certain picturesque retreat located near Raymond. Dog Corner, Hencoop cove, is a well known place in Winthrop, while out on the Coon road strange things have sometimes happened. A mile long is Pin Hole hill, the steepest ever, and all the way up are little rests "to hang the pins on," people say. Over Poland way is the hunger inspiring name of Beeftown, while highly suggestive of negligee was the old name of Saccarappa. One does not have to die to pass through Purgatory, and some of the most prominent men in the state have hailed from this sinful region. Neither are the gates of Eden closed to all mortals, but nowadays one journeys via an ancient toll bridge that leads the traveler straight to this enchanted land.

The First Armored Ship.

According to the best authorities on curiosities of the navy and warfare in general, the first armored vessel was launched in the year 1530. It was one of the fleet manned by the Knights of St. John and was entirely covered with sheets of lead. The accounts of the times leave us in darkness as to the thickness of this lead armor, but they are very positive in the statement that they were of sufficient strength to "successfully resist all the shots of that day." At the siege of Gibraltar in 1782 the French and Spaniards used war vessels which were armored with "light iron boom proofing over their decks and to the water's edge." The very first practical use of wrought iron plates as a defense for the sides of vessels was by the French in the Crimean war in 1853.

Jumpers of the Sea.

Many of the inhabitants of the sea are good jumpers and some have become famous. Among them should be mentioned the tarpon or silver king, a huge fish with scales that gleam like silver. In the Pacific waters the tuna, an ally of the horse mackerel, is noted for its leaps. Sometimes a school sweeps up the coast, and the powerful fish, often weighing 800 pounds, are seen in the air in every direction. They dart like an arrow, turn gracefully five or six feet in the air and come down, keeping the water for acres in a foam, and, if not the greatest, they are certainly the most graceful of the jumpers of the sea.

Maine's Female Warrior.

During the war between the states when it became necessary to draft men for the army a recruiting officer, Parker Mears by name, went to an island off the coast of Maine called Loud's Island. It claimed to be a plantation. As the boat neared the shore a tall, brawny female, the mother of several stalwart sons, appeared on the rocks and as the officer set foot on shore sternly demanded his business.

"After men for Uncle Sam," he answered.

She immediately began to pelt him with big, hard potatoes, and they came so fast and furiously that he was obliged to flee to the boat and row away as fast as possible. Mr. Mears, when a little excited, stuttered badly. Relating the experience, he ended with, "G-g-give her po-po-po-po-tatoes-enough a-a-and sh-sh-she'll t-t-t-take Ri-Ri-Richmond."

HAMLIN GARLAND

COPYRIGHT, 1903, BY HAMLIN GARLAND

"They will never do that, but Carter may. You might take him. He's scared nearly out of his skin, but he might be willing to go. Come with me and we will see."

In the headquarters of the organization Raymond and Munro found Carter and his staff loudly discussing measures and answering and sending messages. Dolan, the friendly reporter, was there, and also the representative of the Bozle Nugget. They were both deeply trusted, and their advice was most carefully considered. Upon seeing Raymond with Munro, Dolan rushed forward. "What's the meaning of this? Have the independents come in?"

Munro said quietly: "Boys, I want to be alone with the president. Clear the room, Sergeant Poole."

A tall young fellow in cowboy's dress drew a big revolver and, using it as a sort of baton, impassively drove every one but the president, his secretary and Raymond from the room.

Munro put Raymond's proposition before Carter in a few words. Carter turned white with fear.

"I can't do it. They'd kill me. They hold me responsible for everything that's been done here. The governor has wired me to meet him, but I dare not do it. It's suicide to do it."

"Then I will go alone," said Raymond, in vast disgust. "Give me a letter saying you would like to meet and confer with the sheriff to prevent bloodshed, and I will present it."

Carter was shaking with excitement over the responsibility thrust upon him. "I don't know what to say."

"I'll tell you what to say," put in Munro. "Tell him we are fully organised and heavily armed, but that we desire to avoid bloodshed and to that end invite him and the president of the Red Star company to meet with us and Raymond in the presence of the governor of the state, in the hope of arriving at a compromise."

Raymond was pleased. "That's the first note of sense I have heard uttered in this whole row."

When the letter was delivered to him Munro said: "Now, Carter, keep mum about this. If it works out, you can have all the credit for it; if it fails, I'll take the kicking."

The crowd in the outer room were consumed with curiosity as the two young men came out, but Munro said: "Get the recruits all together. I'll be back in half an hour and put them through the paces."

Mounting their horses, they set off down the trail in the thick falling snow, guided only by the dim lights in the valley.

"It's a tough night to be out, Rob, but you're less likely to be interfered with on that account. If you meet any of my pickets the countersign is 'contact—porphyry—and slate.'"

CHAPTER XXI.

Raymond's descent of the canyon was singularly uneventful. He met neither the invading army nor the patrol. Happily the storm lessened as he descended, and by dawn he was once more trotting with the calm, close adhering seat of the cowboy.

He had planned to go to a friend's house in the lower town, but with the coming of light and the blooming of the rose of the morning he resolved to ride directly to Barnett's. "My errand is an honorable one," he argued. "Why should I sneak into cover?"

The housemaid who let him into the house smiled upon him in a most friendly fashion. "We're glad to see you, sir. Shall I tell Mr. Barnett you are here?"

"I wish you would, and tell him I wish no one but himself to know of my presence."

Barnett was in bed, with a pot of coffee and some toast on a stand by his side, reading the morning papers.

"Hello, old man," he called out when the door was shut. "I'm mighty glad to see you, but I don't know what to do about you. What's the row, anyway? Have you come down to see Ann?"

Raymond took a chair near the bed. "Not exactly, but of course"—

"I understand, and I don't blame you. She came back from up there looking like a rose of Sharon. Of course you haven't had breakfast. Have some coffee. Touch that bell for me and we'll have something heartier."

"How is Mrs. Barnett?"

"Never better. I've got her locked in there." He pointed at an inner door. "I had an idea you were coming with important news from the front. I don't know about your being here; the people have got you mixed up with Munro in this thing, and I've had the devil's own job to convince them otherwise. I'm not a bit sure they won't want to arrest you and hold you as a hostage."

"That would be a nice job."

"Wouldn't it? But they've lost their heads completely. You see, these 'red neckers' hit us on a weak spot—they broke loose just as we were trying to float our biggest issue of stock and flattened out every deal till it looks like a square yard of nothing. Naturally we're all red headed as woodpeckers, and we're going to open these mines. We've got to open them or go broke. By the way, when did you come to town?"

"This minute."

"Ride! In this storm!" He rose on his elbow to survey him. "Great Scott, man, throw off those horrible boots and put on some dry socks and some slippers! Tumble the things out of that bottom drawer; you'll find all kinds there."

In the end he had his way, and so in warm, dry footwear and a smoking jacket the young miner ate his steak and drank his coffee while his host looked on and commented on his looks.

"You've taken a hand to the plow, haven't you? That fist is a wonder. And you've really struck it? Well, I'm glad of it. But you want to watch Curran. I'm told he's been to every lawyer in town with your papers in the attempt to break your grip on that vein."

"We are not worrying," replied Raymond.

When he had quite finished, Barnett said, "Well, now, Rob, what about it?"

Raymond was equally direct. "I'm here to try to persuade you not to send the sheriff and his men up the canyon."

"Whom do you represent, the union?"

"In a way, yes. I have a letter to you, and I come on behalf of the independents, who don't want to see bloodshed. There'll be a horrible mixup, Don, sure thing, unless your fellows are headed off. Munro's cowboys and desperadoes will fight; don't make any mistake about that."

"Who is this man Munro?"

Raymond looked at his friend steadily. "Don, the time has come to tell you something, but it's a secret!" His voice ended in a rising inflection. "It concerns only you and me—for the present."

Barnett reached out his hand. "All right, old man."

"Munro is really Jackson Hollenbeck. We were classmates and roommates at West Point. Do you remember reading some eight or nine years ago of a group of six cadets being dismissed for hazing and insubordination? I don't suppose you do, but I was one of that gang. Jack was another. We weren't so bad as we were represented, but they fired us all the same. I lost all track of Hollie, as we called him then."

"So that's where Munro gets his military training, and his real name is Hollenbeck." He smiled slyly. "What's yours?"

"Oh, mine is straight. I never tried to conceal my identity. I'm Robert Huston Raymond of Ohio, the man that 'swatted' his superior and got 'busted' for it. Since then I've lived a commonplace life."

"What was it all about? I never asked any questions before, but I'd like to know all about it."

"That's about all of it. I was a restless young cub and hated discipline, but that's of no value. What is important is this—Jack Munro's military training is being felt. Now, you mustn't ask me a single question as to conditions up there. I'm going back, and I must be able to say to Jack that I was faithful to my trust. If the sheriff will go back with me alone I believe I can get Jack to deliver the men that blew up the mine. Then if the Red Star people—you, in fact—will deal with the men fairly I think the whole situation will clear."

"I don't share your optimism. Those jackasses must be whipped before they will yield a point. They'd kill you and the sheriff both."

"I don't think so. I know Jack will protect us. He practically controls the camp at this minute. I have the countersign and can pass the patrol at any time today, and the sheriff, if he has the nerve, can ride with me straight to Jack's headquarters. Then I want you to meet some of the head men and arrange a new scale."

To this Barnett would not listen. "Once you admit that these men can dictate terms and where will their demands stop?"

Raymond spoke with some heat. "What I complain of is that you Red Star people are interfering with my business. You have inflamed the camp till I may be obliged to shut down at any moment. You have been unreasonable in treating with your men. It isn't so much a question of wages; it's a question of courtesy and decent regard for your fellows. Mackay was no man to make an issue of. He was, in fact, a conceited ass, and you know it. Now, Barnett, you must 'back water' here. The camp is in a bad temper, and you can't cure violence with violence."

"Well, I'll tell you what I'll do," said Barnett on sudden impulse, moved by Raymond's sincerity, "I'll call a meeting here of the sheriff, the mayor and one or two others, and we'll talk this over."

"All right, only you must keep my presence here a secret and be mighty careful not to put me in a false position."

"I'll take care of you." As he rose he added: "You lie down for awhile and rest while I collect my men."

Raymond followed slowly and rolled into his delicious bed with a sigh of deep pleasure.

When he awoke Don was standing over him smiling. "The council is on. Dress and come down to the library. I was right about the indignant citizens; they were all for arresting you. They understand that you are a pal of this man Munro, and I was obliged to put forth all my influence to save you."

This did not appeal to Raymond's sense of humor. "It's just that blind sort of bucking at the wrong minute that tangles things up. Munro is the one regulative force up there, and yet you fellows want to kill him off."

As Raymond stepped out into the hall Ann met him. "Good morning," she said, and her fine hand closed strongly on his. "Don has told me of your mission. I hope you'll succeed." She turned to Barnett. "Do you know where Louis is?"

"No. Haven't you seen him this morning?"

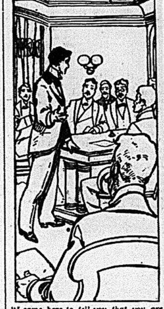
"No, and I'm afraid he has gone back to Skytown. The hostler said he took his pony and rode away about 8 o'clock." Her anxiety for her brother showed in the otherwise clear serenity of her eyes like a cloud in a summer sky.

"I am afraid to have him there when you are away," she said to Raymond. "Can you keep Louis out of it?"

"I think so."

"You must be sure or I will go back. I could keep him out of it to take care of me. Is Mrs. Kelly afraid?"

"Not a bit. I tried to induce her to come down here, but she refuses to make any change in her life. Even if the invaders storm the fort the Kelly household is out of range."



"I came here to tell you that you are mistaken."

"They really have a fort, then?"

"I shouldn't have said fort. I meant the hill."

"You said fort."

"I am here as a messenger of peace, not to betray military secrets," he replied, with a smile in his eyes. "And I must be careful even with you."

"What do you hope to do?"

"I hope to persuade the authorities here not to send these deputies up the canyon. I want to arrange an armistice—that is, a wait of a couple of weeks in which to meet and consider ways and means."

She checked herself. "You must go. They are waiting for you below. We will see you at luncheon?"

"Yes, I may not start till dark tonight."

"You have my best wishes."

The men assembled in the library were a grim lot. Mackay was no less square jawed than Banker Moore, and the squat, coarse featured, scowling sheriff resembled a bulldog. Don Barnett alone seemed not a part of the general massing of prejudice and passion, and yet he was one of the most pitiless of them all. The mayor, a large man with a plump and smiling face, seemed the only man likely to side with a peace messenger.

After general introductions Raymond took a seat and at Don's request reiterated his appeal for a stay of the advancing hordes.

"You think they'll fight?" asked the mayor.

"I know they'll fight."

"How many men does this man Munro"—

Raymond raised a warning hand. "Now, your honor and gentlemen, I am here merely as a peace envoy. I do not intend to utter one word which could by any force be twisted into revealing the camp secrets. If I betrayed these men my life wouldn't be worth a toothpick. They would quite properly mob me."

The mayor smiled as if it were all a joke. "Quite right, Mr. Raymond. I see the propriety of your attitude."

"I don't," said Mackay. "Raymond and Kelly have elected themselves into onlookers. If they had taken prompt action with us in this whole matter trouble would have been averted."

The mayor resumed his questions. "Who sent you? Whom do you represent?"

"Munro sent me."

"Who is Munro?"

To be continued.

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper

AGRICULTURAL ITEMS.

Crops for Suburban Farms.

I think that cauliflower, cabbage and sweet corn are about as good crops as a man can raise who lives out about fifteen to seventeen miles from Boston, although I have averaged to go three days a week into Boston for quite a while. And for a milkman—I am in the milk business as well—cabbage keeps the flow of milk up when the grass is dried up; so he gets a profit in milk as well as in selling the cabbage. I tell you, anyone who has not tried it will be surprised to know the shrinkage in milk after you stop feeding a little cabbage.—Samuel Natick, Mass.

Market Tomatoes.

In the cultivation of tomatoes we ridge the ground; we plow up to them, and make a mound fully ten inches higher than the space between the rows, and that over a distance of perhaps 2 1-2 feet, which gives a nice ridge over which to lay the vines. We don't let the vines sprawl around, we go around and take each vine and lay it right out where it ought to be, a man on each side of the row; and then if the vines grow too rank—too much wet weather or too much manure on the ground—we take a sickle and cut those tops off, two men on a row, one on each side. That enables the fruit which is set to mature early. We don't care anything about the late tomatoes on those vines: if we want any late tomatoes, we set the plants especially for that.

The variety which I have used has been Livingston's Perfection. I have tried a number of other varieties, some proving quite satisfactory, and, perhaps, as good as the Perfection, but the Perfection has been good enough for me. Strains vary; you may get a strain of one variety that would be worth twice as much as another strain.

Fortunate Seed Selection.

A Colorado cantaloupe grower has made a valuable discovery of a rust-resistant melon, which promises to be of immense value to the Rockyford cantaloupe industry. It seems that he had planted patches of the melons from seed obtained from five different seedmen. Rust attacked the melon patches just as the fruit was ripening and all of the crop was destroyed save one particular patch of those grown from the seed of one seedsman. Many of the hills of this strain of Rockyford seed remained green throughout the season and produced a good crop of melons. A quantity of seed from the rust-resistant hills was saved and afterward planted in comparison with ordinary seed. The experimenter, in reporting his results to the Department of Agriculture, stated; "On the rust-resistant hills melons were hidden under a healthy growth of vines, and were solidly netted with thick, firm flesh, and small seed cavity completely filled with seed. On the rusted hills the plants were almost devoid of leaves, and the small melons were prematurely ripe with thin, watery flesh, large open seed cavity and practically of no market value." The history of the strain of seed shows that some years ago a seedsman had saved the first seed from a healthy melon taken from a field of rusted vines, so that this most valuable type has been developed by the small process of saving seed from the best melons produced by plants which withstood attacks of rust when surrounding plants were destroyed by this disease.

What this one farmer has accomplished with this one crop can be followed by other farmers with not only the same but other crops, if they will be alert, while the crops are growing, to select and mark individual plants which show exceptional traits along the lines of prolific yield, early maturity, resistance to disease or other desirable quality, and save the seed separately from the plant showing such qualities. No one is in better position to notice these exceptional plants than the farmer, for he is in his fields, garden or orchard every day where these exceptional plants are produced. If one plant is a rust-infested wheat field is green or free from the disease, that is a plant to save seed from, as the basis of rust-resistant strain. If one hill of potatoes in a blighted field remains uninfected from disease, seed from that hill may produce a blight-resistant variety. If a squash plant is found that is distasteful to the squash bug, seed from that hill may produce squash vines which the bugs will not molest. The important fact should be noted that some plants are more resistant to disease and insect attacks than others. It is only a question of the farmer keeping his eyes open and seeing the resistant plant and propagating from it. The individual farmer has as great opportunity for doing this as each seedsman; in the aggregate, much greater.

DAIRY DEPARTMENT.

As a rule, a cow when bred for both milk and beef is not the most profitable kind for the dairyman to keep. But there are, however, two requisites essential for the best dairy cow, although she may not properly be called a dual-purpose cow in the sense that the term is usually applied.

A cow to be of the greatest value to the dairy must not only give a good quantity of milk of a good quality, but must also be capable of reproducing herself. That is, she must rear calves, that, with proper care, will fill her place in the dairy. With the tendency to crowd a cow to her limit, as a milk and butter producer, so prevalent among dairymen and breeders, this second requirement is in danger of being overlooked or neglected in the attempt to get the biggest milk record possible.

There is not only a possibility, but a probability, that our best dairy cows will be greatly impaired in this second, but not secondary, requirement in these days of milk and butter contests at fairs and cattle shows, where the tendency is to crowd the cow beyond what she can stand, and still retain a strong, healthy and vigorous constitution. Great care and skill are necessary in the breeding of dairy stock to perpetuate this second requirement if the welfare of the dairy cow of the future is considered. To illustrate, and, if possible, make clearer and more emphatic this point, permit me to cite a case of my own observation.

Early in the spring of 1905 the writer purchased, with others, two pure bred heifers, one two years old and the other three. The latter had but recently dropped her first calf, which was a good one, and the former soon after dropped her calf, also a good one. Both of these calves grew up vigorous and healthy.

Both cows gave about the same quantity of milk of equal quality during the first summer and fall, on the same feed and care.

As the time for them to freshen the second time approached, both being due about the same time, the younger one went dry for a short time, while the other continued to give milk up to time of calving.

Now which is the better cow, both giving about the same quantity of milk this summer? Some will say the one that gave milk the longest before having her second calf. Is she the most profitable cow for the dairy? Let us see. When she had her calf, although fully developed, it lacked vitality, and died in a few hours. The other gave birth to a healthy, vigorous calf, which was recently sold for a sum that will require a large amount of milk to equal in value.

Besides the first cow has nothing to leave to keep her place good in the dairy and should she continue to give a large amount of milk till old age impairs her usefulness, and does not leave any offsprings, or only weak and puny ones, with no vitality, her usefulness is at an end, while the other one with a goodly number of healthy offspring, of good quality, will be remembered long after she is dead and forgotten.

ROAD TO DAIRY PROFITS.

In its crop report for June, recently issued, the Massachusetts State Board of Agriculture includes an article on "Some Causes Affecting the Profits of Dairying," by F. Cooley, professor of animal husbandry and dairying at the Massachusetts Agricultural College. This report will be sent free on application to J. Lewis Ellsworth, Secretary State Board of Agriculture, State House, Boston, and those wishing it may have their names put on the mailing list to receive future issues.

In opening the article Professor Cooley says: "It is hardly necessary to assert that dairymen are deriving less profit from their investments and lower wages for their labor than they would like or even than that which a good business should lead its patrons to expect. The purpose of this paper is to notice briefly a few of the things that stand in the way of the best success of dairy farmers."

The most important factor in profitable dairying, says Prof. Cooley, is good cows. No particular type or breed can be recommended for all conditions, and the dairyman must study his situation and ascertain which breed is best adapted to his purpose. An analysis of the results of a number of experiments is given, showing the wide difference in profit between individuals in typical herds. All admit the value of better cows and the problem is how to get them. Many of those who supply milk for the city markets are so situated that they cannot raise their own cows, and must replace their herds by purchase. It is extremely difficult for them to obtain good cows in this way, owing to carelessness in breeding by those who have the cows for sale. Prof. Cooley urges that a pure-bred sire be used in all dairies where calves are reared, pointing out that where a common bull is used the average price received for heifers at maturity is only $32, while the choice progeny of superior stock will command $50 per head and often more. Here is an opportunity to largely increase the profits of the dairy at a comparatively slight expense.

The writer urges that feeds be produced on the farm as far as possible. Usually the best practice is to purchase only feeds rich in protein and raise the coarse fodders on the farm. Cows fed on starvation rations yield no profit and those overfed with expensive feeds are also kept at a loss. The point of highest profit in feed must be determined by experiment and calculation and varies with the locality and circumstances of the feeder.

The quality of the milk varies with the breed, period of lactation, and individual, and very little with the feed. The fat content of the first milk drawn is about two per cent, and that of the "strippings" eight to ten per cent. For this reason careful milking is of the utmost importance. Many illustrations of this fact are given.

Prof. Cooley strongly urges that it is important to know the cows, and says that the milk scales and the Babcock tester are necessary agencies for obtaining such knowledge. He advocates the forming of milk testing associations among the farmers, where the results can be obtained by co-operation at a minimum of expense, and gives figures showing that such associations are practical and comparatively inexpensive to the individual.

RING WORM AND DANDRUFF.

They are Each Caused by a Pestiferous Germ.

Ring worm and dandruff are somewhat similar in their origin; each is caused by a parasite. The germ that causes dandruff digs to the root of the hair, and saps its vitality, causing falling hair, and, finally, baldness. Without dandruff there would never be baldness, and to cure dandruff it is necessary to kill the germ. There has been no hair preparation that would do this until the discovery of Newbro's Herpicide, which positively kills the dandruff germ, allays itching instantly and makes hair glossy and soft as silk. Take no substitutes. There is nothing "just as good." Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

THE WORKBOX.

Baby's Knitted Hood.

Use two skeins of pink, one skein of cream-white Dresden Saxony yarn, one set of No. 16 steel needles, two yards of No. 7 ribbon.

Begin the hood at the back, using pink yarn.

Cast on 18 stitches.

1st row—Four purl, 2 plain, 4 purl, 2 plain, repeat to the end of the needle.

2nd row—Reverse the stitches of first needle.

5th row—Repeat from first needle.

Knit 18 rows, following the pattern. In the next 20 rows, increase one stitch in each end of needle every other throw.

Knit 34 more rows.

Then decrease the same as you have increased (10 times at each end of needle every other row). Take up the sides and add to the 18 stitches on the needle. Knit 64 stitches.

Take 32 stitches on a separate needle and knit them back and forth, taking one stitch in every row from the side needle to the 32 already on the needle, until there are 48 stitches left on each side of the needle. Knit two rows across, bind off.

Border—Use white yarn, taking up all stitches across the bottom of the hood, and knit 22 rows plain, bind off.

Take up all the stitches around the front of the hood and knit 34 plain rows, bind off. Finish with strings of ribbon, headed by rosettes, to tie.

HOW TO COMB THE HAIR.

"Few people really know how to comb their hair," remarked a woman who has a glorious crown of her own, probably because early in life she set herself to learn how to take the right care of it. "The average woman, dressing in a hurry, will dig the comb into her hair, and if a snarl happens she tugs at it until a whole bunch of loose hair comes out by the roots. Naturally any self-respecting hair would come out under such treatment.

"The hair can't be combed too much, but it should be done lightly, smoothly; and, when it comes to brushing, don't choose the hardest brush you can find, and go at your head as if you had a spite against it. The scalp ought to be warmed up, but not punished.

"Personally, I think a gentle massage, done with the tips of the fingers, is the best thing for the scalp, and consequently the hair. People talk about hair tonics—and no doubt an occasional tonic is needed when the hair has a tendency to dryness—but the best thing about the tonic is the massage the scalp gets when it is applied. Most scalps have enough natural oil, lying more or less dormant, and rubbing brings it out. I knew an instance where a woman coaxed out a fine head of hair on her husband's perfectly bald head simply by rubbing it with a gentle rotary motion of her finger ends for fifteen minutes every morning and night."

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

Common house ammonia is much better for cleaning porcelain than sandsoaps. Many of the stains on porcelain tubs, wash basins and sinks are caused by allowing them to be injured. When new porcelain is smooth and is rubbed with sandsoaps it becomes rough, and it is quite impossible to remove the discoloration.

A good scheme in buying children's underwear is to select the drawers without seams up the back. When the knees begin to be worn cut off the drawers just above the knees, sew them on again, putting the worn part underneath the knee, thus making them last almost twice as long.

To revive the lustre of morocco, or any other leather, apply the white of an egg with a sponge.

Plaster of paris ornaments may be cleaned by a coating of thick starch. This should be allowed to become perfectly dry, then it may be brushed off. The object will look quite clean again.

For sewing buttons on shoes there is a linen thread that comes in both black and brown, with a needle attached. It is used just as an ordinary thread, except that the card is not cut at each button, but runs from one to the other, fastening at the first and last buttons.

Enamelled ware that has been burned or discolored may be cleaned with coarse salt and vinegar. When cooking with the expensive white and blue saucepans, do not use the full heat of the gas. The porcelain lining is apt to crack. Many housekeepers do not think it pays to buy expensive cooking utensils for use on a gas stove.

Children's merino drawers may be made to last much longer if nun's veiling or some other thin material is darned on to the places as soon as they begin to look worn. The material should be placed on the inside of the garment, and the darning need not be done very closely. The edges, however, should be neatly fastened down. This is particularly useful when a large part of the material has become thin.

If a small bag of spice is placed in the kettle when making apple or crab apple jelly the flavor will be much improved, and it varies the jelly without effort. A few leaves of sweet geranium thrown into the jelly also give a delicious flavor.

A little flour spread over the top of cakes before they are iced will prevent the icing from running off.

It is very important that all green salads, such as lettuce, cabbage, celery, chicory or cress, should be thoroughly cleansed and looked over carefully. In the stems and under the curled up leaves small bugs are frequently found. Watercress especially should have great care, for in the leaves small snails are hidden.

DOMESTIC HINTS.

Pineapple Lemonade.

Boil together two cups of sugar and one pint of water for ten minutes. Let cool and add the juice of three or four lemons and one grated pineapple. Let the mixture stand for two hours, add a quart of water and serve at once.

Ham Salad.

Chop some ham very fine and slice twice as much cold potatoes very thin. Arrange the ham and potatoes in a salad dish in layers and sprinkle each double layer with chopped celery, then pour French dressing over all. Garnish with hard-boiled eggs, cut in slices or in fancy shapes.

Mayonnaise Dressing.

Mrs. Hill's directions for making mayonnaise dressing will strike most women accustomed to the old way of adding the oil to the egg drop by drop as radical. The ingredients indicated are a few grains of cayenne or paprika, one-half a teaspoonful of salt, the yolks of two raw eggs, one pint of olive oil, two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, one teaspoonful of powdered sugar and one-half teaspoonful of mustard, if desired. Mix the salt and paprika, says Mrs. Hill, and add the yolks of the eggs, which should be fresh, beat until the yolks are well thickened, then gradually beat in the lemon juice and vinegar. Put an egg beater into the mixture and beat in the oil a teaspoonful at a time; beat thoroughly between each addition of oil. Add more seasoning if needed, cover with an earthen dish and let stand in a cool place until time of serving. If sugar or mustard, one or both, be desired, add to the salt and pepper.

Swedish Jelly.

Cover a knuckle of veal with water, add a small onion and a carrot and let it boil until the meat is ready to fall off the bone. Take the meat and hash it fine and return it to liquor after it is strained, and give it another boil until it jellies. Add salt, pepper, the juice and rind of a lemon cut fine, then pour into a mould. Put it into a cold place. It makes a nice dish for lunch or tea. If the knuckle of veal is large, use three quarts of water, if small two quarts and let it boil slowly three or four hours, or until it is reduced to about half the quantity of water put in.

Crumbed Potatoes.

Required: Potatoes, breadcrumbs, egg for coating, salt, pepper. Choose large, well-shaped potatoes. Wash, scrape and boil them in salted water with a sprig or two of mint in it and a little salt. When cooked, lift them out and dry them in a clean cloth. With a sharp knife cut each in half lengthways, and dust them over with salt and pepper. Dip each piece in beaten egg, then cover with breadcrumbs which have been browned in the oven. Put the potatoes on a greased baking tin, and bake about ten minutes. Serve on a lace paper. Garnish with fresh or fried parsley.

A Modern Knight and Maiden

By ELLA MAY BUNNELL

Copyright, 1906, by Ruby Douglas

"Mary, are you there?" sounded from the hallway as a broad shouldered, sturdy young fellow strode eagerly toward the kitchen door.

"Of course. Come in," responded a voice cheerily, and Phil entered, taking a bit of the workaday life and bustle in with him.

"What is it, Phil?" the girl asked gently, looking into the young man's troubled eyes.

"I think I must be tired tonight," he answered evasively. He attempted to smile reassuringly. A firm little hand stole comfortably into his.

"Yes, but that isn't all," she persisted.

"Well, Mary, I'm wondering when we are ever going to get married. I've been attempting to master the railroad business, but there is nothing settled as to the future, and mine is an alarmingly small salary." Phil's voice sounded pathetically discouraged. "Perhaps I should have gone into some office and stayed there," he concluded doubtfully.

"No, Phil," protested the girl, "you wouldn't have been satisfied with adding up columns of figures all day or going over rusty papers. There is a place somewhere among the railroad workers where you are going to do your best work, Phil dear."

"I just got an order tonight," Phil responded, "to go and bring down a special from Springdale tomorrow. Each day I wonder what next."

Mary looked up into his face. "Fair knight-to-be," she chanted gayly, "it may be tomorrow that you'll win your spurs. Go forth to conquer, for your lady's sake."

"Bless your heart, Mary!" he murmured as he caught and kissed her and then left the room.

The engine Phil took possession of at Springdale next morning puffed and glistened in the sunlight. The young man's eyes grew keen and piercing, and his heart beat tumultuously, while his hand rested firmly on the throttle. The rails shone like silver ribbons in the sun, and the train was soon speeding over the track. Gradually Phil's spirits rose. The beauty of the day—for the dew was still on the fields and the world about seemed alive and happy—and the pounding of the engine filled him with the joy of life.

Phil laughed involuntarily as he looked out of the cab window to see the children in high glee at a game of tag. One station after another he entered on time to the minute. Every other thought than his immediate work was far from him, although Mary was always in his subconsciousness. At the last station before his home a glimpse of a light, girlish figure made Mary seem especially near for a moment. The girl had Mary's grace and airiness as she sprang on to a car platform, but even the fleeting vision made Phil smile happily, and again the train glided out of the station, and in a few minutes it had slowed up, and Phil's trip was ended. Another man would take the train on.

Phil almost patted the throttle as the train came to a stop, and it was with regret that he would give up the engine. "A beauty," he thought, "and guess I'm on time," he smiled.

He saw a visiting railroad official appear at the station door, nodding with apparent satisfaction as he looked at his watch. The man peered curiously into the engine cab, but he suddenly drew back in horror, and others were transfixed by what they saw. Not a man moved or spoke. They seemed helpless before some awful sight.

Phil read his danger in the horrified countenances by the station. He saw the panorama spreading out before him through a veil of smoke, but he felt powerless. The engine was on fire. Something clutched his throat to choke him. He felt a hot breath against his cheek. Red points darted out at him from an indefinite "somewhere." He heard a quick, gurgling tempest of sounds. Was it the wind? he wondered. He thought it was, but he didn't care.

Then something seemed to snap. Perhaps it was the expression on a face he saw in imagination that did it. He whispered, "Mary," and sprang with all his strength for the opening out of the cab. As he leaped from the burning cab, which was an angry, surging, threatening mass, new life came to him. He began to understand. His mind worked rapidly and with precision. As he turned instantaneously toward the coaches back of the engine he saw it all—just what might happen at every second. Two thousand gallons of oil were in a tank at the rear of the cab.

He gathered himself together for the plunge, drew in a long, deep breath, held his head down, with his hat pressed against his face, and returned to the cab. He had gone with hand outstretched for the throttle. He felt thankful that it was not necessary for him to see; he could feel and knew just where to press the throttle most surely. In the moment in which he had discovered the oil tank he had uncoupled the coaches, and when, blinded with smoke and flames, he felt and pressed the throttle the burning thing sprang away and off—perhaps to safety for those in the coaches, 200 souls or more.

The next minute seemed hours. Phil was conscious of just one purpose—to get away from the coaches, for he knew that the tank of oil would explode or burn itself out. He leaned far forward, pressing onward, but the engine seemed to crawl. His breath came hard through clinched teeth; his eyes were set on a spot ahead, but he whispered, "Mary!"

Suddenly the engine shuddered and stopped. Phil's hand was still on the throttle. He scarcely knew that he had stopped the engine. He felt a great, exultant joy, for the coaches were far behind. With great difficulty he flung himself toward the open air. Falling, staggering forward, he felt himself seized by a dozen arms.

Did he dream what followed? A pair of strong young arms were around his neck, and his face was being bathed in something cool and wet. He felt the tense silence and wanted to break it. The one word he heard was "Phil!" which sounded like a caress, a sob and a prayer. Then he opened his eyes—to smile faintly into Mary's dear face bending over him.

"Mary?" he whispered questioningly.

"Yes, dear," she replied. "I came in from the last station on your train, and I intended to skip away quickly, but I wanted to ride with you in the cab just once." Her voice trembled.

Phil turned his face to the wall.

The railroad official looked down on the fair head kindly. "A doctor will be here at once," he assured her, "but I think he is all right anyway." He wished he might comfort the girl.

A half hour later Phil lay on a couch in an inner office. Mary's fingers wandered lovingly through his singed hair. His eyebrows were burned, and he looked pale and worn, but he was rallying rapidly.

"You see, Mary," he said softly, "your face was before me all the time. It was really you who saved the train." As Mary was about to protest the railroad official interrupted, looking at Phil.

"You are the man I've been looking for. I've had my eyes on you for some time, and I've seen now what you can do in an emergency. When I saw you look toward the coaches a few minutes ago, then rush into the flames, I also saw that young woman." The official faltered. "Though she never wavered, she was white, her lips moved, and I knew that she prayed for the man in the cab." The man's voice was husky. "And you're the man I want—with a wife," he added, smiling, "to superintend that work in the Redding district. You understand it. Will you take it—to begin with?"

Great Tide Waves.

Those who see the rise and fall of the tides in our Atlantic harbors seldom think of the wonderful career of the moon raised ocean waves which cause the tidal flux and reflux. Such billows not only cross the sea, but flow from ocean to ocean, and in this way complicated movements are set going. Thus once in every twelve hours the moon raises a tide billow in the southern Indian ocean. When this billow passes the Cape of Good Hope at noon its successor is already born, and by the time the first billow has reached the Azores islands at midnight the second is rounding the cape and a third has come into existence in the southern ocean. By 4 o'clock in the morning following its passage of the cape the tide billow reaches the English channel, and there the shallow water delays it so much that it does not arrive at the strait of Dover until 10 a. m. Here the narrowing channel causes the tide to rise very high and almost puts an end to the wave. In the meantime another branch of the billow runs around the western side of the British islands, rounds the north point of Scotland and moves slowly down the eastern coast of England until it finally flows up the Thames and laps the wharfs of London.—London Graphic.

Reaping Always.

There is no month in the year in which the song of the reaper is not heard in some land on the globe. In January is the wheat harvest of Australia, New Zealand, Chile and the Argentine Republic; in February and March, upper Egypt and India; in April, lower Egypt, India, Syria, Cyprus, Persia, Asia Minor, Mexico and Cuba; in May, Texas, Algeria, central Asia, China, Japan and Morocco; in June, California, Oregon, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, Kentucky, Kansas, Arkansas, Utah, Colorado, Missouri, Turkey, Greece, Italy, Spain, Portugal and south of France; in July, New England, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, southern Minnesota, Nebraska, upper Canada, Roumania, Bulgaria, Austria-Hungary, south of Russia, Germany, Switzerland and south of England; in August, central and northern Minnesota, the Dakotas, Manitoba, lower Canada, Columbia, Belgium, Netherlands, Great Britain, Denmark, Poland and central Russia; in September and October, Scotland, Sweden, Norway and north of Russia; in November, Peru and South Africa, and in December, Burma and New South Wales.

An Ecclesiastical Hat.

A milliner who works in a large city says that one day a woman came into the store very much excited and wanted the trimming on her new hat changed. She said that it had been trimmed on the wrong side.

"But," said the saleswoman, "the trimming is on the left side. That is where it ought to be."

"It doesn't make any difference whether it ought to be in front or back or right or left, it's got to be on the church side."

"Church side!" gasped the astonished girl.

"Yes, church side! I sit right next the wall in church, and I'm not going to have all that trimming next the wall. I want it on the other side, so the whole congregation can see it."

The trimming was promptly placed on the "church side" of the hat.

The Old Time Buccaneer.

Mr. Masefield's book, "On the Spanish Main," presents the old time buccaneer in a less abhorrent light than that in which most people have regarded him. He even had religious beliefs. No buccaneer was allowed to hunt or to cure meat upon a Sunday. No crew put to sea on a cruise without first going to church to ask a blessing on their enterprise. No crew got drink on the return to port after a successful trip until thanks had been declared for the dew of heaven they had gathered. After a cruise the men were expected to fling all their loot into a pile, from which the chiefs made their selection and division. Each buccaneer was expected to hold up his right hand and to swear that he had not concealed any portion of the spoil. If after making oath a man were found to have secreted anything he was bundled overboard or marooned when the ship next made the land. Each buccaneer had a mate or comrade, with whom he shared all things and to whom his property devolved in the event of death. In many cases the partnership lasted during life. A love for his partner was usually the only tender sentiment a buccaneer allowed himself.

"Legging" a Canal Boat.

Throughout England there are a number of tunnels cut for canals where boats have to be pushed through by a laborious process called "legging." This is about the only work on the canal women do not do, and they used to do even this. One may see the process in operation near London at the Maida Hill tunnel, which is some 272 yards in length. Sometimes when the roof is low one man can "leg" an empty boat by lying down on his back on top of the cabin and pushing the roof with his feet. With a broad boat "legging" is performed by two men, one on each side of the boat, who lie down on the fore end and push against the tunnel sides with their feet. If the tunnel is too wide boards projecting over the boat's side, termed "wings," are brought into use for them to lie on. At tunnels where traffic is good professional "leggers" are in attendance.

Clever Mother Wood Duck.

How does the mother wood duck get her brood of twelve to eighteen ducklings from her hollow tree to the creek? Hunters, fishermen and nature students have tried to answer this question, and many are the guesses at the riddle. Mr. William Brewster watched an American golden eye that had a nest in the hollow tree overhanging the water until he heard her, after she had made an inspection of the surroundings, utter a "quack" that brought her brood pellmell out of the tree and tumbling down into the water. A magazine writer says he has seen the young ducks climb out of the hollow down the tree and walk to the water, which was near by. Others believe that the mother carries them in her bill, taking them by their wings; others that she carries them on her back.—Country Life In America.

Origin of "the Levant."

Nowadays "the Levant" means solely the eastern Mediterranean region. But it really signifies the east in a general sense—the region of the rising sun, in fact—being derived from the French "lever," to rise. By "the high Levant" Bacon meant the far east. In the eighteenth century Chambers' Encyclopedia explained that "Levant" applied to any country to the eastward of one, and in this sense Evelyn wrote of "more Levantine parts than Italy." "Levant," indeed, was interchangeable with "orient," just as "ponent" was with "occident." So we find Milton writing of "Levant" and "Ponent" minds.—London Chronicle.

A Curious Watch.

In the year 1764 a handsome and curious present was made to George III. by Arnold, a celebrated London watchmaker. It was a repeating timepiece, set in a ring, and was about the size of an old fashioned silver three cent piece. Though it weighed less than five pennyweights, it was composed of 120 different pieces and was provided with the first ruby cylinder ever made. For this little mechanical marvel Arnold received from the king a present of 500 guineas.

The Tailor Knew.

"I should like," the man cautiously explained to his tailor, "to have a little pocket, a very, very small pocket, one you could hardly see, you know, put somewhere, say in the hem of my trousers or in the waistband, eh, where it couldn't be so easily found. You understand?"

"I see," said the tailor. "You are married now."

Sailors' Knives.

Sheath knives that most sailors carry with them are, it is said, so highly magnetized as to be capable, if brought within eighteen inches of the compass, of deflecting the needle two points either way. It is suggested that no man should be allowed to wear one of these knives while steering a vessel or while on the lookout in the bridge house.

In the Dark.

Parks—How did the ship come to bang against the rocks?

Barks—Why, a young man was courting the keeper's daughter and they absentmindedly turned the light down low.

A Different Complexion.

Maud—Did you say I painted? Marie—I did not. I said you powdered. Maud (reluctantly)—Oh, well, that puts another complexion on it.

A Little Different.

He—So your father asked you what you saw in me to admire? She—Oh, no; he asked me what I imagined I saw.

The Committee recommended that the Secretary-Treasurer advertise for an honor specialist teacher in Classics for the High School at a salary of $1200 a year.

On motion the Board went into committee of the whole on reports, Mr. Mallory in the chair.

The Finance Committee's report was adopted without any discussion.

The report of the Sites, Buildings and Repairs Committee was endorsed, and the Chairman, Mr. G. A. Bennett, was authorized to advertise in the city papers for tenders to make repairs to the various schools.

The School Management Committee's report re salaries was considered.

Rev. A. L. Geen and Mr. I. Diamond both spoke in support of granting a slight increase in salary to Miss M. Fleming, who is well known as a capable and deserving teacher.

Mr. A. A. Roberts asked if it was necessary to have another Classical teacher in the High School. He did not know how it would work out if the new teacher was paid the same salary as the Principal of the school was getting, namely, $1200 a year.

Mr. O'Flynn said it was necessary to engage a Classical teacher, as the Government Inspector had so reported.

The committee's report was endorsed.

On motion the committee rose and reported. The report was received and, on motion that it be adopted, Rev. A. L. Geen moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. I. Diamond, that it be not adopted, but referred back for the purpose of granting an increase in salary of $25 to Miss M. Fleming.

The amendment was defeated and the report was adopted.

Mr. Bennett reported verbally that he had seen the Misses Murney in reference to the Board purchasing some lots from them, but as yet no bargain had been made.

On motion the matter was left in Mr. Bennett's hands.

Two notices of motion, both of which were introduced by Col. Ponton, were allowed to stand. They were in reference to the children's savings banks and to teachers being absent from duty during the years 1905 and 1906.

This concluded the business and the Board adjourned.

'TWAS A BURGLARY.

THIEF OR THIEVES MADE A HAUL OF TOBACCO, CIGARS AND CIGARETTES THE OTHER NIGHT.

The police a few days ago recovered a quantity of cigars, tobacco and cigarettes, and at the time were unable to ascertain where they came from, as no complaint of such articles being stolen was reported.

We have learned that some evenings ago a business place on Front street, where such articles are kept for sale, was entered and the goods were taken. This is verified by the fact that the owner of the store has identified the articles as his property.

Whilst the police have had nothing to say in regard to the matter, it is a fact that a burglary was committed and the thief or thieves secured an entrance to the store by way of the cellar in rear of the premises. There is as yet no clue to the guilty party.

Broke Into Canning Factory Last Night

At a few minutes before 12 o'clock last night a call was answered to the canning factory. It was reported that a window in the building had been broken and that some canned goods had been taken away. When the officer arrived there was no sign of any person about the premises, but an effort is being made to find out who committed the act.

Boys Borrowed A Boat.

Yesterday a Mr. Nash reported to the police that a row boat belonging to him had been taken away. Last evening the boat was found, swamped, at the Ferry slip and upon investigation it was found that three small boys had taken the boat and rowed about the bay and then left the craft where it was subsequently found.

H.M.S. Dreadnaught.

London, July 24.—The first official announcement respecting the battleship Dreadnaught is contained in a White Book, which was issued tonight. Besides the ten twelve-inch guns announced, the Dreadnaught will have twenty-seven twelve-pound quick firing anti-torpedo boat guns and five submerged torpedo tubes. In the arrangement of armament six of the big guns are mounted in pairs on the centre line of the ship and the remainder are mounted in pairs as broadsides.

Thus eight twelve-inch guns, or 80 per cent. of the plain armament, can be fired on either broadside, and four and possibly six twelve-inch guns, or 60 per cent., can be fired simultaneously ahead or astern. In view of the modern potentialities of torpedo boats and considering especially the chances of a torpedo attack toward the end of a battle, the anti-torpedo boat guns are widely separated, so that the whole of them cannot be disabled by one heavy shell. Special attention has been paid to protection from submarine explosions.

After thorough consideration from every point of view, the White Book states, experts had no difficulty in arriving at a decision to adopt turbines, which are considered more advantageous for seagoing speed, providing sufficient stopping and turning power, and for purposes of quick and easy manoeuvring. The speed is designed to be twenty-one knots. The bunker capacity is 2,700 tons, with which the Dreadnaught can steam 5,800 sea miles at economical speed and 3,500 miles at eighteen and a half knots. The estimated cost of the Dreadnaught, including guns, is $8,987,485.

The Barnum & Bailey circus is offering a new spectacle this season. It is entitled "Peace," and is founded upon the closing incidents of the Russo-Japanese war in Manchuria. Scores of horses, elephants, camels and other led animals and hundreds of brilliantly-costumed men, women and children are utilized in this big military and allegorical display. The final tableau shows Columbia joining the hands of the warring nations, under the prompting of the President of the United States.

Desperate Situation In Holy Russia.

FOREIGNERS ARE FLEEING FROM ST. PETERSBURG, AND THE CZAR'S YACHT HAS STEAM UP, READY TO TEAR AWAY TO SAFETY.

St. Petersburg, July 25.—(Special)—Civil war has been declared by the deputies of League of Leagues, the Social Democratic and Social Revolutionary parties, and the movement is to be joined by workmen in every part of Russia.

So desperate is the situation today that foreigners, including the wife and children of United States Ambassador Meyer, are fleeing from St. Petersburg.

Mrs. Meyer and the children left on the northern express to-day.

Says Married Life Is the Real Thing.

New York, July 24.—"To be single is hell—married life is the real thing," reflectively said Police Magistrate Luke J. Connorton, in the Flushing court yesterday. A moment before he uttered this dictum the magistrate had shown extreme mercy to two offenders who confessed, shamefully, that they were over thirty years old, and unmarried.

"Of ten men, more than thirty years old, who come before me, nine are unmarried," the magistrate continued. "All men who wish to succeed should marry; there are few single men who are truly great. My advice to men is, 'marry young.'

"My advice to any girl is, 'If you are certain a young man loves you, and he hesitates to pop the question, help him along to it. Talk to him about the advantages of marriage, and he will propose and be grateful all his life.'"

"You are single now, judge," said one of the magistrate's audience, "why don't you"—

"I'm a widower," Connorton interrupted hastily.

"But you are known all over Queen's Borough as the 'Happy Little Judge.' How do you reconcile that with your advice?"

"If you will excuse me I will go to lunch," exclaimed Connorton, and he hurried out of court.

A Thing of Beauty.

One of the most beautiful sights in the Dominion, we are told, is to be seen in Tuftsville, being a flower garden of about one-fifth of an acre, consisting entirely of variegated petunias. This garden is owned and cultivated entirely by Stephen Tufts, the postmaster of Tuftsville, who is upwards of seventy years of age. A visitor to that village declared he had seen nothing to compare with it between Vancouver, B. C., and St. John, N. B.

BRYAN'S TREATY RIDER

As Recast It Is Regarded as a Long Step Towards Peace.

Author Says It Aims at Widening the Scope of Arbitration So as to Include Questions of National Honor —Baron Constant, Head of French Delegation to Interparliamentary Union, Duscusses the Limitation of Armaments.

London, July 25.—William Jennings Bryan's proposed rider to the model arbitration treaty was discussed at a session of the international council of the interparliamentary union yesterday morning, and resulted in its being recast as follows:

"If a disagreement should arise, which is not included in those to be submitted to arbitration, the contracting parties shall not resort to any act of hostility before they separately or jointly invite, as the case may necessitate, the formation of an international commission of enquiry or mediation of one or more friendly powers, this requisition to take place, if necessary, in accordance with article VIII. of The Hague convention, providing for a peaceful settlement of international conflicts."

Long Step Towards Peace.

Mr. Bryan said that his amendment was aimed at widening the scope of arbitration so as to include questions of national honor, and its adoption was a long step in the direction of peace.

Baron d'Eestournelles de Constant, head of the French delegation on the limitation of military and naval forces, declared that if the powers were undecided among themselves how to act for their common interests, they would be forced to do so, first by bankruptcy and then by revolution. The baron said that limitation of armaments had no connection with the chimera of disarmament.

Germany, said the baron, is committing the grave fault of struggling with the United States for naval pre-eminence, and thus divides her energies, both on land and sea, uselessly, for the American States are united and inaccessible, while the states of Europe are divided, and will always be attended by the possibility of a coalition against them.

A resolution was agreed to, in principle, urging that the question of disarmament be placed on the program of the next peace conference at The Hague.

DUTCH DISAPPOINTED.

Queen Wilhelmina Taken Suddenly Ill and There Is No Heir.

The Hague, July 25.—Queen Wilhelmina was taken ill Monday night. A premature delivery followed, casting gloom throughout Holland. It was announced yesterday morning that the expectation of an heir to the throne at this time will not be realized.

Last evening Queen Wilhelmina's condition was satisfactory, and it is expected she will regain her normal health shortly.

LENNOX IN POLICE COURT.

False Pretence Case Begun — Other Cases Traversed Till 31st.

Toronto, July 25.—Magistrate Kingsford took hold of the police court trial of E. J. Lennox at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Mr. Lennox is charged with false pretences, perjury and conspiracy.

About the only fascinating feature of the session, lasting two hours, was the production of the contract between Lennox and the city, which was produced to vindicate the architect in his action of collecting by way of Hunter moneys which were coming to him from Hunter's predecessor as city inspector Mr. Moore. The explanation of the Hunter cheques was reasonable, but depicted rather unbusinesslike conditions. Magistrate Kingsford will see some vouchers from City Treasurer Coady, when the trial resumes at 2 o'clock today.

All the other charges against various contractors and Dr. Lynd were sent on to the 31st inst.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, July 24.—Receipts of live stock as reported by the railways were 59 car loads, composed of 747 cattle, 227 hogs, 853 sheep and lambs, with 193 calves.

Exporters.

There were few shipping cattle offered and they were of common to medium quality, selling at $4.50 to $4.00 per cwt. Export bulls sold at $3.50 to $4.25 per cwt. Had there been some choice shipping cattle they no doubt would have brought a better price.

Butchers.

Owing to the fact that a large number of the dealers had got supplies at the Junction on Monday, trade for butchers' cattle was dull at following quotations: a very few picked butchers, of prime quality, were reported as having sold at $4.50 to $4.75; fair to good at $4.12½ to $4.35; common at $3.50 to $3.75; cows at $2.50 to $3.50; canners, $1.75 to $2.

Feeders and Stockers.

Trade in stockers and feeders is dull and draggy, with the exception that, should there be a few well bred steers, 900 to 1000 lbs. each, they would find a ready sale. Farmers seem to have got enough of the feeding of ill-bred cattle, and there is little else offering. Harry Murby reports trade easy at following prices: Best, 900 to 1000 lbs. steers, $3.80 to $4; best 800 to 900 lb. steers, $3.60 to $3.80; best 600 to 800 lb. steers, $3.25 to $3.60; medium stockers, from $3 to $3.25; common stockers, from $2.10 to $2.50.

Milch Cows.

Only a few were offered, amongst which were two or three of choice quality, which sold at good prices, while the common and inferior brought common and inferior prices as usual. There were a few farmers looking for some good cows, but there was not enough to supply them. One extra fine cow sold at $70, another at $54; the balance at $30 to $45 each.

Veal Calves.

Prices for veal calves were lower than for some time, altho they are still good, and prime veals sell readily. Prices ranged from: $3.50 per cwt. for "bobs" to $4.50 to $6 per cwt. for good to choice.

Sheep and Lambs.

The market for sheep and lambs was brisk, with prices firm at following quotations: export ewes, $4 to $4.40; bucks, $3 to $3.00; lambs, $7.25 to $7.75 per cwt.

Hogs.

Receipts light, only 227 reported by the railways as arriving at the market. Mr. Harris reports selects at $7.90 and lights at $7.65 per cwt.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKET.

Veals—Receipts, 75; slow, steady, $4.50 to $7.50.

Hogs—Receipts, 1100; active, shade lower; heavy and mixed, $7.05 to $7.10; Yorkers, $7.20 to $7.25; pigs, $7.30; roughs, $6 to $6.15; stags, $4.50 to $5; dairies, $6.65 to $7.10.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 1400; slow; sheep steady; lambs 25c lower; lambs, $5.50 to $7.25; yearlings, $6 to $6.25; wethers, $5.30 to $5.75; ewes, $4.75 to $5; sheep, mixed, $3 to $5.25.

NEW YORK LIVE STOCK.

New York, July 24.—Beeves—Receipts, 60; no trading to-day; feeling dull and unchanged; exports to-day, 930 cattle and 3750 quarters of beef; to-morrow, 100 cattle and 3000 quarters of beef.

Calves—Receipts, 145; none for sale; feeling steady.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 6816; sheep slow and a fraction lower; lambs extremely dull and 25c lower; ordinary to prime sheep sold at $3.25 to $5 per 100 lbs.; ordinary to choice lambs, $5 to $7.25.

Hogs—Receipts, 2166; none on sale; feeling nominally steady.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

Chicago, July 24.—Cattle—Receipts, 4500; market slow; prices steady; common to prime steers, $4.25 to $6.50; cows, $2.75 to $4.50; heifers, $2.75 to $5.25; bulls, $2.00 to $4.25; calves, $5.75 to $7; stockers and feeders, $2.60 to $4.25.

Hogs—Receipts, 13,000; market 5c to 10c higher; choice to prime heavy, $6.85 to $6.90; medium to good heavy, $6.60 to $6.75; butchers' weights, $6.85 to $6.95½; good to choice heavy mixed, $6.60 to $6.75; packing, $6 to $6.60.

Sheep—Receipts, 18,000; market steady, but slow; sheep, $4.15 to $5.60; yearlings, $4.25 to $6.25; lambs, $5.75 to $8.

Eleven Taken From Ruins.

South Framingham, Mass., July 25.—The search for the bodies of the persons buried in the ruins of the business block which collapsed Monday, is far from being completed. The finding of the body of Henry L. Sawyer, a prominent hardware dealer, who went to the building to inspect the plumbing plans, brought the number of dead up to 11, and it is believed that there are four more to be found.

Amyot Will Run.

Quebec, July 25.—George E. Amyot has yielded to the wishes of his many friends and has consented to come forward as a candidate in the County of Quebec, where a vacancy has been created by the promotion of Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick to be chief justice in the Supreme Court.

THEY ORGANIZE AT GALT

"Western Ontario Municipalities' Power Union."

One Hundred Solid Business Men—Representing 21 Municipalities, Enthusiastically Get After Cheap Niagara Power Through the Hydro-Electro Commission's Plan—Executive Committee Appointed.

Galt, July 25.—A delegation of over a hundred solid men representing the leading municipalities of Western Ontario, with the exception of Brantford, met here yesterday over the Niagara power question. Delegates were present from Toronto, Hamilton, Georgetown, St. George, Preston, Hespeler, Guelph, Berlin, Waterloo, Baden, Stratford, St. Mary's Paris, Woodstock, Ingersoll, Tilsonburg, London, St. Thomas, Elmire, Strathroy and Bothwell.

After listening to a raking discussion on the whole situation, including the working of the new Power Act, which was explained by Hon. Mr. Beck, and a review of objections and criticisms of the hydro-electric power commission's report, from Cecil B. Smith, another member of the commission, the assembly decided upon permanent organization, and appointed the following gentlemen as an executive committee:

The Executive Committee.

Ald. J. H. Fryer, president Galt board of trade; Mayor Coatsworth, Toronto; Ald. J. W. Lyon, president Guelph board of trade; Ald. R. F. Matthews, London; Ald. D. B. Detweiler, president Berlin board of trade; Ald. D. Woods, president Brantford board of trade; Mayor Clare, Preston; Mayor Bectel, Woodstock.

At a subsequent meeting of the executive the following officers were elected: President, J. H. Fryer; vice-president, R. F. Matthews; secretary-treasurer, J. W. Lyons.

Begin Work At Once.

At the close of the general meeting the newly elected executive instructed the secretary to secure from the power commission pro forma contracts for users of power and municipalities to sign, showing the amount of power to be used. Also that a synopsis report of the meeting, with blanks enclosed, asking all reachable municipalities to become members of the union be mailed to them as soon as possible, enclosing a copy of a resolution for them to pass, and indicating whether they would take power at once or not.

Resolutions Passed.

These resolutions were adopted by the general meeting:

Resolved—That the municipalities here represented, and such others as may wish to join, desiring to co-operate in gathering of proper information regarding Niagara power, with the object of attaining cheap power from that source, through the power bill, do form an association for that purpose.

That this association be known as "The Western Ontario Municipalities' Power Union."

The object of this union is to secure the co-operation of the different municipalities interested in obtaining the purchase and transmission of electric power through the hydro-electric power commission, as provided in the act to provide for the transmission of electrical power to municipalities.

Resolved—That the municipalities here represented, desire to co-operate in order to avail themselves of the benefits of the act passed at the last session of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario, being an act to provide for the purchase and transmission of electrical power to municipalities, and for that purpose, be it resolved that each municipality here represented, and such others as may join, do furnish to the executive committee, as soon as possible, an estimate of the amount of power it will require under the act, or will use for public lighting, heating and power purposes, and also for manufacturing and other purposes, and that the executive committee be authorized to take all necessary steps to procure from the hydro-electrical power commission of Ontario estimates of the various items of cost and other particulars under section 6 of the act, and to lay before the municipal councils full information as to same, so as to enable the councils to submit to their electors, bylaws, to authorize them to enter into contracts with the commission for the transmission of electrical power in terms of the act.

FUR BUYER DRINKS POISON.

Stolen Goods Were Sent Him and He Feared Arrest.

Montreal, July 25.—M. F. St. John, jewelry importer, manufacturer's agent and fur buyer, was found dead in his office at the Temple Building, St. James' street, at 2 o'clock yesterday. Prussic acid seems to have been the means taken by the dead man to put an end to his existence.

Some days ago, Chief Carpenter received word from the chief of police of Chatham, Ont., stating that some stolen furs had been shipped from there to a man by the name of M. F. St. John, 227 Temple Building. The chief sent a man to St. John's office to make some enquiries into the matter, and although the detective did not try to arrest him, the man was very nervous in his presence and gave him reason to believe that in some way, he was connected with the fur shipped from Chatham.

Later, he received another wire from the Chatham police chief, asking for the arrest of A. Furtall, West Notre Dame street. This man, Furtall, was the one wanted for the theft of furs at Chatham, and he it was, who had shipped them to St. John.

Furtall was arrested yesterday, and it is believed that the fear of arrest led St. John to make away with himself, before the officers came in upon him.

THE INSURANCE INQUIRY.

C., which occurred last evening, there is removed one who enjoyed the respect and affection of a large circle of friends in Toronto and elsewhere. Mr. Blackstock suffered from Bright's disease. Mr. Blackstock was born at Streetsville, in 1851, his father being the Rev. W. S. Blackstock, whose death occurred some months ago. In 1880, he was married to the eldest daughter of the late George Gooderham who survives him. The children are three sons and four daughters. George Tate Blackstock, K.C., is a brother.

Crisis May Be Result.

Psychological Moment Has Not Been Found by Earl Grey.

Newfoundland Repudiates Governor-General of Canada Because of Talk of Confederation—All Public Functions Are Abandoned and Premier Bond Has Issued a Statement That He Has Nothing to Do With Visit.

St. John's, Nfld., July 26.—Earl Grey's visit to this colony, coupled with the reported confederation negotiations between him and Governor McGregor of Newfoundland, has caused intense excitement here. After repeated attempts to get up a public reception to Earl Grey, backed by the inside influence of the Governor and Sir Edward Morris, the committee selected have been unable to get the public to take hold, and at the last meeting only five of the committee were present.

Functions Abandoned.

Mr. Outerbridge occupied the chair. He read a report from the committee who had charge of the guarantee fund. They reported that they had received only 16 instead of 40 guarantors, and that general apathy existed to the plan of a ball or reception being held. Leading public men and citizens would not guarantee expenses, and it is said all public functions will be abandoned, and Earl Grey will be received the same as a private guest of the Governor.

There is much feeling in Government circles and amongst anti-confederate politicians, who look upon the whole matter as a scheme to force confederation.

Crisis Coming.

The Premier, Sir Robert Bond, has been compelled to issue a statement that he had nothing to do with the visit. It is believed a crisis may result. Sir Edward Morris, Attorney-General in the Bond Government, while the Premier was absent from the colony, openly endorsed Governor McGregor's invitation and advocated before a public meeting a popular reception to Earl Grey. It is believed trouble is likely between Governor McGregor and his Government as a result of the Premier's implied repudiation of Governor McGregor for inviting Earl Grey.

Talked Union.

It is also noteworthy that while Governor McGregor has been charged with negotiating with the Canadian Governor-General on the subject of confederation he does not deny that the subject was discussed with Earl Grey.

Present indications are of trouble for the Governor and Government.

There is strong anti-confederation feeling here now.

ADOPT CANADIAN PLAN.

U. S. Finds It Satisfactory as Regards Contract Wages.

Boston, Mass., July 26.—Routine business was on the program yesterday, when the delegates to the 22nd annual convention of the Association of Officials of Bureaus of Labor Statistics of America assembled for their second day's session.

W. L. McKenzie King, Deputy Minister of Labor of Canada, said that the work in Canada is being carried on along the lines used by the national bureau at Washington and in London, Eng. Accidents of all kinds, due to industrial causes, have been classified, with a view to having legislation drafted which will make less the possibility of similar accidents.

A discussion on the "fair wage" rate followed, during which it developed that many cities in the United States adopted the Canadian Government's plan of Government supervision of contract wages.

The plan met with general approval.

WORK FOR GRAIN COMMISSION.

All Matters Concerning Inspection Come Within Scope.

Ottawa, July 26.—The Grain Trade Commission has received its instructions. The allowance of the chairman is $15 per diem and each of the two commissioners get $12. They are to be allowed such contingencies traveling and living expenses as the Minister of Trade and Commerce may deem necessary.

The commission has been instructed to take into consideration all matters connected with the grain inspection, and the Manitoba grain act, and is given power to visit grain growers and elevators all over the wheat growing area to enquire into the methods of handling, distribution of cars, grading and handling at ports.

THE VERDICT.

Toronto Coroner's Jury Indicts Bridant and Mrs. Miller.

Toronto, July 26.—Last night the jury empanelled by Coroner Cotten to inquire into the death of Mrs. Agnes Bridant returned the following verdict:

"We find that the deceased, Mrs. Agnes Bridant, came to her death on July 20, at room 21, Bristol Chambers, by the use of medicine and an instrument used by her for the purpose of procuring an abortion, which caused septic peritonitis, under instructions from Mrs. Miller, acting for Dr. De Voss Medicine Co., and aided by her husband, Mr. Bridant.

"We deprecate the publicity of certain advertisements in the daily and other papers, which leads to these results."

Lightning Destroys Church.

Chambery, Department of Savoie, France, July 26.—A cloudburst, accompanied by lightning, yesterday destroyed the Church of Les Chevannes, about 35 miles from here, melting the church bells into a solid mass, injuring a number of persons and causing an enormous amount of damage along the Franco-Italian border. Railway traffic by way of Mont Cenis is interrupted.

Girl Cut In Two by Train.

Syracuse, N. Y., July 26.—Emma Kroft, 13 years of age, while picking up coal yesterday on the Deleware, Lackawanna and Western tracks, in Oswego, was struck by a train and her body cut in two.

Bad Freight Tie-Up.

San Francisco, July 26.—Between 400 and 500 freight handlers in the employ of the Southern Pacific Co. in Oakland are on strike. They demand an increase in pay from 22 1-2 cents to 25 cents an hour, such as was granted to the freight handlers on this side of the bay over a week ago. Every day adds to the serious nature of the freight congestion, which threatens to become a situation of the greatest peril to the city.

Win Half-Hour Battle.

Manila, July 26.—Advices received here from the Island of Leyte say that a band of 500 Pulajanes yesterday attacked a column of fifty constabulary and twenty-six soldiers of the Twenty-Fourth Infantry near Banuen. The engagement lasted half an hour. The Pulajanes made three charges, but were repulsed with the loss of 150 killed and wounded. The troops and constabulary suffered no losses.

THE INSURANCE INQUIRY.

Concludes Investigation of Great West Life Co. and Adjourns.

Winnipeg, Man., July 26.—The Royal Insurance Commission concluded the investigation into the affairs of the Great West Life Co. last evening, and adjourned sine die.

Managing Director Brock was again on the stand yesterday. Mr. Brock produced the correspondence and contract with Mr. Matson, agent for Vancouver Island. By the terms of this contract Mr. Matson was to receive a bonus of 10 per cent., on condition that his business exceeded $150,000 per annum. The company had no other contract in Canada which gave that commission.

Mr. Tilley—Is it a common practice to give an additional 10 per cent. for a certain amount of business?

Witness—Yes; in order that the agents shall give attention to our business.

Asked as to securities, witness told of Winnipeg five per cent. debentures for $2,520 written up to the market value, and afterwards put back at cost price, the company having made a profit in real estate. The market value of their securities was now over $10,000 greater than the price they were taken for.

Mr. Brock warmly defended his method of encouraging agents as a legitimate way of meeting competition.

Every day is a new life, every sunrise but a new birth.—Jordon.

FOR PROTECTION IN WAR.

Rules Governing Private Property and Carriers Are Adopted.

London, July 26.—The conference of the Interparliamentary Union, after a prolonged debate yesterday morning, adopted the following resolution:

"The Interparliamentary Union, now assembled in London, expresses the view that the second Hague conference should: (1) By treaty define contraband of war as being restricted to arms, munitions of war and explosives. (2) Reassert and confirm the principle that neither a ship carrying contraband of war, nor other goods aboard, such ship not being contraband of war, may be destroyed. (3) Affirm that even between belligerents private property should be immune at sea as it is on land."

The conference also adopted a resolution in favor of the discussion by The Hague conference of means to cut down the "intolerable expenditure on armaments." Another resolution provides that each national group shall apply to its own Government to grant funds to aid future conferences of the Interparliamentary Union.

The decision as to the time and place of the next conference was left in the hands of the International Council. It is expected that it will be held in Berlin in 1908.

The conference then concluded its sessions and the delegates were entertained at luncheon at the House of Lords. A deputation of the visitors will be received by King Edward at Buckingham Palace to-day.

Showed Their Appreciation.

Wallbridge, July 23.— On Friday evening, July 20, over eighty friends and neighbors gathered at the home of Mr. Lester Ross, and a very enjoyable evening was spent. The feature of the evening was the presentation of a gold watch, chain and charm to Mr. Ross, who is about leaving our midst, and who has so successfully and faithfully discharged the duties of public school teacher for twelve consecutive years and Sabbath school superintendent for nearly as many. Mr. Hinchcliffe, in a few well-chosen remarks, personally and on behalf of all present, expressed the grateful appreciation of his services. Mr. Ross, although taken completely by surprise, made a suitable and feeling reply. Their departure is deeply regretted by the people of Wallbridge and entire community, and Mr. and Mrs. Ross and family will have the best wishes of the whole section in their future home.

Charity begins at home, but it is apt to be out when anybody calls.

Daily Intelligencer.

The Lord's Day Act.

What is it, and what does it provide? is a question often asked. Read the debates in parliament upon the question, and you will agree with Senator Scott in his declaration that it is a "mass of incongruities and contradictions." Senator Ross, of Halifax, a good old Presbyterian Grit, denounced it as giving evidence of the decadence of Sabbath observance in Canada, that in fact it proved that Canadians were becoming regardless of the provisions of the 4th Commandment.

Mr Bourassa, who was a violent opponent of the bill when first introduced, denouncing it as an infringment of the liberty of the subject, became, after it had been ~~tinkered~~ in both Commons and Senate, reconciled, and delivered himself as follows; "I think, probably, the "people of Quebec will regard this "law as some Americans said they "regarded Indians. The saying "there was, that the only good In-"dian was a dead Indian. I think "the people of Quebec will regard "this as a good law because it is a "dead law."

Senator Choquette, after defending horse racing and other sports on Sunday after Mass, became also reconciled to its provisions and its many exemptions, and gave it his support, as harmless to those who love Sunday sports.

To cap the climax, Senator Kerr, of Toronto, to please Quebec, moved and carried an additional clause, which renders the whole Act a nullity. It is as follows;

"15 No action or prosecution for a violation of this Act shall be commenced without the leave of the Attorney-General for the province in which the offence is alleged to have been committed; nor after the expiration of sixty days from the time of the commission of the alleged offence."

In the law as published in the Official Gazette the word "not," after the word "committed" is left out, whether by mistake or not, is not known. Since the first issue of the Official Gazette a corrected issue has been published with the word "nor" inserted.

This clause met the approval of those who regard the Lord's Day as a day of pleasure and recreation, rather than a day to be kept holy.

Read the Act from the beginning to the end and it will be found to be based upon the principle that any amusement, from horse racing, card or ball playing, or any other game, can be indulged in on the Sunday, provided no fee is charged at the gates or doors. No playing of games nor horse racing is a sin, unless in the doing of these things money is charged. Horse race as much as you please, but don't bet. Have all the amusements you like on the Lord's Day, but don't charge an admission fee. That is about the length and breadth of the law now upon the Statute book. Yet the clerical editor of The Globe pronounces it a masterpiece of statesmanship, meeting the views of all conditions of belief. Truly, partizanship warps the better judgment of even clericals.

Think Thief Knew Lay of Premises.

It seems that the burglary committed in a local tobacco store the other night is believed to have been the work of someone who knew his way about the premises. The stock, from which the thief helped himself, was kept upstairs. Only a few cents were missed from the till, and, as nothing else was missed from the store it was not at first suspected that the burglar had found his way to the upstairs stock. Whether the police have any suspicions of who the thief is they do not say.

Editors of etiquette columns in the newspapers have sometimes been called on to decide whether or not presents given by a young man to the girl he expects to marry should be returned if the contemplated marriage is broken off. It may be good form to return them, but a New York magistrate decided that it is not required by law. Young men who are likely to want their presents back should be careful.

A prominent citizen of Peterboro is working hard to establish a swimming bath in that city, and he is putting up some strong arguments. Incidentally he pointed out that the Ontario Government will give some financial assistance towards the good cause and says that Hon. Dr. Pyne, Minister of Education, has already stated that in public. The Peterboro man—a contractor, named Bogue by the way—declares that the time is coming when all Collegiate Institutes and High Schools will have to teach swimming. We wish the Peterboro man every success in his efforts, says the Brockville Times. Brockville should have a public swimming bath too. It is a good thing in every way, though no doubt some people will argue that because their fathers and grandfathers didn't have swimming baths there is no reason why they should be established. Possibly some of our grandparents didn't take baths at all, but that is no reason why people to-day should not take baths.

The difference. "The Manitoba Government has censured Registration Clerk Dennet, of Balsom Bay, who refused to place a number of Liberals on the list at the time of the revision. The electors affected will be allowed to vote.—Toronto Globe.

Had that Registration Clerk refused to put Conservative voters upon the list, and had there been a Grit Government in power, instead of being censured, he would have been appointed to some lucrative office, Jackson and Preston per example. It is well Manitoba has an honest government.

There is nothing so good for a community a a government that enforces the law. Manitoba is so blessed. A telegram from Winnipeg of the 24th inst. says;

"The License Department has carried on a vigorous campaign against the sale of liquor on the fair grounds, and many of the booths have been raided and liquor confiscated. The basement of the Government buildings resembles an inland revenue bonded warehouse. there being in store there and safely fenced up no less than 250 cases of beer, 6,000 bottles and twenty eight-gallon kegs of the same beverage.

"In addition to the beer several cases of high-class "hard" goods were also secured, and are being kept safely under lock and key, and will be used as evidence against the lessees of the booths in which the stuff was found when they come up for trial.

What a contrast, when compared with the way in which the license laws were administered in Ontario under Grit rule.

Let us hope he may have a change of heart, ere he leaves this world. It is to be regretted that so clear and bright an intellect cannot realize a greater Britain.

High School Teachers Making Complaints.

Toronto, July 26. — The teachers in the high schools of Ontario believe that they are entitled to better remuneration, and a meeting will be held to-day to give voice to their complaints. There are at present a goodly number of them in the city, who have been engaged as examiners, and who, for a fortnight, have been passing upon examination papers at the education department.

They receive for this work $5.25 a day Many of the teachers are in favor of asking that this amount be increased to $10 a day. The argument is based on the extra cost of living in the city of Toronto, the expenses eating quite a hole in the amount received. While other things have progressed during the past 25 years, the remuneration for this work has remained fixed.

This is not the only source of complaint. It is also felt that the time for increased remuneration for their regular school work has arrived, and an effort to combine a demand may be made. More uniformity in salaries is sought, it being felt that a teacher in, say a place like Berlin, should get only $1200 for services that, in Toronto, would bring him $1,800.

There is no talk of a "strike" as yet, but the teachers are very much in earnest, and something may drop soon that will surprise the boards of education of Ontario.

The Stationing System

REV. M. E. WILSON POINTS OUT SOME ALLEGED DEFECTS AS EXEMPLIFIED IN THE BAY OF QUINTE CONFERENCE.

Dunsford, July 23, 1906.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer;

Dear Sir,—With the convening of one of the most important church courts in the country, in the city of Montreal in prospect, perhaps, you would be good enough to give this letter a place in your valuable columns. Whether there should or should not be brought about the reunion of the churches, most serious attention ought to be given to the manner and method of the election or appointment of the ministry to their various charges. The method of Presbyterial appointment is scarcely equal to all the conditions involved, the manner of appointment through episcopal authority may not be quite ideal, while the plan of appointment by committee, as amongst Methodists, has well nigh corrupted the whole church, both through the ranks of the ministry and laity. The report of the committee on Church Union, now before the church courts, suggests the plan of appointment by committee. It is obvious that much of a minister's success is conditioned upon his fitness for, and adaptation to the work to which he is assigned. These things, therefore, should be kept in view whenever a minister and a charge are to be brought into contact. I do not judge other conferences of the Methodist body, because, I have had not had an opportunity of noticing their proceedings. But if the conditions prevailing within the Bay of Quinte conference may be regarded as an index to the affairs of other conferences throughout Canadian Methodism, and we see no reason why they should not be, then some of the evils which are causing profound anxiety for the general well-being of the church and ministry, can be readily enough accounted for. The columns of your valuable paper from time to time have not been unmindful of some of these things, for which everybody ought to be grateful to you. But notwithstanding the disregard of rights of both congregations and ministers, the connivance, and even conspiracy, which might be charged against the stationing powers of Methodism is such, as must, assuredly, destroy sooner or later, the confidence of the people in ecclesiastical courts altogether, to say nothing of the injury, humiliation and poverty, forced upon a ministery ill deserving of such things.

'The very manner in which the Stationing Committee of the Methodist Church is constituted, and the policy with which its business is so often conducted, makes it a menace to both the interests of the people, and the rights of the ministry. On account of this the congregations have been driven to what is known as the call system, to save themselves, and the minister to either connivance or suffering. This committee amongst Methodists is constituted of district chairman, who, especially if long continued in office, are likely to become more or less autocratic, and an additional minister annually elected by each district. Now, just at this point, the evil of the plan may be seen. The minister who is to be changed, naturally enough desires to get elected to a place on the Stationing Committee in order that he may have whatever advantage his presence in his own behalf might give when the stationing affecting himself is considered. I have observed this working of men throughout the years. By correspondence, by wire pulling through conventions, young people's societies, fraternal organizations, or in fact anywhere where patronage might be obtained, directly or indirectly, and to win out. A chairman of a district was overheard to say to a brother minister who was moving; "Why don't you try and get on the Stationing Committee?" And another person of the writer's own acquaintance, in thanking the district for his election, after he had worked tooth and nail to secure it, said; "He was very grateful to the brethren for this mark of their confidence, especially as this was his moving year." His meaning was obvious enough, he could not trust himself in the hands of the committee of stationing, and no wonder, but by his election he would have some opportunity of working out his own salvation. Then looking within the committee, what do we find? A marvellous susceptability to such matters as are altogether foreign to the work of stationing ministers. Though only a committee, it frequently assumes the jurisdiction of a court, reviewing ministerial character, massing its own evidence and pronouncing its own judgment, quite irrespective of fair and honest claims of men, very much after the manner of cruel Romans and ignorant Jews, when they forced the crucifixion, which was a simple outrage of every principle of truth and justice. The writer has knowledge of a certain chairman whom we will call the Rev. A. C. This gentleman had a difference of opinion with a certain minister upon his district over a question of administration The matter in question was referred to a court of the church and pronounced upon, not in conformity with the said Rev. C. C.'s opinion. This was enough. The Rev. A. C.'s ire was kindled and this minister must be taught a lesson. He must be moved, to use a familiar form of expression. There were difficulties in the way. The man had been successful and deserving, and the quarterly board had taken the precaution to notify the conference of their desire to retain his services. How will the Rev A. C. accomplish his purpose in the face of all this? This was his plan; A susceptible party was found on the minister's charge, and the advisability of circulating a petition for the removal of the minister suggested. The Rev. A. C. would privately interview members of the committee such as he might be able to influence and so things would be in order when the proper moment arrived to control the Stationing Committee. The petition was duly circulated, and as afterwards developed, sufficient signatures could not be obtained in the regular way, so a sufficient number were simply added without the knowledge of the parties themselves, to give the petition at least the appearance of strength. What was the result? The minister was, of course, moved against his interests and will, his reputation tarnished, if not altogether destroyed, because he had been petitioned against, and a whole circuit thrown into disappointment and rebellion. I have known this sort of tactics repeatedly used in reference to the stationing of men in the Methodist Church by district authorities. Now, my point is that any important and responsible committee, so constituted and used to make this sort of thing likely or possible, is a menace to the safety and interests committed to its care, is a cankerous and corrupting blemish that will sooner or later work death to any body, either ecclesiastical or civil.

The writer, also, once knew of another certain chairman whom we will call S. J. At the close of a certain conference the said Rev. S. J. came, presumably, to condole with a certain brother who had been rather roughly treated at the hands of the Stationing Committee; "I am very sorry for you, brother, but you are always having difficulties on your fields and the Stationing Committee does not know what to do with you." What he meant was that the Stationing Committee did know very well what to do and had done it, and his condolence was his only chance of administering his censure. Look again at this "apology" and do we not at once see the Stationing Committee dealing with a charge of some sort or other, reaching a verdict and executing a sentence? Somewhat, indeed, after the manner of a French army court-martial when it arraigned, tried, and sentenced, the now honored Dreyfus, without the knowledge of the accused. Pretty business this for a committee composed of godly men, whose duty is simply to station their peers. Such business as the above can only be ignominous, inasmuch as every minister's character as a man and an administrator has already been pronounced upon by a court of the church before his stationing could take place. Doubtless there are few ministers, if they faithfully discharge their office, but some one will find fault with. It would be remarkable, were it otherwise, but for a Stationing Committee to assume such a method of administration is simply monstrous.

It would be no difficult task, in so far as the stationing work of the Bay of Quinte Conference is concerned, to discover elements in the character of its administration and work corrupting enough to destroy anybody, and so enormous that even a political huckster for gain, might hesitate to use. All this may be considered destructive. If so, it is nevertheless only too evident fact. Perhaps, this much is constructive; Would it not be far safer to focus the stationing power in a unit, carefully safeguarded. The possibilities of personal pique, paternalism, sophistry or mere chicanery, ought to be forever eliminated from such important matters. The demands legitimate and fair of the minister and the charge should be the sole considerations, or the church will be speedily ruined, if it is not already. A committee, unless carefully limited and safeguarded, is a very dangerous thing. This might point to something like episcopal control. I would not with many others greatly object to such a method of administration if duly constituted. A Canadian, I think, would scarcely take to any Yankee-Doodle form of such government. But, perhaps, it could be found somehow if not by the Methodists, by the United Church. As matters are, it is no marvel at all that men are keeping out of the ministry, and what is equally as bad, out of the church. It is hoped, therefore, that the church, in some more Catholic sense may safeguard these matters, and the problem of men and stipends will not be difficult to solve.

SOFTNESS OF SEALSKIN.

Is Rivalled by Human Hair Where Dandruff is Eradicated.

Sealskin is admired the world over for its softness and glossiness; and yet the human hair is equally as soft and glossy when healthy; and the radical cause of all hair trouble is dandruff, which is caused by a pestiferous parasite that saps the vitality of the hair at its root. Newbro's Herpicide is the only preparation that is fatal to the dandruff germ. Without dandruff there is no falling hair, but a luxuriant growth of glossy, soft hair is certain. Scouring the scalp won't cure dandruff. Kill the dandruff germ. Thousands of women owe their beautiful suits of hair to Newbro's Herpicide.

Big Show Almost Here.

MANY SENSATIONS PROMISED BY THE BARNUM & BAILEY CIRCUS MANAGEMENT.

A great deal of local interest has already been aroused by the preliminary announcements of the Barnum & Bailey Greatest Show on Earth, and circus day in Belleville, August 8th, promises to be one of the biggest days of the amusement year. The coming of the big show is, in itself an event of importance to thousands of circus-lovers, but added interest is given to the circus engagement this year by the announcement of an unusually large number of arenic features of a novel and even sensational character.

A resume of this year's arenic features gives the following interesting information; "The show opens with a new spectacle, depicting with military and allegorical display the closing days of the Russo-Japanese war in Manchuria, and the successful termination of the sanguinary struggle through the diplomatic offices of the President of the United States. The spectacle bears the meaningful title, "Peace," and is the most ambitious and gorgeous military display ever attempted by a circus management. The circus proper, which follows the spectacle, serves to introduce 300 artists from all parts of the world in a gigantic triple-ring arenic performance. Among the famous acts are the Imperial Viennese Troupe of aerialists; the Steves, in a new and novel performance called the "Aerial Tremplin"; the Florenz, La Mont and Grunatho Troupes of acrobats; the Troupe La Carmen, in a remarkable series of feats on a high wire; the Bisera and Vorlop companies of whirlwind dancers; twenty famous principal riders, embracing Josie DeMott, the somersault equestrienne; the Rooneys, Fred and Ella Bradna; Dallie Julian and Fred Ledgett, Pauline Heil, Celia Sebastian, Ouika and Marie Meers, Fred Derrick, Wm. Melrose, Wm. DeMott, Chas. Siegrist, and Les Rowlandes, who give a clever acrobatic act in a tallyho; all kinds of trained animal displays, presenting Thompson's horses, a remarkable company of equines that perform surprising feats at liberty and in harness; a double herd of trained seals; a combination act, introducing two ponies, a baby elephant and dogs; and three herds of elephants in a big battle scene; a company of forty clowns, whose mission is to inject comedy into the performance, and in which they are uproariously successful; a revival of the old Roman hippodrome on a scale of unparalleled grandeur, and a zoological collection embracing four giraffes, the only bi-horned rhinoceros in the United States, and hundreds of other rare and curious wild beasts.

With all these attractions — and they would seem to be sufficient to satisfy the most exacting—several distinct thrillers are announced. In the "Dip of Death," a daring American girl rides forty feet through the air in an inverted racing machine, and in the "Two Twirls of Terror," the Boller Brothers, two daring bicyclists, turn mid-air somersaults on their wheels. These acts might aptly be termed "the limit," for each in its way seems to be the extreme point to which human daring and ingenuity may go without courting certain destruction.

INTERIOR DECORATING

That's Our Business

And we keep an experienced staff of workmen busy the year round.

True we do outside painting also, but we give preference to decorating.

We have been so busy with our interior work this year that we have found it impossible to do much exterior work.

The service we render our customers is par excellent—better far than is found elsewhere—we have the materials and the methods—have the ideas and the designs. This is why we have so much decorative work continually ahead of us.

Most people understand that we do better work and use better materials than is usually used by painters. This is another reason for our everlasting busy-ness.

We use white lead in all our work absolutely better than any other lead that can be found and superior to anything carried on sale in Belleville—and we can prove it Work with this lead will wear longer by 40 per cent and look as much better.

STOLEN FURS IN OFFICE.

M. F. St. John Wrote Letter to Boarding House Mistress Before Suiciding.

Montreal, July 26.—Four thousand dollars' worth of the stolen New York-Chatham furs, found in M. F. St. John's office yesterday, probably furnishes the best clue to the unfortunate man's suicide, although it is not yet known for certain that the dealer's furs really were stolen. There is a strong presumption that he did so, for the man arrested has made no statement.

St. John wrote a letter to Mrs. Baker, with whom he boarded on Laval avenue, giving her $500 for her and her husband's friendship, and that lady speaks in the best terms of the man who took his life in so tragic a manner.

It transpires that his real name was Axlerod, and he was an Austrian by birth. He will be buried to-day in the Jewish cemetery.

Boy Drowns in Old Cistern.

Toronto, July 26.—Frank Brooks, aged 10, of Mimico, with a companion, aged 7, yesterday started out to gather firewood. Near the Toronto brass rolling mills they came across a covered cistern. The Brooks boy moved the cover and then stepped on it to peer into the vault. It tipped and he dropped into 10 feet of water. The Clark boy hurried home and told his mother, but rescuers were too late. Two men recovered the body with a pole, into which nails had been driven. The boy's father is an employe of the Menzie wall paper factory.

Drowns at Rondeau.

Blenheim, July 23.—A sad accident happened yesterday morning about 11 o'clock at Rondeau, when Arch Nichol, aged 25, of Harwich Township, was drowned.

The gasoline launch owned by Nichol and Reynolds was making a trip from Rondeau to Government Park with a party of Dresden excursionists on board. When about one mile from the dock at Government Park the boiler of the engine exploded and Nichol was blown into the lake and drowned. The rest of the party were picked up by a tug from Rondeau.

H. S. Scadding May Die.

Toronto, July 26.—About 9 o'clock last night Henry Simcoe Scadding fell while alighting from a Belt Line car, on Sherbourne street, between Wilton avenue and Gerrard street. He was unconscious when taken up, and at an early hour this morning he was in the same condition. As Mr. Scadding is a large man, and 70 years of age, it is feared the shock may prove fatal.

Dies From Fall.

Hamilton, July 26.—William Elliott, 2 Argue street, the laborer who fell at the Savoy Theatre Tuesday, died at St. Joseph's Hospital yesterday, and an inquest will be held. The dead man came from Ireland recently, and had no friends here. The other laborers on the job have gone out on strike until new scaffolds are erected.

Toss Babes to Firemen.

Rochester, N. Y., July 26.—Mrs. Louise Helling was burned to death at an early morning fire at 224 North street. Five other persons narrowly escaped with their lives. Mothers tossed babies from the second-storey windows into the arms of policemen and firemen.

Miss Bessie Simpson has returned to the D. & D. Institute, Belleville, after visiting Mrs. Davis.

Kingston News; "At the close of the Sydenham St. Methodist S. S. on Sunday afternoon a handsome bible was presented to Mrs. E. O. White, nee Sarah Bennett, by Mr. R. D. Anglin, on behalf of his class. Mr. Anglin spoke very highly of Mrs. White and the esteem in which she and her three children were held. Their loss he felt would be another church's gain, as he was sure they would always be Sunday school workers. He regretted very much losing her from his class. Mrs. White made a feeling reply, thanking them very much for their kindness shown to her. She was very much surprised, but regretted leaving the school in which she had always enjoyed working. Mr. T. F. Harrison, superintendent also spoke, stating that he was very sorry to lose her and children from the school, as she was always cheerful and friendly. He had grown to know the children by their politeness to him on the street. He wished them every success in their new home. The school then sang "God be with you till we meet again," with Miss McIntyre at the piano. Mrs. White left to-day for her new home in Toronto."

FAMILIAR THINGS.

(Florence Wilkinson.)

Nay, loose my hand and let me go!
  God's glories pierce and frighten.
I want my house, my fires, my bread,
  My sheets to wash and whiten.

I liked the dusty roads of earth,
  The brambles and the roaming,
I liked the flowers that used to fade,
  The small lamp in the gloaming.

The fields of God they blind my eyes,
  Dread is this heavenly tillage.
I want the sweet lost homeliness
  Of the dooryards of our village.

Where are the accustomed common things,
  The cups we drank together;
The old shoes that he laced for me,
  The cape for rainy weather.

Dear were our stumbling human ways
  His words' impetuous flurry,
His tossed hair, the kind, anxious brow,
  The step's too eager hurry.

O tall archangel with such wings,
  Your beauty is too burning!
Give me once more my threadbare dress
  And the sound of his feet returning.

One of the most ominous of recent incidents for Russia is the agreement between the Emperors of Russia, Germany, and Austria-Hungary, that the latter two may intervene to secure Russia's hold on Poland if the Russian Government finds itself unable to suppress the revolution there. New York is threatened with an industrial conflict involving 100,000 men in the building trades. It is said that already 800 strike-breakers are in readiness to take the place of the strikers. The strike-breaker is a modern development, and while he is seldom an efficient or steady worker, his influence is strong in weakening the determination of men who fancy their places have been taken.

No American pioneer is more worthy of a monument than Champlain and therefore all Canadians will be pleased to know that his memory has just been honored by one on Mount Desert Island, Maine, which he discovered in 1604, four years before he took up his residence in Quebec. The monument is a moss-covered boulder with suitable inscription. It is to be hoped that it will escape the vandalistic proclivities of American tourists, who chip pieces off other monuments with proverbial recklessness.

A recent incident in the United States House of Representatives shows that Kentucky politicians are experts in the uses of language as strong as their Bourbon whiskey. One of them undertook to illustrate to the House how "so-called 12-year-old rye whiskey is made in two minutes." Taking a quart of pure alcohol he added a few drops of coloring matter, a little oil to mellow it, and some bitter flavoring extracts, and then said: "I defy any whiskey connoisseur in this House to smell and taste this product and distinguish between it and whiskey that has been kept in a charred oak barrel for ten years. It is made of pure alcohol, yet you put this stuff into a man, and it becomes pure hell. It would eat the insides out of a pile driver and make a rabbit spit in a dog's face."

HOW IT SPREADS

The first package of Dr. Leonhardt's Hem-Roid (the infallible Pile cure) that was put out went to a small town in Nebraska.

It cured a case of Piles that was considered hopeless.

The news spread, and the demand prompted Dr. J. S. Leonhardt, of Lincoln, Neb., the discoverer, to prepare it for general use. Now it is being sent to all parts of the world.

It will cure any case of Piles.

A Lover of Pigs.

For many years Lord Gardenstone was one of the characters of Edinburgh and as such received a place among the famous Kay's portraits. He was represented riding on an old horse, with a dog in front and a boy dressed in a kilt behind. A detailed account of the picture states that Kay portrayed him as, what he really was, a very timid horseman, mounted on an old hack, which he had selected for its want of spirit, preceded by his favorite dog Smash and followed by a highland boy, whose duty it was to take charge of the horse on arriving at parliament house. His eccentricity took the even stranger form of a strong affection for pigs. He became so much attached to one that he allowed it to share his bed, and when good feeding and rapid growth made it a rather cumbersome bedfellow it was still lodged in comfortable quarters in the apartment. During the daytime it followed him about like a dog. One morning a farmer had occasion to visit his lordship and, being shown into his bedroom, stumbled upon some object. That object gave vent to an uncompromising grunt and squeal of complaint, and from the bed there proceeded a voice, "It is just a bit sow, poor beast, and I laid my breeches on it to keep it warm all night."—Dundee Advertiser.

Eating Ants For Dessert.

Savages, we know, indulge in such luxuries as grubs and locusts, but for a civilized white man to finish up his dinner with a dish of raw ants seems too nasty to be credible. Yet in Mexico it is the custom—and a custom adopted by plenty of colonials and visitors. The ant eaten is called the honey ant and is perhaps as curious an insect as lives. With a tiny head and legs, it has a huge body as big as a large pea, and this is yellow and swollen with excellent honey. In each nest there are 300 or 400 of these honey ants, which are attended by thousands of others. The honey ants hang on to the roofs of the cells in the nest while the others feed them. They are, in fact, living storehouses of winter food. An observer says that if one of the honey ants falls from his perch a worker will go and pick him up and replace him. This feat is equivalent to a man walking up the face of a cliff carrying a large buffalo or cart horse on his back.

Truly Considerate.

A considerate patient had an artery opened by mistake for a vein by a French surgeon in the operation of bloodletting. The woman succumbed not long after to the effect of the blunder, but in her will left the surgeon a small yearly pension, "not only to comfort him, but so that he could live the rest of his life without doing vivisection any more." A similar historic occurrence is related in the Medical Times of a Polish princess who had had the same experience. She added a clause to her will expressing her forgiveness and leaving the surgeon a small pension to indemnify him for the "loss of reputation that may follow my sad catastrophe."

There Are No Certain Ones.

"The only objection I have to this story," said the cynical bachelor, "is the frequent use of the phrase 'a certain girl.' The phrase is grossly inaccurate, as everybody well knows that all girls are exceedingly uncertain."

Love when true, faithful and well fixed is eminently the sanctifying element of human life. Without it the soul cannot reach its fullest height or holiness.—Ruskin.

SUNSHINE FURNACE

has two features which no good furnace should be without—water pan and large double feed-doors.

The water pan will produce enough steam to moisten the hot air, and so keep the atmosphere pure and fresh.

The large double feed-doors make the furnace easy to feed—you do not have to be an expert stoker to keep from hitting the door-frame every time you try to put in a shovel of coal!—and rough chunks of wood can be put in easily.

Every feature in the "Sunshine" is given the same care and thought.

A brass bed is always in keeping with any furniture for a cozy bedroom. It imparts an atmosphere of richness and luxury that can be equaled in a wooden bed only at great expense.

A brass bed is more easily kept clean than one made of wood, does not gather the dust, and, when necessary to sweep under, is so light that it rolls aside at almost a touch.

Rigidity, finish and the harmony of the lines in construction, have combined to make Ives Brass Beds famous.

"He is the adviser of the president of the union."

"He's the 'whole thing,' isn't he?" asked the mayor.

"That I cannot answer. He has the confidence of the committee."

"I don't suppose it will do any good to ask about the buried dynamite and the fortifications on the hill?"

"None whatever."

"Then what did you hope to accomplish?"

Raymond fired a little. "I came here to tell you that if you think you can overawe this camp with 1,000 men or 2,000 men you are mistaken. Since this trouble began hundreds of the most reckless and dangerous characters in the west have flocked to Sky in support of the miners. These recruits are accustomed to the sound of guns. Furthermore, Bozle itself—in fact, the whole western end of the county—is tired of the domination of the eastern end, and they will aid and abet the miners. Your party is in a minority in the state, and you cannot safely look for support to the militia. Therefore, for all these reasons and because I knew Munro and his men, I advise, I plead with you, to stay where you are. There is one other consideration: The party which I represent—the free miners and prospectors, like Kelly and Bingham and Reese—have stood aside from this quarrel. We have had no share in it. We have kept our men out of it, but if you march against the hill many of our fellows will join Munro. And I want to tell you, gentlemen, that one of these free miners—these rangers of the hills—is more dangerous than twenty little dagoes. A hundred of them would stand off 500 of your men."

His deep earnestness impressed them all, and a silence followed his last words. At last Don said:

"Gentlemen, Raymond is not merely an acquaintance; he was in my employ for some years, and he is my friend. I am forced to give his words great weight. I suggest that we try to arrange a meeting between the miners and ourselves and the governor and reach some peaceful solution."

The sheriff leaped to his feet. "That would make us the laughingstock of the whole country."

"Better be that than a melancholy example of foolish pride and obstinacy," Raymond interjected.

At this point the argument stuck. Mackay, the county attorney, and the sheriff stood for war; the mayor and Barnett, being for the moment under the power of Raymond's earnest glance, pleaded rather spiritlessly for at least a stay in proceedings.

"I think it all a ruse to gain time," said Mackay. "I think we ought to hold this man here and march at once. He is known to be a friend of Munro. If we allow him to go back he will inform"—

Raymond smiled grimly. "My services as a spy are not needed. Every movement you make will be watched by a hundred eyes, and back of the eyes will be a gun."

The mayor rose. "Well, gentlemen, I don't see that we can decide anything here. We have Mr. Raymond's opinion that our attack on the hill will result in disaster. The sheriff is confident he can win practically without a struggle. This is no place to take a vote on so momentous a subject." Here he looked at his watch. "And it is lunchtime. I suggest that we go to lunch and meet at 3 o'clock in the committee room."

After they were well out of the house Barnett said: "You see how it is. They are inexorable."

"May I come in?" asked Mrs. Barnett at the door. "Luncheon is waiting."

"Certainly," said Don. "The council is over."

"You were all very quiet. I expected to hear loud voices and the sound of blows." She came toward Raymond, her face sweet with kindly interest. "How do you do, Robert? It's good to see you. How well you look!" As they moved toward the door she added in a low voice, "I want to talk with you about—you know who."

She put him at her left hand and Ann next him, an arrangement which pleased him. The table was filled, as usual, with people "on their way to California," and Raymond felt himself to be the object of comment both above and below board, and it irritated him a little.

"This is a long way from Sky," he said to Ann as his eyes absorbed the shining, flower decked table and its tasteful service. "You left just in time. It is white with snow up there today, and bleak and cold. Have you had no word of Louis?"

"No news whatever. I am sure he is on his way up to you."

"I am starting back at once, and I will take care of him. Trust him to me."

When at last the hostess rose, the young miner's heart contracted with a sudden realization that his hour of grace was over and that the time had come for his return to the stern realities of life.

In the hall he extended his hand in fixed resolution to Mrs. Barnett.

"Goodby. It's hard to leave you and this glorious home"—

"Must you go today?"

"Yes. I must hurry back. Kelly needs me, and then there is Louis."

"Well, if you must— But do come again, Rob. Don't mind who is here; come to see us. It is always good to have you here."

"As soon as this strike is over I will do so," he said very earnestly.

Don followed him to his room, and while resuming his big boots Raymond said: "Don't let that sheriff head me off. Keep him for a couple of hours, and I'll be out of his reach."

"Don't worry about the sheriff, old man, and throw your whole weight against Munro's policy of resistance."

"I've done that from the first."

Ann was waiting to see him as he came out into the upper hall. It was her first deliberate motion toward him, but her face gave him no hint of her quickened pulses as she said: "Give Nora my love, and greet grand old Matt for me, won't you? I feel as if I ought to go back"—

"You must not, much as we all need you. This is no time for you to be there. I wish Nora would come down"—

"I wish she would; and please let me know instantly that Louis is safe with you."

"I will do so. When do you go east?"

"Not till spring."

"Then I may see you again." His words formed a declaration as well as a question, and his glance meant more than his tone.

Her eyes fell. "Perhaps," and she added, with an upward glance, "if you visit us soon."

"That I will do. Goodby."

"Goodby, and please don't be reckless."

CHAPTER XXII.

Raymond looked back occasionally, half expecting pursuit. He could see in the valley below the town the gleaming white tents of the little army hesitant to march, and its plan of invasion seemed born of folly and madness. He spurred his horse down the trail to meet the night which rose to meet him from the valley like a chill, engulfing flood. An hour's brisk ride brought him to the open, and just at the edge of the peak he came upon a forlorn camp, a small tent under a fir, and a group of four men sitting about a fire. At their call he turned and rode up to them. They were an outpost of Munro's guard, a part of the cordon he had thrown round the peak and camp.

One of them knew him and, greeting him pleasantly, asked where he had been.

He replied with candor. "I've been down to the Springs to induce those 'yaller legs' to put off their expedition."

"What luck did ye have?"

"None. They're coming."

Significant glances passed, and the firelight brought out stern lines on their faces. At length Brown, the corporal, said solemnly: "Well, if they want fight they can have it. But say, Rob, does the captain know you're on the road? There was a hullabaloo in town about you last night. A lot of the fellers think you went down to give away the camp, and some said if you ever came back they'd string you up. Now, I guess you better stay here while I ride up and tell the cap you're here."

"I don't think that's necessary, but you might jog along with me if you want to go. Otherwise I'll go alone."

"Well, I'll tell ye, Rob," said Brown in an embarrassed way, "these monkeys on the peak have got an awful slant against you and Kelly, and they's two or three fellers who are working against you underhand right along. You don't want to take no chances. They'll do ye if they can."

Raymond was impressed with Brown's earnestness and by the admirable loyalty of his fellows camped there in the snow. "Boys, what are you staying here for?" he asked. "This isn't a picnic. What do you do it for?"

Brown answered, "We do it because we want to help these miners stand off the 'plutes.'"

Raymond mused. "But you're friendly toward Kelly & Raymond?"

"Sure thing. You fellers are all right. You've punched cows, and Kelly is an old broncho buster himself. But let me tell ye this, Rob, we're goin' to need you and your men if these chaps come up here the way they talk o' doin'—with Gatling guns and all that. The boys have been rollin' logs for a fort all day. You can just about see it from here—just on that point."

"Well, suppose we ride along," said Raymond, and as he took a last look around his heart warmed to these rough souls who had taken sides in a quarrel not their own, moved by a blind desire to aid their fellows in a war against privilege and social caste.

Brown called another man out of the group to ride with them, and they started away. On the hill east of the town and overlooking the valley lights could be seen flickering. The corporal lifted his arm and pointed that way. "There they are building the fort."

Raymond's blood began to stir, his military instruction to freshen, and for a moment, as he paused there in the darkness, he understood something of Munro's joy in a defensive campaign, but he said aloud: "It's all a mistake, Brown. They can't afford to fight the sheriff. The law is on his side."

Brown grimly replied, "Well, we'll give him a little run for his money, anyway."

Raymond smiled at the boyish quality of this remark, but made no comment upon it, and allowed himself to be led by a roundabout path to the west side of the town. At last his guide paused. "You're all right now."

"There they are building the fort."

"I wish you'd tell Jack I'm here and that I want to see him," said Raymond. "I'm much obliged to you."

"Oh, that's all right, Rob; take keer o' yerself." And the two men rode off.

"Good luck, boys."

As he rode up to Kelly's cabin and called out, "Hello, the house!" Matt opened the door and, with a lad on either side of him, peered out. "Is that you, Rob?"

"The very same, Matt."

"Well, now, wait a whist and I'll come and put out your horse."

Mrs. Kelly called cheerily: "Rob, we're glad to see you safe returned. Are you hungry?"

He slid from his horse. "I am empty as a wolf in March," he replied. "Where's Louis?"

"Louis! He hasn't returned. Didn't you leave him at the Springs?"

"No. He left early this morning and Ann thought he had hit the stage road for the camp. I hope he hasn't gone wrong."

This news took away a large part of his pleasure in the friendly hearth to which he was welcomed and, removing his outer garments, he bent to the blaze in silence while Mrs. Kelly spread some food before him.

Kelly listened to the news of Louis' disappearance with less concern: "He's run into some of Munro's men and is probably up at headquarters. He couldn't get lost. He knows the road. What's the word from the valley?"

"They're coming, Matt."

"When?"

"Tonight or tomorrow."

"I've been receiving delegations and posters and all kinds of warnin's. It's been a lively day on the hill. They're buildin' a fort."

"So Frank Brown told me. How do our men feel?"

Matt rubbed his chin. "They're a little uneasy, to tell the truth."

Mrs. Kelly interrupted. "Sit up and eat, Rob. Talk afterward."

Raymond could see that Kelly was disturbed, and that he had something to tell which he did not care to have Nora know. It was plain that he no longer minimized the danger, and his face fell easily into stern lines.

Seizing the moment when his wife left the room to put the youngsters to bed, the big miner laid a sheet of paper before his partner. "What do you think of that?"

Raymond looked at the death's head warning, for such it was, with amazement. It seemed at first sight a rough joke. In one corner glared the conventional crossbones and skull, rudely drawn, and to the right and beneath them sprawled the word "Beware!" All this was amusing, but the logic of the argument which followed gave him thought:

> This neutral business is played out. Either you are for us or you are for the dudes. If you are for the dudes, get out. If you are for us, send in your men to help us repel the invaders. This is our first warning. Remember the Red Star!
> COMMITTEE.

Raymond rose. "Let's go down to my shack. We can talk matters over there more freely."

"I'll be with you in a few minutes," answered Kelly.

It was warm in the cabin, for the faithful Perry had built a fire early in the evening, and after he had lighted a couple of candles and kicked the fire into a blaze the room resumed its cheerful glow, but he was too deeply disturbed over Louis' nonappearance to fully enjoy it. He took out his revolver and was examining it carefully as Kelly entered.

"Did ye meet with any trouble, Rob!"

"None. Some of the committee of safety wanted to arrest me and hold me as hostage, but Barnett stood 'em off. I didn't see a soul till on my way back I came on one of Jack's picket posts, where I found four men camped in misery and eating snowballs for supper."

"It's strange the power he has over them wild cowboys. Drunk or sober, they do as he tells them. His trouble will come with Brock and Smith, who are neither miners nor cowboys, for they are all tryin' to derive their power from Carter, who is dead sick of the business and likely to fly the coop at any minute. Where you goin'?"

"Uptown to take a look round for Louis."

"You go not! 'Tis a poor time for you to visit the street. They have it in their heads that you are playin' the spy."

"I must find that boy. He left the Springs at 8 this morning, and his sister is worried about him."

"I will go for ye, Rob. It's too dangerous for you."

Raymond rose and laid a hand on Kelly's shoulder. "See here, Matt, I want to talk plainly to you. You've got to bundle up that little wife and the boys and get out of here. I'm going to take a hand in this game. I'm going to call the independents together and make a stand."

Kelly faced him. "If ye make a stand I must be beside ye. What is your plan?"

"I will not tell you unless you promise to take Nora out of danger."

Kelly's face grew stern, and his voice fell to a level hoarseness that sent a quiver through the young man's blood. "See here, boy, we struck hands on this partnership. We share and share alike. I am with ye and so is Nora. I am ready to dig a hole in the ground and stand 'em off. I'm worn out with their comin' and goin', whipsawin' now on this, now on that side o' the question. They've declared war on us. Now, by the powers, we'll meet 'em halfway!"

Raymond surrendered. "All right, Matt, here's my hand. We'll defend Nora and the mine too. When your fighting blood is up I don't want any dispute between us."

Kelly's eyes began to twinkle. "I begin to draw me breath natural again. For weeks I've been wanting to put me fist beneath the noses of these rapscallions, but for fear of Ann and Nora I could not."

"Very well, we'll send out a call for a meeting tonight. The quicker we move the better. I feel as you do—now we are acting a man's part. There is a big element here that is sick of this monkey business. Half the camp will rally in our support. I know it. Then we will serve notice on Munro"— The sound of hurrying feet interrupted him, and a moment later Louis burst into the room.

"Oh, Rob, I'm glad you're here. Hello, Matt!" He shook hands, breathing heavily. His skin was flushed and his eyes shining. "You ought to be uptown. Jack is makin' 'em sit up. He shot one man. They were building a fort, and a drunken fellow"—

"Take your time," said Raymond coldly. "There are several minutes left in the box. You might begin at the beginning and tell me why you sneaked away again without saying goodby to Ann?"

The boy was not daunted. "As soon as I heard what the sheriff's plans were I wanted to leave, but it was so dark; that was last night. I was afraid to try it, so this morning I pulled out early."

"Where have you been all day?"

"I've been with Jack. I met his men way down the canyon, and they took me to headquarters, where I told my story, and then I went to supper with Jack; and then this big row came on, and I stayed to see that. Oh, but Jack is fine! He faced the whole crowd alone. One man wanted to clean out your cabin. He said it was a nest of traitors. He drew his gun on Jack, but he hadn't time to pull the trigger. Jack's bullet went through his arm."

Raymond, who had been studying the lad with softening glance, interrupted him: "Now, see here, Louis, you sit down here by the fire. Don't let your words all try to get out of the corral at the same time. We want to know all about it, but we don't want you to hurry. It's only 10 o'clock, and you can get over a whole lot of ground by midnight."

The two men looked at each other with grave eyes. The boy was trembling with excitement, and his voice was high and strained.

Kelly said gently: "My lad, 'twould serve your sister better if you kept out of this. I don't like to see you riding between the lines as a spy."

"I didn't intend to be a spy, but when I heard the trick they were going to play I couldn't help hurrying back."

"What trick?"

"Why, they're going to load all their men into freight cars and make them keep quiet, and then they're going to run them through Jack's guard at Boggy clear to the end of the rails."

"That's a very nice plan," said Raymond. "When do they intend to come?"

"Tomorrow night if the guns arrive for which they are waiting."

"How did you drop on to this?"

"I heard Cousin Don tell Dr. Braide. He wanted Dr. Braide to follow next day in case of accidents."

"You've told this to Jack?"

"Yes. I wanted to come and see you, Matt, but he said I could tell you afterward."

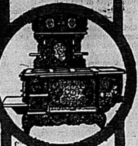
Raymond again looked at his partner. "Well, I don't see that there is anything for us to do now."

To be continued.

"SWISS FOOD"

The Oven That Ends Guesswork

Before you put the roast in an Imperial Oxford oven, let the draft bring the heat to the right point. You'll know when it gets there if you'll look at the oven thermometer. After the roast goes in, you can know (not guess) it will be cooked right in a certain definite time. There's no ups-and-downs to the oven-heat in a range built as this one is,—the diffusive oven-flue takes all the guess work out of cooking, all the drudgery out of oven-use



That Rack That Ends Bother

When the roast needs basting, pull forth the Imperial Oxford draw-out oven rack,—roast and all—slide it right out where you can get at it. Needn't reach in and scorch your fingers nor sear your wrists,—baste it in comfort. That one thing alone—the draw-out rack—ought to make you like this range above all ranges. And that's only one of the twelve better things about this range. Come and look.

BOOK ILLUMINATION.

The underlying thought which has inspired illumination from its very beginning is more interesting even than the gorgeous pages which pass beyond our power of appreciation and defy our comprehension. To the ancients the rarest gems in all the world were the gems of thought. The book was the tangible and visible expression of man's intellect, worthy of the noblest setting. Its covers might be made of tables of beaten gold inlaid with precious jewels, its words might be written in minium of rare brilliancy brought from India or Spain or in Byzantine ink made from pure oriental gold upon parchment soft as velvet made from the skins of still born kids, while upon the ample margins could be displayed miniatures and decorations portraying the highest skill of the great artists of the day.

The earliest example of illumination is a papyrus in the Louvre in Paris, which contains paintings representing funeral ceremonies executed in bright colors, touched in its high lights with pencilled gold. Although we find frequent mention of some poem written in gold, of some magnificent volume or codex of colored vellum or some collection of miniatures or of some magnificent gift book decorated for prince or church, yet this simple, imperfect fragment at the Louvre is the sole tangible evidence we have that so obvious a form of artistic culture as the art of illumination was known to the long period of classical antiquity or to the later luxuries of the life of Athens and Corinth, of Pergamum and Ephesus, of Cyzicus or Rhodes, Syracuse or Tarentum, of Sybaris, of Pompeii and of Rome.

With the invention of printing the demand for the illuminator and the scribe became gradually less, and finally by the end of the sixteenth century illumination ceased to be an art. The book as the developer of the people in science and literature and in learning generally had crowded out the book as an object of art. It need not have done this, perhaps, but as a matter of fact it did.

EAGLES IN BATTLE.

The Daring and Skill of These Fierce Birds of Prey.

Ornithologists are inclined to discourage the idea that eagles are in the habit of attacking large animals, but a contest witnessed by an observer dispels such a theory. The battle was between an eagle and a stag.

The bird singled out from a herd one particular buck, which it succeeded in driving from the rest. It struck the animal with its powerful wings, knocked it down and finally killed it. A still more remarkable spectacle is well authenticated. An eagle attacked a fawn in the highlands of Scotland. The cries of the little one were answered by its dam, which sprang upon the eagle and struck it repeatedly with its forefeet. Fawn, deer and eagle rolled down a declivity, the bird was dislodged from its hold and the fawn rescued.

Many traditions are extant as to the carrying off of children by eagles. The most recent case bearing close scrutiny is one which happened in South Africa. A Boer farmer whose stock had been harried by eagles lay in ambush for the robbers and saw one of them descend and carry off the five-year-old child of one of the Kaffir servants. He shot the bird, which, with the child still clutched in its grip, fell into a thorn bush. The bird was dead, but the child was little hurt.

Two eagles will stalk a covert in concert. While one conceals itself the other beats about the bushes with great screaming, driving out its quarry for the hidden eagle to swoop down upon. An even more insidious method has been observed. An eagle seeing a sheep on the edge of a precipice flew at it, screaming shrilly and with forceful beat of wing hurled it into the valley below, where it could devour it at its leisure. In the light of such records there is good reason for believing the legend of the eagle dropping a tortoise on the bald head of Æschylus, the Greek poet, and so causing his death.

Her Dilemma.

A Doniphan county woman who was ill and found herself in a trying position explained her woe to a friend. "You see, my daughter Harriet married one of these homeypath doctors and my daughter Kate an allypath. If I call the homeypath my allypath son-in-law and his wife will get mad, an' if I call my allypath son-in-law then my homeypath son-in-law an' his wife will get mad, an' if I go ahead an' get well without either of 'em then they'll both be mad, so I don't see but I've got to die outright."

Echoes.

Every one is familiar with the phenomenon of echoes. In a cave in the Pantheon the guide, by striking the flap of his coat, makes a noise equal to a twelve pound cannon's report. The singularity is noticed in a lesser degree in the Mammoth cave in Kentucky. In the cave of Smellin, near Viborg, in Finland, a cat or dog thrown in will make a screaming echo lasting some minutes.

A Natural Wonder.

A person may not merit favor, as that is only the claim of man, but he can never demerit charity, for that is the command of God.—Sterne.

Mrs. Farwell's Guests

By A. M. Davies Ogden

Copyright, 1905, by McClure, Phillips & Co.

Out in the harbor the yacht, lying placidly at anchor, gleamed brilliantly white in the afternoon sunshine. A soft breeze stirred the awnings, deck chairs filled with comfortable cushions could be surmised. Altogether she presented a tantalizing picture to the girl who sat waiting on the long, hot dock. No one was in sight, the dock being a little way from the village. Miss Norton sighed wearily. It was partly to escape importunate thoughts that she had accepted this invitation; she longed to be out there on the cool, restful waters. She had come down by train, expecting to meet her hostess at the yacht landing, but as yet Mrs. Farwell had not appeared. Could anything have happened?

A quick, firm tread came down the wooden dock, and Miss Norton, a look of incredulity deepening into a startled dismay flashing across her face, shrank involuntarily back. Harris Hemingway, the man of all others whom she wished to avoid! She cast a desperate glance about her, but there was no escape. Hemingway came forward, lifting his hat. Miss Norton hastened to speak.

"They have not yet sent a boat in," she explained unnecessarily. "And the Farwells haven't come."

Hemingway consulted his watch.

"They told me to be here at 6," he said. "But I was delayed and missed my train. It's nearly 7 now. And you say they haven't turned up yet?" surprisedly.

"No," answered Miss Norton. "They were coming in their motor, you know. Oh, do you think anything could have happened?" clasping her hands in sudden anxiety. But Hemingway shook his head.

"I suspect they are all right," he responded reassuringly. "They have probably broken down somewhere. The best thing for us to do is to get on board."

"Very well," said the girl reluctantly. Inwardly she was making plans for getting away next morning. She simply could not go off on a three weeks' cruise with this man. What evil fate had conspired to throw them thus together when she had imagined him safely out west?

HARRIS HEMINGWAY, THE MAN OF ALL OTHERS SHE WISHED TO AVOID.

"You see, I was awfully lucky," he was saying. "Just as I was about off my brother turned up, and we decided the trip was not really obligatory. So I rang up Mrs. Farwell, and she told me that Bob Dickinson had backed out at the last moment and repeated her invitation to me. And so here I am," he repeated joyously. "Wasn't it luck?"

"Great luck," repeated Miss Norton, looking at him with rather curious eyes. She did not understand this new mood of his. In the early part of the winter the two had been great friends, and she had seen much of Hemingway. Latterly, however, he had seemed very busy. The few times they had met he had appeared tired and preoccupied, and unconsciously a vague coolness had grown up between them. Today he seemed more like his old self, and the pain at her heart deepened. Oh, why, why had she come!

He had discovered a small boat, with oars and rowlocks, tied to the end of the dock, and now helped her into it. Perhaps on board there might be some word from the Farwells. But the captain had been ordered for eight bells. It was now that and after. Should the dinner be served?

"It may be the best way to bring them," suggested Hemingway.

But the soup, the fish, had been eaten, the salad and now the dessert and coffee, and still no word. Miss Norton was becoming seriously worried when the splash of oars announced an arrival. However, the boat contained only one man.

"Telegram for Miss Norton," he called.

Hemingway watched the girl as she tore open the envelope. At her exclamation he started forward.

"Is anything wrong?" he demanded sharply.

"The—the automobile has broken down," answered the girl mechanically. This was worse than anything that had happened yet. "They cannot get here tonight. So they suggest that we try to find some one we know on shore." Her voice was uncertain. The last train was gone. She knew of no one in the neighborhood. Hemingway's face cleared.

"Why, the Mayhews have a place only a few miles from here," he exclaimed triumphantly. "We can easily get a trap at the station and drive out. I know they would be delighted."

"Emily Mayhew," repeated Miss Norton faintly. She go to Emily Mayhew's! That would indeed be a fitting climax for this wretched afternoon. Was it not Emily Mayhew with whom Hemingway had spent the most of his time at the Richardson dance? Was it not with Emily Mayhew that she had seen him in a hansom dashing down town? And had not more than one rumor of Emily Mayhew's engagement to Mr. Hemingway reached her? It would be horrible to go there, she reflected, yet what else could she do? Clearly it was impossible to remain on the yacht without Mrs. Farwell.

It could not be helped. Quietly she took her place in the boat to go ashore. Quietly she stepped into the ramshackle vehicle Hemingway succeeded in procuring. It was a clear, star lit night; the road, winding through English-like lanes, was fragrant with dew dampened flowers. Everything breathed of peace and beauty. Insensibly the girl's perturbation began to still itself.

Then all at once around a sudden corner came a rush of four blazing lights; the warning "honk, honk" of the hurrying monster. The station horse, taken unawares, backed precipitately. There was a bump, a crash.

Alicia, struggling slowly back to consciousness, found herself in Mrs. Farwell's arms. That little lady, seeing the girl's eyes open and realizing that she was safe, burst into tears.

"Oh, my dear, my dear!" she sobbed. "Wasn't it too awful? There we were speeding along, trying to make the yacht after all—for the breakdown proved not so serious as we feared—and didn't we run into you and nearly kill you? But the doctor says you are all right," she hurried on. "You only struck your head a tiny bit. You will be all right tomorrow."

"Where am I?" asked the girl wonderingly. She could see the pretty room wherein she lay. Whose could it be?

"Why, at the Mayhews'," responded Mrs. Farwell. "We had just stopped to pick up Emily and Bob, and she insisted that we come back at once. You see, we didn't know whether or not you were badly hurt. So she and Bob"—

"Bob?" queried Alicia, bewildered.

"Bob Hemingway, Harris' brother," explained Mrs. Farwell. "They are engaged, you know, although they have been trying hard to keep it a secret until Bob got home. But you know how easy that is," with a shrug. "And I believe there were some business complications too—matters which bothered both the boys. Anyway, between worry and work and looking after Emily, I know that poor Harris has been really distracted. By the way," sending a keen glance at the girl, "speaking of Harris, he is almost crazy and insists that he must see you. But," doubtfully, "do you think that you could stand it?"

"Yes," murmured Alicia in a queer, breathless little voice, "I think I could."

There was a slight noise at the door. Alicia opened her eyes. Mrs. Farwell was gone; Harris Hemingway, his eyes dark and wide with anxiety, stood there.

"Alicia," he cried, and there was no mistaking the love, eagerness and pain which rang through his voice. All coldness and misunderstanding melted before it like a mist before the sunshine.

With a contented little sigh, Alicia stretched forth both hands.

"Harris," she whispered happily, "why, Harris, dear!"

A Book on a Page.

Some of the feats attributed to ancient masters of caligraphy are almost past belief. Ælian knew an artist who wrote a distich in letters of gold, which he inclosed in the rind of a grain of corn. Oxford boasts a portrait of Charles I. which has as the lines of the head and ruff characters setting forth the book of Psalms, the creed and the Lord's Prayer. In the British museum is a portrait of Queen Anne about the size of one's hand. Upon it are what seem at first sight to be certain scratches, but which prove to be a transcript of a book. The "Iliad" of Homer in a nutshell, which Cicero is said by Pliny to have seen, sounds impossible, but it has been shown that the thing is feasible, given the man and that man the patience. A thin sheet of vellum, capable of folding easily, has been found to take 7,500 verses upon one side and the same number on the reverse. There you have the 15,000 verses of the "Iliad," all upon a single slip of vellum. The latter folds up, and readily, and you have your Homer in a nutshell.—St. James' Gazette.

Kept His Nerve.

An English clergyman had a rich parishioner, Lady Blank, who dictated to and hectored him outrageously. At length he declined to put up with this kind of treatment and told her ladyship so. Thereafter she refused to put anything in the offertory, merely making a stately inclination over the plate. This moved an elder to remark in her hearing, "We could do with less of her manners and more of her cash." The clergyman, dining at a lord's table, told this story with great success one evening. The host said with a frown, "Are you aware, sir, that Lady Blank is a relative of mine?" The clergyman smiled slightly. "No," he said, "I wasn't, but in future when I tell the story I'll always be careful to mention the relationship."

BUTTONS TELL OF HISTORY.

Discoveries in Old Fort George Present Some New Facts.

A very valuable collection of military buttons belonging to Mr. Richard Taylor was in the Historical room for some years, says Miss Carnahan, president of the Niagara Historical Society, writing in the Niagara-on-the-Lake Times, but for some time we have been without anything of much value in this direction, but last week a collection of buttons, belt buckles, etc., most of them found at Fort George, has been placed in the room. The first named collection might be said to represent the military history of Niagara, as almost every regiment, British, American or Canadian, ever stationed here, was represented. The present collection is not so complete, but has many interesting features. The buttons most frequently found are those of the 41st Regiment, 100th and Artillery. This was the 100th disbanded in 1818, not the 100th formed in 1858. The buttons of the 49th, Brock's regiment, are more rare.

Tells of History.

The six months' occupation by the Americans is attested by buttons with U. S. and Infantry and Artillery buttons. A very fine belt buckle of the 93rd Regiment has very conspicuous the Scottish thistle. Another sent by mail has the Sphinx, Egypt, Java, Niagara, but no number, and on looking up an army list it was found that the 89th Regiment, which suffered so heavily at Lundy's Lane, is entitled to these honors. Four regiments bear on their standards the word Niagara.

From India, Too.

Some time ago, when the circular in aid of Memorial Hall was sent to the colonels of regiments which had been stationed at Niagara, a letter was received from the commanding officer of the 70th Surrey, then in India, stating that he did not think that regiment had ever been in Niagara, but that their records were very incomplete and he would be glad of any information. In the register of St. Mark's were found births, marriages and burials of the 70th regiment.

Sir Walter's Brother.

A rather curious piece of information was found in an article published in the Buffalo historical publications that a traveler at Niagara in 1817, met Paymaster Scott, of the 70th regiment, a brother of Sir Walter Scott, and that he was supposed to be the writer of the Waverley Novels instead of Sir Walter. A letter was sent containing this information and a generous contribution of £2 was received for our fund. A letter with the words 70th Surrey which had lain at Fort George since 1817, was sent and a letter of thanks in answer, stating that it would be mounted for ornament on return to England.

Butler's Rangers.

The buttons of Butler's Rangers, disbanded in 1784, are now rare and still more so are those of the Queen's Rangers, the regiment of Col. John Graves Simcoe, our first governor. The Royal Canadian Volunteers, Canadian Regiment, and Royal Newfoundland Regiment all belong to the period of the war of 1812, as also does the King's 8th. The buttons of the 76th Regiment have the figure of an elephant and the word Hindostan. The King's Dragoon Guards, here in 1837, have the letters K. D. G. and the Royal Canadian Rifles have a bugle on each button.

Had No Number.

Any additional buttons will be gladly received, so that the collection may be made more complete. It is singular that the buttons on the coat of Major Campbell, lately given, have no number. He was a prisoner with Cornwallis in 1781 and afterwards belonged to the Royal Fusiliers and 5th Regiment, etc. The history of the British army as shown in buttons will be found interesting.

The Assistant Receiver-General.

Mr. David Creighton, Assistant-Receiver-General, who for fifteen years represented North Grey in the Provincial Legislature, and who participated in the celebration of the jubilee of Owen Sound's incorporation recently, is a native of Glasgow, Scotland, though of Irish parentage. He was born in the Scotch city April 1, 1843, and came to Canada with his parents in 1855. From 1864 up to his retirement from the journalistic field, Jan. 1, 1896, Mr. Creighton was editor and proprietor of The Owen Sound Times. In 1887 he was entrusted by the late Sir John Macdonald with the task of forming a stock company for the purpose of publishing a daily official organ in Toronto, the result being The Empire, the first number of which appeared Dec. 27, 1887. This paper continued to be published until the arrangement in February, 1895, by which it and The Mail both ceased publication, that a new paper, The Mail and Empire, might take its place. Mr. Creighton sat in the Legislature from 1875 to 1890, when he was defeated by Mr. Cleland of Meaford, the Liberal candidate. It was on May 10, 1895, that Mr. Creighton was appointed Assistant Receiver-General.

Risks Life to Save Guides.

W. W. Little, electrical engineer of the Dayton Hydraulic Co., Chicago, and Dr. C. H. Riggs, of Toronto, who recently returned home from a trout fishing trip on the Nipigon River, tell of an adventure that befell Mr. Little and two Indian guides. The canoe from which Mr. Little was fishing was upset, in the excitement of landing a fish, a short distance above Portage Island falls, which drops seventy-five feet. The guides could not swim, but Mr. Little managed by hard work to get them to the overturned canoe, which was drifting fast towards the falls, where almost certain death awaited them. Dr. Riggs and his two guides had witnessed the accident from a distance and hurried to the rescue, which they accomplished at the risk of their own lives. Mr. Little could have saved himself at the time of the accident, but risked his own life to save his guides. A log sent over the falls later to see what happened to it took seven minutes to appear outside of the boiling waters at the foot of the falls.

SHAVE WITH HOT STEEL.

An Old Cutler's Advice to Men Who Use a Razor.

"Whenever I hone a razor," said an old English cutler, "I always give some advice with it, free, gratis, and I take great satisfaction in knowing that I have made shaving easier and more comfortable for more than 10,000 men. Almost every barber will tell you how to strop a razor, but it takes a cutler to tell you how to care for your strop and how to get the best work out of your blade.

"A swing strop, canvass on one side and horse hide on the other, is the best. Always hold it taut and draw the razor lightly, but swiftly, from heel to point. If you let the strop sag you will put a round edge on your blade. Don't forget to cover your strop or put it away in a drawer after using. If it hangs in a bathroom near a window the dust and grime get into it and soon take the edge from your razor. Whether you keep the strop covered or whether you don't, rub your open hand over the two surfaces to free it from dust.

"But what I consider my most valuable advice is how to do away with shaving paper entirely and at the same time improve the cutting quality of the razor's edge. Nine men out of ten shave themselves in a room where there is running hot water. Now, the way to get a most gratifying result is this: Lather thickly and well and let it remain on the face half a minute before you begin to shave. If you have time wash it off, for with it will come the grit and dirt that you have loosened up in the pores of the skin, and then apply a second coat. It will be as soft, smooth and clean as new velvet.

"Now turn on the hot water faucet and let it run. Hold the razor under the stream until it is heated. Then take a slanting, or diagonal, stroke, like a farmer does with a scythe, not a square pull, and you will be amazed to find how beautifully and easily the hot blade cuts the beard.

"When it is filled with lather hold it under the running hot water instead of using shaving paper. This will wash off the lather and at the same time heat the blade again. Don't be afraid of taking out the temper. That would be impossible if you put the razor in a kettle and boiled it. Try the hot blade and you'll never shave with the cold steel again."

POISONS IN TOBACCO.

Tobacco destroys the taste, smell and digestion.

Tobacco kills mental, moral and physical vigor.

Tobacco paralyzes the mucous membranes and glands.

Tobacco's most dangerous poison, nicotine, is without antidote.

Tobacco contains prussic acid, ammonia, carbonic oxide and nicotine.

Tobacco contains stronger poisons than opium, alcohol, absinth or chloral.

A single leaf of tobacco or a single cigar contains enough of this poison to kill a man if applied properly.

Nicotine is the most deadly poison known to the pharmacopoea. A single drop or a grain will kill a large animal.

Nicotine resembles prussic acid in appearance, effects and activity. Nicotine's victims die in violent convulsions.

No Answer Handy.

This is only worth the telling, writes a correspondent, because it contains a retort which, though a triumph of inconsequence, seems to me quite unanswerable. I happened to be reading some obvious newspaper proofs in a train when the good natured man next to me, with the intention no doubt of making himself agreeable, asked, "Ah, are you connected with the press?" I intimated briefly and perhaps not overcourteously that it was none of his business. He persisted that it was a quite civil inquiry, which I met with the remark that I had not asked him whether he was a clerk or a shop assistant. As he was obviously neither, this nettled him. "If I knew," he said, "what newspaper you belong to I would never buy it again."—London Chronicle.

Buffalo Calves.

Buffalo calves, as a rule, are born in April and May. They are active, vigorous little creatures, mild eyed as domestic calves, but possessing much greater strength and endurance. In a few seconds after birth they can get on their feet, and in twenty minutes they are fit to fight for their lives. Usually it is unnecessary for them to defend themselves at this tender age, as a buffalo cow is quite capable of attending to any business which may arise in connection with the defense of her precious baby.

Pleasant Thoughts.

"Make yourselves nests of pleasant thoughts," counsels Ruskin. Bright fancies, satisfied memories, noble histories, faithful sayings, treasure houses of restful and precious thoughts which care cannot disturb or pain make gloomy or poverty take away from us—houses built without hands for our souls to live in—these things are not for earth alone; they are a part of the treasure that may be sent over.

Artful.

Young Mr. Fitts—What are you smiling at, dear? Mrs. Fitts—I was just thinking how you used to sit and hold my hand for an hour at a time before we were married. How silly you were! Mr. Fitts—I wasn't silly at all. I held your hand to keep you away from the piano.

The Regular Count.

The heart of a man who has lived to be seventy has beaten 200,000,000 times—not counting the times when be got scared and it worked overtime.—Somerville Journal.

ORIGIN OF NEW YORK NAMES

New Dorp Replaced a Town Thrice Destroyed by Fire.

There are some names of places in Greater New York common enough on the modern tongue, but the origin of which is not so generally known. New Dorp, on Staten Island, was so named by the Dutch to distinguish it from Oude Dorp (Old Dorp), the first Dutch settlement on the island, which was thrice destroyed by the Indians. Old Dorp stood to the northwest of Fort Wadsworth, about where Arrochar now stands. Two miles to the west of the ruins of Old Dorp the persistent Dutch built their New Dorp.

The northeast section of Staten Island, which until the formation of Greater New York was known as Castleton, and is still generally so called, takes its name from the fact that it once formed Governor Dongan's "manor of Castleton." Dongan—the Dongan hills are named from him—was of the family of the Earl of Limerick, and the seat of the earl in Ireland was Castletown, in the County Kildare. Many of Governor Dongan's descendants still live on Staten Island, some of them occupying and owning houses on the land of the old manor. At first Governor Dongan merely had a hunting lodge on Staten Island, and it is significant of the state of that portion of New York city at the end of the seventeenth century that at a meeting of the colonial council the governor was entered on the minutes as "absent, being engaged at his hunting lodge on Staten Island killing bears."

Bedlow's island, on which the statue of Liberty stands, was purchased in 1716 by an Englishman named Bedlow, who had amassed a large fortune in the East India trade and was an acquaintance of the then governor, the notorious Lord Cornbury. Bedlow received from Cornbury the privilege of victualing the British fleets which frequented New York. It was a most profitable monopoly, having in it great possibilities of graft. Cornbury is supposed to have "stood in" with Bedlow. When Bedlow died suddenly Cornbury seized all his papers, collected all the outstanding debts due the contractor, and kept everything of Bedlow's he could lay his hands on, leaving Bedlow's widow and children in poverty. Bedlow's island was bought and used by the contractor while he victualed the fleets as a depot for his stores.

Corlear's Hook takes its name from Jacob Corlear, the city trumpeter in the old Dutch days. Governor Beekman bought it from him. The governor also bought a country estate, the site of which is commemorated by Beekman street.

The true meaning of the word Manhattan, originally spelled variously as Mana-ha-ta, Manhattoes and Manhattan, is hid in mystery. It is not even certain whether it was the name of the place or of the tribe which inhabited it, or of both. The old idea that the word meant Place of Drunkenness has been satisfactorily confuted, but what does the word mean?

Spencer and Colors.

Herbert Spencer's notions of art were very crude. His favorite color was what he called "impure purple." He wore "impure purple" gloves and, finding that the furniture was a little somber, had a binding of "impure purple" pasted round it by a seamstress. He cut the first strip himself and showed her how to stick it on with paste. He had his vases filled with artificial flowers. He wished to have everything bright about him and consequently enjoyed color. When it was suggested he could get that in real flowers he replied: "Booh! They would want constant replenishing!" He wanted to know why the people should object to artificial flowers in a room any more than to an artificial landscape.—"Home Life With Herbert Spencer."

Pigs In China.

A Peking correspondent says: "It is no uncommon sight to see twelve or thirteen enormous fat pigs, with their legs tied, huddled close together having a ride in a Chinese cart with some sort of light cargo on top of them and a man sitting on the cargo. The pigs are silent, and consequently one would think they should not be objects for the action of the Society For the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The fact is that the animals are too fat and lazy to make any noise until disturbed at their journey's end, when bagpipes are as Italian opera to the terrific squealing heard."

The Dead Sea.

The Dead sea is 1,300 feet below sea level. There can, of course, be no outlet for the Dead sea, and the volume of from 6,000,000 to 10,000,000 tons of water that the Jordan throws into it every twenty-four hours must be carried away by evaporation. Not a solitary dwelling is on its coasts, and there is no living thing in its waters. As we stand on the north shore the sea stretches out some forty-two miles toward the south and is, on an average, eight miles wide. The water is of a greenish blue and as clear as crystal.

These Fool Questions.

"Hello," says the man, seeing his friend sallying forth with pole and net and bait basket. "Going fishing?"

"No," replies the friend, turning on him solemnly. "No; I'm going to stand on my head and keep my hair from falling out. What made you think I was going fishing?"

No Chance to Forget.

Benham—I don't like your actions; you should remember that you are my wife. Mrs. Benham—I am not likely to forget it when everybody tells me how they pity me.

The people in the flat above seldom call the baby what the fond parents do.—Somerville Journal.

PEPYS AND EVELYN.

Difference In Methods of These Two Famous Diarists.

Pepys' narrative is always dramatic—himself being the center of the play—while Evelyn is historical, pathetic or didactic, as the mood seizes him. Pepys gives us the comedy of his time, as Plautus and Terence gave us the comedy of theirs. Evelyn, on the other hand, has something of Livy in his composition and not a little of Cicero. Compare, for instance, their treatment of the great fire, and you may measure the distance between them. Thus it is that Pepys' account begins: "Some of our maids, sitting up late last night to get things ready against our feast today, Jane called us up about 3 in the morning to tell us of a great fire they saw in the city. So I rose and slipped on my nightgown and went to her window." And now turn to Evelyn and see the temper in which he views the destruction of the city. "The clouds of smoke were dismal and reached upon computation near fifty miles in length," he writes the day after the fire. "Thus I left it this afternoon burning, a resemblance of Sodom or the last day. It forcibly called to my mind that passage, 'Non enim hic habemus stabilem civitatem,' the ruins resembling the picture of Troy. London was, but it is no more!"

Pepys sets the scene before you like a man; Evelyn reflects upon the tragedy like a writer, ingenious in reference and quick with allusion. We need not discuss which is the better method, but it may surely be said that the world will produce another hundred Evelyns before it fashions a fitting rival for Pepys.—London Spectator.

ANCIENT BELLS.

Well Known to the Egyptians Before the Jewish Exodus.

Bells were well known to the Egyptians before the time of the Jewish exodus. In the description of Aaron's sacerdotal robe mention is made of the fact that upon the hem of the garment there were bells of gold alternating with pomegranates of blue, of purple and of scarlet: "A golden bell and a pomegranate, a golden bell and a pomegranate upon the hem of the robe round about. And it shall be upon Aaron to minister, and his sound shall be heard when he goeth into the holy place before the Lord and when he cometh out, that he die not."

Hand bells were in common use all over the ancient world. The earliest use of bells in churches was for the purpose of frightening away the evil spirits which were believed to infest earth and air, and the earliest curfew was rung at nightfall to rid the neighborhood of the village or town and church of demons. Most old churches of Europe have a small door on the north side, and at certain points in the service this door was opened and a bell was rung to give notice to the devil, if he chanced to be present, that he might make his exit before the elevation. By the command of Pope John IX. church bells were rung as a protection against thunder and lightning.

The monument of Porsena, the Etrurian king, was decorated with pinnacles, each surmounted with a bell, which tinkled in the breeze. The army of Clothaire raised the siege of Sens on account of a panic occasioned among the men by a sudden chime from the bells of St. Stephen's church.

No Time For Surgery.

The average woman thinks the sun and stars would cease to shine sooner than that she could interfere with the regular routine of household duties. A Sabetha woman was recently informed by her physician that she would have to have an operation performed. She said she didn't see how she could; that Monday was washing day, Tuesday ironing day, Wednesday the missionary society met, Thursday was the day to clean up, Friday to bake, Saturday to give the children their baths and mend. If he could get it in Sunday after dinner and before evening services perhaps she would try it.

The Sardinians.

Sardinia was a wild place in the middle of the last century. A traveler says: "The men are clothed in goatskins, one before and another behind, without breeches, shoes or stockings, and a woolen or skin cap on the head. The women have no other habiliments than a long woolen gown and a woolen cap. The peasants always go armed to defend themselves from one another, so that traveling in the interior is extremely unsafe without an escort, and it is even dangerous for ships to send their people on shore for water unless they are well armed. In short, the Sardes are the Malays of the Mediterranean."

Nature's Methods.

When one is sick there is usually something in the stomach that nature wants to throw up. When one has diarrhea nature is striving to remove offending material from the system. When one perspires profusely nature is getting rid of blood poisons through the skin. One should never attempt to check any such effort without being sure that its arrest will be beneficial.

The Alexandrian Era.

The Alexandrian era is by some authorities begun with the death and by others with the birth of Alexander the Great. For a long time after the death of Alexander this era was in common use in Egypt and many of the countries which had been under his rule. It began Nov. 12, 324 B. C.

It Is Queer.

QUICK & ROBERTSON

Grand Trunk Picnic Was Great Success.

FINE SPORTS, BOTH ON LAND AND WATER—LIST OF PRIZE-WINNERS — LARGE ATTENDANCE—NOTES.

The annual picnic of the Grand Trunk Railway employees is an event looked forward to with pleasure by many people. It was held yesterday at Massassaga Park, and, as usual, was largely attended. The steamers Aletha and Annie Lake were engaged in conveying excursionists to the park, and, especially during the afternoon trips, were heavily laden. The proceeds were in aid of the library fund, and no doubt a goodly sum was realized.

The committee of management did all in their power for the convenience and comfort of everybody. During the afternoon an orchestra was present and furnished music at the pavilion, where dancing was indulged in. Although it was rather warm, many participated in the amusement. Mr. R. H. Ketcheson was master of ceremonies.

The sports, as usual, were well arranged and successfully carried out by an energetic committee. They commenced shortly after one o'clock, and were not completed until late in the afternoon. A number of the events were keenly contested and in all of them there were numerous entries. The prize-winners in the various events were as follows:

BABY SHOW.

For best conditioned baby, one year and under—There were several entries and the judges, Messrs. G. Martin, J. McGurn and J. Storey, had no easy task in deciding which of the tots were entitled to the prizes offered. There were certainly many not only large, but pretty, babies in the contest. The judges finally decided that Mrs. J. Rigby's baby was entitled to first and Mrs. F. Byrne's to second prize.

AQUATIC EVENTS.

Whilst the races, etc., were going on upon the park there were also aquatic events taking place. The wind was rather light, but some excellent exhibitions of sailing were given. The events and the winners were as follows:

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

SPORTING NOTES.

A meeting of those interested in matinee driving on alternate Wednesday afternoons will be held tomorrow night at Hotel Quinte.

That fifteen-inning game in Toronto yesterday would appear to indicate that the tail-enders have come out of their trance at last.

At the annual police games held in Montreal yesterday Montreal won the aggregate championship with a score of 30 points, while Ottawas took 25 and Toronto 19. Quinn of Ottawa was best all-round man, making a total of 19 points, and he therefore gets the championship medal Jumping was his strong line as he won everything, and he figured well also at running. Desmarteau of Montreal, brother of the champion who died last year, came second with 16 points. He was away ahead in weight-throwing, but Latremouille of Toronto beat him throwing the discus Culver of Ottawa was the best man with the 16-pound shot.

The surprise of the racing at Brighton Beach yesterday was the victory in the first race of the 100 to 1 shot Nigger Mike, a two-year-old colt by Shaptei — Gertrude, owned by J. J. Kenny. At one time he was quoted at 150 to 1. Crimmins had the mount. Sandy Creeker and Nigger Mike ran head and head to the stretch, where the long shot drew away. He finally had to be ridden out to win by a head from Lad of Langdon. Kenny, the owner of the colt, bet $53 on him straight at 100 to 1.

The Montreal Eastern Leaguers are now in fourth place. If they keep up their present gait they'll soon be on top.

Sweet Marie, 2.04 1-4, the bay mare owned by Wm. Garland, of Los Angeles, Cal., and driven by A. P. McDonald, of Albany, yesterday won the special match race at Island Park, defeating Wentworth, 2.04 1-2, the black gelding owned by Thomas Devlin, jr., of Philadelphia, and driven by E. E. McCargo. The mare led all the way in the first heat, Wentworth making his fight all through the first three-quarters of the second, but being beaten at last by a length. The race was for a purse of $1,000, and attracted a large attendance. The time, 2.07 1-4, 2.07 1-4.

As a result of an exchange of cable messages, it has been decided that the race of the Harvard Varsity crew with the crew of Cambridge University will be rowed on the Thames, in England, on Sept. 8, instead of Sept. 15, as at first planned. This change was made because it was found that the tide conditions would be better on the earlier date. The Harvard shells will be shipped to-day on the steamer Canadian.

The Grunatho Sisters, who are featured among the acrobats with the Barnum & Bailey circus this season, comprise seven young women from Germany. They are said to perform in long skirts all the feats accomplished by the cleverest male acrobats, with many others that are original with themselves. Duke of Argyll Was Kind and Attentive.

The Honorary Colonel of the Fifteenth, Argyll Light Infantry, George Douglas, Duke of Argyll, K.G., K.T., P.C., formerly Governor-General of Canada, has been rather attentive to our townsman, Lt.-Col. W. N. Ponton, during that gentleman's present visit to the Old Country. The Colonel called upon and had the honor of breakfasting with the Duke and the Princess Louise, and in various ways our former Governor-General has shown his appreciation of Col. Dress Like Flunkeys.

London, July 25.—It seems that the long-talked-of change in men's evening dress is about to be realized. High-class tailors in the West-end are already making new samples. During the coming season the coat will be of blue cloth, with a velvet collar and silk facings brought to the edge of the lapel. Trousers or knee breeches will be optional. They will be of black cloth. Trousers will sometimes have two rows of braid on the side seam. The entire outfit will be similar to the evening dress recently prescribed for gentlemen of the King's household. This specification includes gilt buttons. On the whole it looks as if the momentous result will be the garbing of men as footmen instead of waiters.

The flights of the Imperial Viennese gymnasts are said to be thrilling in the extreme. IN GHOUL PROOF CASE.

Financier Sage Laid Away—Arrangements Cost Nearly $25,000.

Troy, N. Y., July 26.—The body of Russell Sage, financier and multi-millionaire, was laid to rest in Oakwood Cemetery yesterday afternoon. The same simplicity that characterized the deceased in life was apparent in the transfer of the body to its last resting place.

Best He Could Do.

The funeral cortege proceeded from the Union Station to Oakwood, where a large number of persons had gathered at the Sage family lot. After a brief service, read by Rev. Dr. Andrew Hageman of New York, the body was committed to the ghoul-proof vault of chilled steel, ready for its reception. The grave is beside that of Mr. Sage's first wife. The words which are to be engraved on the Sage monument are: "I have done the best that I could by the light of the day."

Ghoul-Proof Case.

The body of Russell Sage was encased in a hermetically sealed copper envelope within a mahogany coffin, and placed in a chilled steel case four inches thick, riveted with steel bolts and locked with a lock which can never be opened. The steel case weighs three tons. It is seven feet eleven inches in length, two feet six inches in depth and three feet six inches in width. Immediately after the steel box and the contents were lowered into the grave, electrical connections were made and strung, so that an immediate alarm will be given if any attempt is made to tamper with the remains.

The extraordinary efforts to thwart attempts by grave robbers were taken at the instance of Charles L. Medler, sexton and funeral director of the Collegiate Church, Troy, N. Y., and were sanctioned by Mrs. Sage. The coffin cost $1,000, and the steel case, with its unpickable lock, $22,000.

All to Mrs. Sage.

New York, July 26.—The World today says:

"Every dollar of Russell Sage's great fortune is left to Mrs. Sage by a will made in 1901, except an insignificant bequest made to Mrs. Fannie Chapin of Oneida, N. Y., an only sister, who died two years ago.

"The fortune of Mr. Sage amounts to only about $60,000,000."

Neff, former auditor of Erie County, yesterday morning. Neff is charged with grand larceny. Conover, who has been convicted on similar charges, is star witness for the people and told of several meetings with Neff and Supervisors Jackson, Gibson and Stock.

"We computed a rate of $24.42 for each body removed," said Conover. "They proposed that they get $6.42 of this amount and leave me $18 per body. The proposition was put in writing and the document was given to Supervisor Gibson."

On Nov. 2, 1900, Conover testified, he gave Jackson $5,000 to be used among the members of the board of supervisors to secure the contract for the removal of the bodies.

BRITISH PARAGRAPHS.

Fire broke out in the heart of Leeds, England, Wednesday night, and was still burning fiercely early this morning. The Great Northern Hotel is threatened.

The British House of Commons early this morning completed the report stage of the education bill, amid Ministerial cheers and Opposition cries of "gag."

Hobbs Says "Not Guilty."

Montreal, July 26.—David Hobbs, late customs officer in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in Montreal, was arraigned before Judge Chouquette yesterday, after being extradited from New York, and charged on fifteen counts with having forged and uttered in June, last year, documents which aided him to defraud his employers of large sums of money. Hobbs pleaded, in a firm voice, "Not guilty," and he was remanded for enquiry, which will commence to-day week at 11 o'clock.

RUSSIAN STRIKE IS OFF

Until Government Shall Be Less and Country More Prepared.

Premier Stolypin Gives Out Statement of "Why Douma Was Dissolved"—Says That From Very First Lower House Overstepped All Limits of Law—Reviews Conduct of Deputies—Daring Assassination at Moscow.

St. Petersburg, July 26.—All indications point to the postponement of the threatened general strike until the Government shall be less and the country more prepared for such an event, until the harvest is finished and the revolutionary movement develops spontaneously among the idle peasantry. News from the provinces yesterday indicates that conditions in the famine districts scarcely are ripe for an upheaval. The strategists of the revolutionary councils are seeking to defer the call for a general strike until it can come as a supplement to the movement already under way. A definite decision will be reached within a day or two in the reorganized council of workmen.

Premier Stolypin announced to the Council of the Empire yesterday that he had obtained from Emperor Nicholas special powers for Admiral Skrydloff in restoring and maintaining order and discipline in the Black Sea fleet.

Why Douma Was Dissolved.

Premier Stolypin last night authorized the official St. Petersburg agency to issue this statement to the foreign press:

"From the very first days of its existence the Lower House overstepped all the limits of the law. In its reply to the speech from the throne, a modification of the fundamental law was demanded in the shape of suppression of the council of the empire, and the creation of a responsible Cabinet. By its agrarian program, based on the expropriation of the land, the land, the House missed hopes that could not be realized and weakened the respect for the property of others, already enfeebled. In the speeches of its members the House consistently discredited the Government, accusing it of organizing programs and disorders. By sending a deputation to Bialystok it openly aspired to usurp executive power.

Fourteen Incited Disorder.

"Fourteen deputies appealed to the people, inciting disorder, a step which called forth no expression of disapprobation from the House. In the last moment of its existence the House declared the Government had acted illegally in explaining to the population the nature of the agrarian project proposed by itself, and decided to address a manifesto to the people persuading them not to believe in the Government regarding the question, but to await its settlement by Parliament. Several members also undertook journeys to the interior of Russia with the object of supporting agitation, their appearance being followed by renewed disorders, pogroms and strikes. All these causes necessitates the decision to dissolve the House."

Submit to Czar.

Count Heyden, Prince Lvoff, and M. Stakovich, the three members of Parliament who refused to sign the address to the country issued at Viburg, July 23, yesterday issued a separate address, appealing to the people to submit quietly to the imperial decree dissolving Parliament, and to prepare for the elections of members to the new Parliament. The address points out that the Emperor acted within his constitutional rights under the fundamental law, and says that the signers of the address in offering this advice act from the profound conviction that it would be a crime in the midst of the present dangers to attempt to shake the power of the sovereign.

Daring Assassination.

Warsaw, Russian Poland, July 26.—Colonel Salamatoff, of the gendarmerie, was stabbed to death here yesterday. The assassin escaped.

Salamatoff, who was assistant to the chief of gendarmes of the Province of Warsaw, had been active in the repressive measures. He was walking in the street, when he was attacked by two men, who stabbed him several times, and then walked quickly away in different directions, without interference from the spectators.

WHY BRANTFORD WASN'T THERE.

Mayor Away, Alderman Summoned West and Others Were Bashful.

Brantford, July 26.—Why was not Brantford represented at the power conference at Galt Tuesday? The citizens asked the question yesterday.

Ald. Andrews explains that the mayor is away in Muskoka and that Ald. Sanderson, who intended to go, was called away to Winnipeg at practically a moment's notice. The two delegates from the Board of Trade did not care to go to Galt alone.

"But Brantford is in sympathy with the project and will be in line with the other municipalities?" was asked.

"I presume so," said Ald. Andrews.

2,000 IN THIS FRAUD.

New York State Robbed by Sale of Washed State Tax Stamps.

New York, July 26.—Five men, arrested Tuesday night, were yesterday held in $1,000 bail in the Police Court for further examination in connection with the washing and reselling state tax stamps.

It was stated by the police yesterday that 2,000 men and boys in the Wall street district are implicated in some way in stamp frauds, in which the State Government has lost about $200,000.

Attempted Suicide.

Woodstock, July 26.—Charged with attempting to commit suicide and also with having a forged note in his possession, George Harrison of Dexter, Mich., was arraigned at the Police Court yesterday morning and remanded for a week pending enquiries into his past record by the police. About midnight yesterday he jumped from the third floor of the Royal Hotel window, and got a badly sprained ankle.

SALMON CANNERIES CLEAN.

Report of the Commission on British Columbia Fisheries.

Ottawa, July 27.—In connection with the announcement of the Chicago canned meat revelations and their possible effect upon the markets for canned goods, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ordered the British Columbia Fishery Commission, then sitting, to investigate and inspect the salmon canning operations and salmon canneries from hygienic and sanitary standpoints.

Mr. Brodeur has received their report. It says: "The commission has made a thorough inspection of the canneries operating in the Fraser River district. We were accompanied by Dr. Fagan of the Provincial Board of Health. Without exception we found the sanitary conditions satisfactory. The salmon being packed were fresh from the cold waters of the Pacific, and were placed in the cans in absolutely a fresh condition and in the most cleanly manner. We found no cause for complaints. The Provincial Government Board of Health maintains a continuous and systematic inspection of all the canneries each year. From our inspection we have to assure you that the salmon canned in this province is fresh and wholesome."

The report is signed by Commissioners Sweeny, Babcock and Brown.

Resolves On A Policy.

Stolypin Says Czar Will Pursue Strong-Handed Reform.

Reaction, Says the Premier, Is the Furthest Removed From the Emperor's Wishes—Meanwhile It Is Said the Government of Russia Knows It Is Living Over a Volcano—Provisional Government Talked Of.

St. Petersburg, July 27.—The Government is using every means at its disposal to create the impression both at home and abroad that the crisis has been successfully passed, and that the probability of a general upheaval has disappeared. The semi-official press is filled with comforting assurances that the Government now has a firm hold of the situation and that the confusion and demoralization in the councils of the Opposition political organizations produced by the coup d'etat render united action impossible.

Living Over a Volcano.

As a matter of fact, the Government can hardly be blind to the fact that it is living over a volcano and that the danger of an eruption is far from ended. For the last forty-eight hours the central committees of the Social Democrats, Social Revolutionists, Peasant League, Railroad Men's Union and Telegraphers' Union and the military committees have been conferring both separately and jointly with the Parliamentary groups, not only on the question of calling a general strike, but actually on the question of attempting a counter coup d'etat by setting up a provisional Government. No final decision has yet been taken, but practically all the proletariat organizations, including that of the railroad men, but excepting the telegraphers, have already pronounced in favor of this step.

Soldiers to Fight For People.

The possible extent of the support which a revolutionary movement will receive from the army is, therefore, vital. At Helsingfors, Finland, Tuesday night 1,500 soldiers and sailors of the garrison took an oath to fight on the side of the people.

It is quite apparent to disinterested persons of the situation that the Government in entering on its present policy made a perhaps fatal blunder in lacking the hardihood to arrest the members of the outlawed Parliament.

Douma a Dying Body.

Premier Stolypin, in an interview yesterday, said, speaking feelingly:

"There has been no coup d'etat and nothing has been done which was not in accordance with the prescribed constitutional methods. The Emperor was empowered by the fundamental law to dissolve Parliament and there was no other course open to his Majesty.

"The Douma, as a whole, was a dying body, and the most merciful treatment was its prompt despatch, terminating its unprofitable existence."

Last Straw.

Continuing, M. Stolypin said the Emperor's recent words had shown that Parliament's agrarian manifesto was the last straw which caused the "Cadets bundle to burst" (Constitutional Democrats), but the whole proceedings of Parliament during the last few weeks had rendered its closing inevitable if the Emperor's authority was still to be recognized in Russia.

In reply to a question as to the role of the "Cadets," M. Stolypin answered that the party included many dilettante and doctrinaries without policy or political substance. He considered that the tendencies displayed by the "Cadets," as a body, were highly dangerous, to use no stronger word.

Three Policies.

Asked as to the extent the counteraction was likely to go, M. Stolypin replied:

"At the present moment three policies are open to the Emperor and his advisers: First, reaction; second, impassivity towards the threatened revolution; third, a policy of strong-handed reform.

"It is the last mentioned upon which the Emperor has resolved and upon which we have entered. A policy of reaction is the furthest removed from his Majesty's wishes, but the revolutionists must be thwarted before there can be any possibility of deciding on a definite basis for a stable future."

"I personally place implicit reliance on the innate patriotism and civic sense of the masses of the nation. I believe that the Emperor's appeal to them, backed up by constant evidences of good faith and honest endeavor on the part of his Majesty's representatives will result in the extinction, or at least in the effective repression of the anarchial forces."

Close, to His Heart.

M. Stolypin declined to express an opinion of Parliament's demand for general land expropriation. He said.

"The interests of the peasants lie near the Emperor's heart. His Majesty and those closest to him admit the justice of many of the claims of the peasants, and nothing will be left undone to solve the agrarian problem in a spirit of sympathy, generosity and equity. I believe the peasants will recognize this when the details of the land proposals are fully explained to them with the aid of local commissions nominated from among those enjoying the confidence of the peasantry. When the Cabinet is complete we will come forward with an exhaustive program covering the land question and other subjects demanding immediate solution.

Opera Bouffe.

The Viborg manifesto Mr. Stolypin described as an opera bouffe production, unworthy of criticism. He laughed at the idea that the Government had not arrested the signatories of the manifesto because of fear. No steps, he [illegible] bers of the Parliament unless they attempted to agitate in their own constituencies or elsewhere in Russia. If they did they would be promptly arrested.

Six Upper House Members Resign.

Six of the elected members of the Council of the Empire (upper House of Parliament) have resigned.

There are indications that the Government, following the complete surrender to the demands of Finland, will seek to propitiate Poland and the Baltic provinces by concessions, for the purpose of divorcing them from the revolutionary movement in Russia proper.

Why Czar Struck Blow.

Paris, July 27.—According to The Journal's St. Petersburg correspondent the Russian authorities discovered in the course of recent searches the existence of a gigantic organization for a general revolutionary strike in October next, the plans which had been prepared perfectly. The Emperor consequently decided to strike a sharp blow by dissolving the representative assembly and thus prevent Parliament from becoming a tribune for revolutionists.

Police on Strike.

Helsingfors, Finland, July 27.—This city is without police protection owing to a strike of patrolmen on all beats. The residents will undertake the preservation of order until the organization of a new police force.

The left side of the face is usually considered by artists to be more beautiful than the right.

British and American Railway Fatalities.

Commenting on the recent terrible train wreck at Salisbury, England, "Engineering" quotes some interesting statistics and makes some instructive comparisons between the accident records of British and American railways.

In the year 1901, not one passenger travelling on the railways of the United Kingdom lost his or her life from any accident to trains, rolling stock, permanent-way, etc. The number of passengers travelling (exclusive of season ticket holders) amounted in that year to 1,172,395,909. While the list of casualties of other years has been greater than this, the totals have always been comparatively low, the year 1889 being the last in which the number of fatalities amounted to large figures. Thus for the years since 1901 we have the numbers killed, in order of sequence, of 6, 25, 6 and 39 for 1905. As compared with the British fatalities in 1904, American railroads killed in train accidents during that year 262 people.

These figures in themselves are noteworthy, but the contrast is marked in a far more striking degree if account be taken of the number of passenger travelling. For the twelve months ending June 30, 1904, the railways of the United States carried 715,419,682 passengers, and therefore the life of one passenger in every 2,730,609 carried was lost owing to accidents for which the companies were responsible. This compares with one passenger for every 190,000,000 carried on the railways in the United Kingdom during that year.

TIMELY TOPICS.

How time flies! In another month we'll be up against that greatest of all sideshows, the Toronto fair.

• • •

The worst of those reunions is, they cause such a lot of peanut shells to be strewn all over Queen Victoria park.

• • •

Talking of frauds, what about those slot machines, which receive the youngsters' cents and then decline to deliver the goods?

"No merchant can succeed without advertising in one way or another. Patronize your town papers, build them up and they will build the town up and build you up increased trade and greater opportunities." Governor J. W. Folk, of Missouri, gave the above advice to the retail merchants of that State at a recent convention. It was sound advice, too.

• • •

The question of back taxes seems to be an interesting one. "One Who Pays" writes:

"I noticed in your paper a day or two ago, the old story repeated, that tax rolls two or three years old are still in the hands of the Tax Collector of this much-governed city.

"Why is this?

"Who are the favored ones?

"Are they, as you say, the rich property-holders?

"If so, who is to blame?

"Is it the fault of the Collector or the City Council?

"These are questions that deserve answers, which will be particularly interesting to those who do pay up.

"Mr. Topics, you know, or should know, everything about these matters, therefore answer these questions if you can:

"If it be the 'well to do' who neglect to pay their taxes, why is not the services of the bailiff brought into requisition?

"Who's afraid?

"I know that the Collector is indefatigable in his work, and if not interfered with by those in autherity, in extending the time for collection of taxes, his rolls would in all probability have been returned long ago.

"I do not wish to be captious, or understood as desiring the oppression of those to whom leniency would be a virtue, but the end of the tax year should end the necessity of further collections, in all cases where the parties are able to pay.

"Ald. Marsh, with a flourish of trumpets, told us at the beginning of the year what he was going to do if arrears of taxes were not paid. What has he done? No exposures yet.

"Is there not some one among our brave aldermen who has the courage to arise in his place in the Council and move for a list of all delinquents, in order that it may be published in your reports? The publication of this list would materially assist the Collector in his work.

"I do not know what the law is upon the point of charging interest upon unpaid taxes, but if it empowers the Council to pass a by-law, regulating the rate, would it not be well to fix it at about 10 or 12 per cent? This might bring the slow coaches who can but won't pay, to their pocket senses."

It seems inconceivably unjust that some people should be compelled to pay their taxes "down on the nail," as the saying is, while others are allowed to take advantage of technicalities and the law's peculiarities to withhold money which rightly belongs to the city. Surely there must be some legal method by which the Tax Collector can compel those in arrears, whether rich or poor, to pay up. If there is not, then there should be.

With the suggestions contained in our correspondent's letter we have no quarrel. It seems to be a case of "Those who can pay, and won't pay, should be made to pay." We cordially agree with the suggestion that some member of the Council should move for a return of all in arrears for taxes. Let the list be read, and the matter discussed, in open Council, then it can be reported. There is nothing like publicity to correct abuses. The Intelligencer has had some trifling share in correcting other abuses in the past. It will cheerfully do its part in bringing about the much-needed reform which will put all taxpayers in the class of "One Who Pays."

San Francisco is not the only spot in the United States suffering from the earth's convulsions. A telegram from Sheboygan, Wis., of the 25th inst., says that "Thirty-seven acres of cultivated land on the border of Long Lake, in Fond du Lac County, sank yesterday and is now covered with deep water. The sinkage is supposed to be due to a slight earthquake shock." The problem for scientists to solve is where has the 37 acres gone to.

Telegrams from Rome of the 25th July says that the publication is imminent of a Papal letter, addressed to the Archbishop of Paris, France, announcing the final determination of the attitude of the Vatican with regard to the Church and State separation law. The cardinals are divided on the question whether to accept it or resist it. The majority, led by Cardinal Rampolla, favor acceptance as the lesser of two evils. The Pope will probably enjoin resistance. If the Pope desires peace he had better act upon the advice of his astute statesman Cardinal Rampolla, whose experience as adviser of the late Pope, has taught him resistance" means war.

A movement has begun in Toronto for the changing of the date of Thanksgiving Day from Thursday in November to the fourth Monday in October, and petitions are to be circulated for the purpose of asking parliament to make the change. The railways are the instigators of the proposed change, as experience has taught that Monday holidays are the most profitable to them.

People who have occasion to cross or walk on the railroad track should remember the change which has taken place in the running rules. What is believed to be the first fatality arising out of the change took place at the Victoria bridge, Montreal. Yesterday morning the body of James Cornwall, who for years has been employed painting on the superstructure, was found by a section man lying beside the track. It is believed that Cornwall, who has been so accustomed to trains proceeding on the left-hand track, forgot about the change to the other side, which went into effect on Sunday, and stepped on the wrong side when he heard a train coming.

MINNIE HAS REFORMED.

(Hamilton Spectator.)

We are glad to state that the far-famed steamer Minnie M. was busily engaged, last Friday, at Collingwood, by the Historical society of that town, in carrying excursionists—including the Ontario Provincial Historic society delegates — to St. Joseph's island. About 200 excursionists greatly enjoyed the afternoon, and were entertained with addresses on early Indian history of that region, followed with generous refreshments at the island. It is likely that the Minnie M. will henceforth be well employed.

The advocates of Municipal Ownership may learn a lesson from the experience of Glasgow, Scotland, which just sold the municipal telephone plant which was established six years ago to compete with a private company. It was found that the municipal company was not a paying venture and the Town Council decided to sell the business to the post office at a loss of $200,000 rather than continue the undertaking. When the sale was decided upon more than $1,000,000 had been spent on the equipment and a further expenditure of $500,000 had been found to be necessary.

Everyone will regret to learn that private letters received in Toronto indicate that the health of the Hon. Dr. Reaume, Minister of Public Works in the Ontario Cabinet, is in such condition that he will shortly have to relinquish his seat in the Cabinet. Hon. Dr. Reaume is now at Mount Clemens, Michigan. The recent operation was not the success it promised to be and another one is likely. The resignation of the Minister of Public Works from the Cabinet is looked for by his most intimate friends on the return of the Premier from England. In the event of his resignation it is supposed the Hon. Col. Hendrie, of Hamilton, will succeed Dr. Reaume as Minister of Public Works.

The police in Toronto is doing good work in ferreting out the betting and gambling rendezvous of the city. On the 25th inst. no less than 22 offenders were arrested. This is a lesson for some others we know of.

The investigation ordered by Dr. Reaume into the affairs of the Essex jail, from which prisoners have been escaping lately, and a suicide the other day by a murderer, may lead to the dismissal of the governor of the jail. If a Grit, the Toronto News will be furnished with food for another month on which to fatten and denounce dismissals. Hastings' and Rastedorisms are about played out.

McKeown's DRUG STORE

A New Poem by Rud. Kipling.

GOVERNMENT TO TRANSVAAL MEANS RETROCESSION TO THE BOERS.

London, July 26. — Adopting the view largely held by the British in South Africa and by many at home that the Government's promised grant of responsible government to the Transvaal means the retrocession of the country to the Boers, Rudyard Kipling contributes to the Standard a poem of six stanzas, depicting the colonists as being shamefully and jugglingly sold into bondage, and appealing to Great Britain to prevent it. Following is a sample of the poem:

Back to the ancient bitterness
  Ye ended once for all;
Back to oppression none may guess
  Who have not borne its thrall.
Back to the slough of their despond,
  Helots anew held fast,
By England's seal upon the bond
  As helots to the last.

Another stanza reads:—

Now even now, before men learn,
  How near we broke our trust,
Now, even now, ere we return
  Dominion to the dust.
Now, ere gates of mercy close
  Forever 'gainst the line
That sells its sons to serve its foes
  Will England make no sign?

The Standard offsets the poem by printing conspicuously its own information that the Government's scheme, which has not yet been divulged, secures a majority of British representatives in the proposed Transvaal Legislative Assembly.

Express Clerk Made Big Profit.

New York, July 26.—A clerk who has worked 15 years behind a desk on the top floor of the American Express Company's offices, and stoop-shouldered from driving a pen all day long, has set Wall Street talking. He is Samuel Byerley, who on Saturday received notice from Secretary Shaw that he had been awarded $5,800,000 of the new Panama Canal bonds.

Nobody else bid for the bonds except bankers and professional bond houses. A syndicate got $15,000,000. Next to the syndicate Byerley got the biggest block of the bonds.

This morning the express clerk disposed of his bonds at a price which meant a profit for him of a little over $10,000. Bache and Company, of 42 Broadway, took the bonds from him. They were acting for Fiske and Robinson, the representatives of the syndicate that got the $15,000,000. They evidently did not want their market to be destroyed by the bonds which the express clerk had, and he did not have any difficulty in getting them off his hands.

After disposing of the little bond deal to-day, Byerley went back to the express office, put on his coat, shook hands with his fellow-clerks, and started off on a two months' leave of absence. He is going to take his whole family to Europe on what he has made on the investment of a postage stamp. More than that, when he comes back, it was learned to-day, he is to step into a bigger job and get a raise. The executive officers of the express company did not know they had such a clerk three days ago. To-day they decided that a clerk with such financial acumen might be of more aid to the company than simply chasing up figures on a set of books, so it was determined to shift him from the accounting department to the office of the treasurer. Just what salary he will get they would not say, but it will be a good deal more than he has been getting.

The bond men figured out to-day that if he had made $10,000 on the deal the actual profit on his investment of two cents for a postage stamp was 4,999,990 per cent. It is the record so far as Wall Street knows.

It takes longer to find out some men than it does others, but in the end they are all found out.

TERRIFIC WINDSTORM.

An Unknown Negro Blown From Wagon Under Fire Engine.

St. Louis, July 27.—A terrific wind and rainstorm struck St. Louis and vicinity yesterday afternoon. Lightning started seven fires in different parts of the city.

A negro, name unknown, was blown from his wagon under a passing fire engine and was killed.

Electric wires were blown down, sheds and a frame house were demolished and a number of persons were hurt by debris.

The excursion steamer Liberty, filled with pleasure-seekers, was driven through the Mississippi River at uncontrollable speed by the storm and dashed on to a dike on the Missouri side. The boat held firmly on the dike, and when the storm had abated sufficiently, the Government boat Lela transhipped the passengers and landed them in Alton.

Montreal, July 27.—Duclos, who tried to kill Desrosiers, the musical agent, and was sent to the insane asylum, escaped from that institution yesterday, an automobile being in waiting for him at the gate. Hon. Mr. Belcourt's Mission.

Belleville, July 26, 1906.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer;

Dear Sir,—I notice that Hon. N. A. Belcourt, who sailed from Quebec for England, not only represented the Board of Trade at the Congress of Chambers of Commerce of the Empire but also appeared in an argument before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in a "cause celebre" in which the Separate schools of Ontario are very much interested. It concerns the right of members of religious communities to teach in the schools of Ontario without having the prescribed departmental certificates. The matter first arose in the case of Gratton vs. The Separate School Board of Ottawa, and the judgments so far are that the members of communities must have certificates. It is claimed that the British North America Act entitles the religious orders to exemption from the necessity of taking the examination, and Mr. Belcourt will take their side of the case.

It will be seen that the efforts of these individuals to force themselves into the public (Catholic) schools without the necessary qualifications having failed, the Canadian Supreme Court having decided the case against them, they are now appealing to the Privy Council. Their claim is that the British North America Act confirms the Catholics of the Dominion in all their supposed rights existing at the time of Confederation under the Treaty of Paris, which ceded Canada to England, one of these being the complete control of education by the church.

If the present appeal carries, the Catholic schools of Canada will be placed entirely in the hands of incompetent individuals of the Catholic orders which exist in Canada in increasing numbers, and in educational matters the Catholic schools of Canada will soon rank with Turkey or

We shall watch with very great interest for the decision of the Privy Council in this matter.

A. RICHARDSON.

EDITOR'S NOTE. — This is a family quarrel, not affecting Public schools, the suit having been instituted by gentlemen of the Roman Catholic faith, who evidently desire fully qualified teachers. If they do not succeed, so much the worse for themselves.

NO STIFF SHIRTS

NOVEL SUNDAY SERVICE IN COUNTRY TOWN DREW LARGE CONGREGATION.

Albion, Mich, July 26.—Resting on cushions or seated in comfortable rocking chairs, which the pastor permitted them to bring to church, the people of Marengo listened to a phonograph service Sunday morning. In the little Methodist church of which Rev. Harry E. Walker is pastor, the congregation keeps up in numbers during the warm weather. Many of the members of the congregation are farmers, and it is harvest time, but when the bell rang on Sunday the people didn't grunt that it was too hot to worship God; they forgot they were lame and weary from working in the wheat fields, and hitched up and drove to the meeting house.

The Epworth League had decorated the edifice with their colors and with a hugh motto, "Welcome," and vases of flowers filled the room with fragrance. The boys and men did not observe the conventions of the city churches and wear high collars that choked them, nor did they have on sweltering black coats. They didn't fear that God would strike them with lightning if they came to worship Him in their shirt sleeves. The pews were all filled.

In the absence of a pipe organ a boy wound up a phonograph loaned by Dr Case, and the big instrument filled the house with a voluntary that was greatly enjoyed. The phonograph sang an anthem and a sacred solo, and then the preacher read the scripture lesson and offered prayer. Then came the Old Oaken Bucket, by the Edison male quartette. The sermon was only about ten minutes in length.

At the close of the service two small boys carried plates laden with button-hole bouquets down the aisles, and little Misses Charity Adams and Geraldine Smith pinned one upon each member of the congregation during the singing of God Be with You Till We Meet Again, by the phonograph.

Two weeks ago President Elder D. D. Martin, D.D., preached in Marengo, and he told the tired farmers that they might sleep during the sermon, a privilege of which several availed themselves, as the discourse was rather longer than they were accustomed to hearing.

It was also at Marengo that Rev. F. E Day, D.D., of Albion, delivered the dedicatory sermon after the church was repaired, and the people all stuck fast to the fresh varnish.

Successful Bay Of Quinte Boys.

SKETCHES OF MESSRS. H. M. HOWELL AND F. H. PHIPPEN, WHO HAVE BEEN APPOINTED JUDGES IN MANITOBA.

The Manitoba Free Press has the following abuot two former Bay of Quinte boys, who have recently been given high legal honors in Manitoba;

H. M. HOWELL.

Few men have held a more distinguished position at the bar of any province of the Dominion of Canada than Mr. H. M. Howell, and no one in Manitoba has been recognized for a longer period of time as the leader of the provincial bar. The two things that have particularly distinguished his career have been his indefatigable capacity for work and his success. Differing from many others who have attained high standing at the bar, Mr. Howell is what one of his greatest rivals once described as being "an all round lawyer." Equally strong as an advocate as in consultation, his forceful personality and unquestioned legal ability are as effective whether his briefs are held on the common law or the equity side of the courts, whether engaged in a case at nisi prius, where with a jury, quickness of perception and knowledge of human nature are as necessary to success as erudite knowledge and comprehension of legal principles, profound research and accurate deduction are essential in argument before the judges of the full court of appeal.

Mr. Howell is one of the great successes in the practice of law in western Canada and as such has been recognized not only by the general public, but what is possibly the greatest prize of the professional man, by his fellow practitioners. Uncompromising and fearless in his sense of duty, energetic and at times brusque in his professional practice, Mr. Howell, however, enjoys a reputation for sensitive honor and great kindliness of heart. The impulsiveness which is a distinct trait of Mr. Howell's nature is probably due to the Celtic Welsh race from which he springs. His fighting instincts are also inherited. Mr. Howell is of United Empire Loyalist descent, both a paternal and a maternal ancestor having been officers in the loyal force raised by Sir William Johnson in the valley of the Mohawk during the American revolutionary war, a force which saw some of the fiercest fighting of the long war. The Howells of the Mohawk valley were apparently of strongly loyal disposition and active in giving evidence of their allegiance to the flag of their fathers, for in the settlement in Canada of the divided troops of Sir William Johnson, there were Howells of that loyal fighting force who settled with Brant, the great Indian Chieftain and personal friend of Sir William Johnson, in what is now the county of Brant, and other officers of the same family settled with Thayandanega in eastern Ontario. From these latter Howells the leader of the Winnipeg bar is descended.

He was born September 17, 1842, in the township of Thurlow, in the county of Hastings, his father being Charles Howell, and was educated in the public and high schools of Prince Edward county, in the province of Ontario, and at Albert College, Belleville, during the regime of Dr. Albert Carman, the well known Canadian educationist and divine.

Mr. Howell owes his success in life almost entirely to his own initiative, tenacity of purpose and ability. He is the maker of his own successful career at the bar. As a youth and young man he was a school teacher and engaged in clerical work, studying at night for the career which his ambition prompted him to believe could be achieved. He determined upon law as his life profession and for several years studied in Belleville in the office of the late John Bell, K. C., solicitor of the Grand Trunk Railway. The latter part of his legal training was in the office of Mr. McLennan, now Mr. Justice McLennan, of the Supreme Court of Canada.

In November, 1871, Mr. Howell was called to the Ontario bar at Osgoode Hall and signed the rolls as an attorney. For three years he practised his profession with the late Dalton McCarthy, K.C., in the town of Barrie, and afterwards practised for four years in the village of Uxbridge, Ont.

The opportunities of a country practise in Ontario were limited to one of Mr. Howell's ambition, energy and ability. The Canadian west was then on the eve of great development and its prospects appealed strongly to the ambitious young Uxbridge lawyer. In 1879 Mr. Howell came to Winnipeg and soon became one of the leading lawyers of the capital of the growing province of Manitoba.

For nineteen years Mr. Howell was allied with Mr. Heber Archibald in the practice of law. The name of the firm with which Mr. Howell has been connected has in the lapse of years and in the changing events been altered, but through these changes Mr. Howell has been the dominant personality, to whom much of its success has been due. Prior to accepting a position on the Court of King's Bench Mr. Justice Mathers was a member of the firm of which Mr. Howell was head. At the present time this firm is known as Howell, Hudson, Ormond and Marlatt. Mr. Howell is president of the Law Society of Manitoba and has been a member of the Law Society for a number of years. In 1886 he was created a Queen's Counsel. No one in the history of Manitoba has held so many important briefs as Mr. Howell during his brilliant career and his position as the leader of the bar in Manitoba has been unquestioned for years.

A man of strong convictions and intense feelings in matters of public or national import, Mr. Howell has been a consistant party man. Though born and nurtured in the school of Liberalism that many of those of United Empire Loyalist stock became attached to in the early days of political conflict in eastern Canada, Mr. Howell, possibly through his association and friendship with the late Dalton McCarthy, supported the policy of the Conservative party, led by Sir John A. Macdonald, and upon making his home in Winnipeg continued to give an independent support to that policy until the question of railway disallowance and the effect of national policy upon western Canadian development became matters of vital political importance, when he returned to his first love.

Mr. Howell only once sought political honors. He was the candidate in support of the Norquay Government in Winnipeg in an election in the early eighties of last century, in which Colonel McMillan, now Sir Daniel McMillan, the Liberal nominee, was successful over both Mr. Howell and the late D. B. Woodworth, the Conservative candidate.

Mr. Howell was married in 1875 to Miss Harriette Lally, of Barrie, Ontario, a member of the historic family of that name and a sister of Mrs. Dalton McCarthy.

F. H. PHIPPEN.

Mr. F. H. Phippen, appointed to the Manitoba Court of Appeal, was born in 1862, in Belleville, Ont. He received his academical learning in Albert College, in that city, studied law with the firm there of which Judge Clute was the head, and afterwards in Toronto with the present Chief Justice Falconbridge. He came to Winnipeg in 1884 as managing student for Macdonald, Tupper, McArthur & Dexter. Having completed the time necessary to enable him to go up for his final examinations he returned to Toronto, where he took the examinations in February, 1885, and passed first in a class of sixty or seventy candidates who wrote. Then he returned to Winnipeg, and was admitted to the bar of Manitoba in May, 1885. In the same year he became a partner in the firm of Macdonald, Tupper, McArthur and Dexter, and when that firm was dissolved in December, he joined the first two of these partners, becoming a member of the new firm of Macdonald, Tupper & Phippen, with which he has remained ever since.

In his practice Mr. Phippen has devoted himself principally to business law. He has appeared before the Privy Council four times, the principal matters requiring his attendance there being in connection with the litigation arising out of the Manitoba & Northwest Railway, and the litigation in connection with the Liquor Act. He acted also as solicitor for the Commercial Bank of Manitoba in connection with the winding up of that bank. He has been very actively engaged, too, for corporation work and in general commercial.

In the celebrated Shields & McLaren case, the trial of which took about forty days, Mr. Phippen was called to an important and honorable part, being offered by a large number of creditors interested in the suit, including the Merchants' Bank, the Commercial Bank, Carscallen, Peck & Co., the opportunity of going to England and fighting the case there in their interests, and which involved some $70,000, against the able and distinguished Dalton McCarthy, Q.C., who took it over on appeal. Having been only three or four years a member of the bar, Mr. Phippen modestly shrank from accepting the responsibility, and he was able to effect a settlement here before the case came on. In politics Mr. Phippen has been a Conservative, but he has not been an active politician.

A Funny Siamese Custom.

They have a very funny fashion in Siam. When an inferior comes into the presence of a superior he throws himself upon the ground. Then the superior sends one of his attendants forward to see whether the prostrate man has been eating anything or has any offensive odor about him. If he be blameless in this respect the attendant raises him from the ground, but if he be guilty the attendant straightway kicks him out.

Liquor in Candies.

"Practically every known liquor, as well as whisky and brandy, is made up into candy in one form or another," says a Chicago confectioner. "You can get in bonbons of various kinds creme de menthe, cognac, kummel, Chartreuse, cherry brandy or benedictine."

Every day is a new life, every sunrise but a new birth.—Jordon.

INTERIOR DECORATING

That's Our Business

And we keep an experienced staff of workmen busy the year round.

True we do outside painting also, but we give preference to decorating.

We have been so busy with our interior work this year that we have found it impossible to do much exterior work.

The service we render our customers is par excellent—better far than is found elsewhere—we have the materials and the methods—have the ideas and the designs. This is why we have so much decorative work continually ahead of us.

Most people understand that we do better work and use better materials than is usually used by painters. This is another reason for our everlasting busy-ness.

We use white lead in all our work absolutely better than any other lead that can be found and superior to anything carried on sale in Belleville—and we can prove it. Work with this lead will wear longer by 40 per cent and look as much better.

Of Same Opinion Still.

London, July 27.—(C. A. P.)—P. L. Gray has written Walter Long, M. P., directing attention to the fact that statements he made in the cattle embargo debate in the House of Commons had been denied by Hon. Sidney Fisher.

Replying, Mr. Long said he saw no reason to modify his opinion in the matter.

Dead When Hit by Train.

Orillia, July 27.—As the evidence at the adjourned inquest on the body of Robert Barbour, found dead on the Midland track on the night of the 17th, went to indicate that the man was dead when he was struck by the train, an adjournment was made for a week to allow of a post-mortem examination.

Thieves at the Shrine.

Quebec, July 27.—Pickpockets made a good haul at St. Anne de Beaupre, where thousands of pilgrims are gathered. Among the sufferers was a lady who lost $180 and two gentlemen, one of whom was relieved of $130 and the other of $75.

A new leaf is really the same old one with another turn.

LAKE SHORE SPIRIT.

Throughout the entire length and breadth of the great Lake Shore Railway System there is a spirit of co-operation and personal responsibility on the part of employees from the highest to the lowest that is reflected in every detail of the road's operation. The traveller feels that the great army of trained workers have his welfare and comfort at heart as much as though he were the only patron of the road. This spirit—the Lake Shore spirit—is one of the features that have made this line so popular among experienced travellers. Comfort, speed, safety and punctuality here have reached their highest development. Write for full information to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, O.; or W. THE GOLDEN SIDE .

(Anonymous.)

There's many a rest on the road of life,
If we only would stop and take it;
And many a tone from the better land,
If the querulous heart would wake it,
To the sunny soul that is full of hope,
And whose beautiful trust ne'er faileth,
The grass is green and the flowers are bright,
Though the wintry storm prevaileth.

Better to hope, though the clouds hang low,
And keep the eyes still lifted,
For the sweet blue sky will soon peep through
When the ominous clouds are rifted.
There was never a night without a day,
Or an evening without a morning,
And the darkest hour, the proverb goes,
Is the hour before the dawning.

There's many a gem in the path of life
We pass in our idle pleasure
That is richer far than the jewelled crown
Or the miser's hoarded treasure.
It may be the loss of a little child,
Or a mother's prayer in heaven.
Or only a beggar's grateful thanks
For a cup of water given.

Better to weave in the web of life
A bright and glorious filling,
And do God's will with a ready heart
And hands that are swift and willing.
Than snap the delicate silver threads
Of our curious lives asunder
And then heaven blame for the tangled ends,
And sit and grieve and wonder.

Since France has abolished "Church and State," she is looking to a better observance of Sunday. Legislation in that country is being enforced concerning Sunday labor. While not going quite so far as the Canadian parliament, the French Chamber of Deputies has just passed a bill which will do much toward abolishing unnecessary work on the Sabbath and providing a compulsory day of rest weekly. The bill has passed both the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate without much opposition, and is now awaiting the approval of the President of the Republic.

The Toronto Globe says the Minister of the Interior goes to England to straighten out the emigration tangle he has inherited from the the previous regime in his department. Only grave wrongdoing warrants decapitation." Here is a slap at Sifton's emigration policy, nicely and delicately done. "Decapitation for grave wrongdoing," forsooth! We have a specimen of it in the promotion of Preston, who was the head and front of all the "wrongdoing" in London!

The Vancouver Province, Liberal, thus sizes up its party in Great Britain: "It is a fact that it was always the Liberal Government in Great Britain that was unfriendly to this country, and to-day the government of Campbell-Bannerman does not contain one man who has ever shown the slightest interest in the Dominion or in Great Britain's other great self-governing possessions." The Province should have added, and every Liberal journal in Canada, except itself, admires and support English Liberalism.

LOVE SONG OF THE FUTURE.

Tell me, darling, ere with rapture
We shall sink in love's eclipse,
Ere with joy a kiss I capture,
Have you sterilized your lips?

Tell me, darling—fairest creature
Ever born the skies beneath—
Is your hair a natural feature?
Are they yours — those gleaming teeth?

Tell me, tell me, charming lassie,
When you're angry, and your eye
Stares at me with stare that's glassy,
Pray, what does that signify?

Is your stomach in condition?
Have you pains around your back?
Does your heart fulfil its mission?
Is your liver out of whack?
[illegible]
Tell me, O bewitching creature,
Whom I love in fiercest way,
Tell me, ere I call the preacher—
Darling, are your lungs O. K.?

FINEST BANK NOTE PAPER.

Where the Material For Our Greenbacks Is Made.

The national flag flies over the "government mill," owned by the Crane family at Dalton, Mass., because all the paper for the United States greenbacks is made there. It is one of a group of mills in which the Cranes have made paper for more than a century. The founder was Zenas Crane. Before he could get the first mill started he had to have a large quantity of rags. But rags were scarcer in those days than now. The Italian had not then arrived, the junk shop was unknown, and, although the rag buyer passed through the streets of Boston once a week, he had not yet appeared in the western part of the state. This resulted in an appeal to the people, based on high economic and patriotic grounds. Handbills appeared with the headlines in large type: "Americans, encourage your own manufactures, and they will improve! Ladies, save your rags!"

They were carried to all the homes and shops in Berkshire and adjoining counties, urging "every woman who has the good of her country and the interests of her family at heart" to save her rags and send them to the new factory or to the nearest storekeeper, "and a generous price will be paid." When the mill was ready the rags were there in abundance, and operations at once commenced. The working force consisted of four men, two girls and a small boy, with Zenas Crane as superintendent and chief proprietor. The paper was made in hand molds, and the output was 100 pounds a day. Today the output is many tons of the finest bank note paper.—World's Work.

THE WIND BELL.

How It Is Constructed In Japan, Its Original Home.

The wind bell, as its name implies, is made to ring by the action of the wind—in fact, the wind bell is not a bell at all, strictly speaking, but a contrivance composed of a number of pendants suspended in a circle from a ring and hung close together so that they will come into contact and produce sounds when swayed by the winds.

Some wind bells produce sounds that are pleasing and musical. Some are made with glass pendants, some with pendants of metal; some are very small and simple in construction, others are large and massive and elaborate.

The original home of the wind bell is Japan. In its simplest form it is composed of a number of narrow strips of glass, perhaps six inches in length, suspended lengthwise from a wire ring about two inches in diameter. Within the circle formed by the strips thus suspended is hung by one corner a little square piece of glass halfway down the length of the long strips, the strips and the square piece ornamented with various Japanese characters and designs. This wind bell may be hung up wherever a breeze will strike it and blow the strips into contact with one another and with the square suspended among them.

Artificial Birds.

In very early times men began to experiment with a view to making artificial birds and animals that would imitate the motions of living creatures, and if we are to believe the records, some of the artists in that line were remarkably successful.

Archytas of Tarentum, who lived in the year 400 B. C., constructed an artificial pigeon that could fly, but which was not able to resume its flight after once alighting.

John Muller, a German of great mechanical skill, constructed an artificial eagle, which on the entry of Emperor Maximilian into Nuremberg flew out to meet him, and, returning, alighted on the city gate to await his approach.

"Jack told me to tell you to be on your guard tonight. He said he'd come down and see you if possible. Oh, I feel so cold," he ended, drawing nearer the fire. "I'm all trembly over my chest."

"I reckon you better strip off your clothes and go to bed. This has been a hard day for you."

He seemed stiff, and was shivering convulsively. "I believe I will, Rob. I don't feel any good."

As Raymond helped him to undress the boy's teeth began to chatter, and he drew his breath with a hissing moan. "I guess I've taken an awful cold, Rob. My breast aches so."

"Matt, go ask Nora to come over and bring her little medicine case. This boy's got a chill right now."

"A swallow of whisky will fix that," answered Matt as he went out. "I'll be back in a jiffy."

Raymond bundled Louis into bed and heaped him with blankets and furs, his heart deeply stirred with anxiety, for as the boy's mind turned from the excitement of his day's experiences to his condition he became deeply depressed. He fairly collapsed.

Mrs. Kelly, with her "emergency case" of medicine and a knowledge of sickness gained in years of maternal care in the rough country, was a great comfort to Raymond, but she could not keep down his growing anxiety. The boy's body was so small and frail when stripped of its clothing! Under their vigorous ministrations the sufferer ceased to shake and at last fell into a hot, uneasy doze.

Raymond, seeing this, whispered: "You must go home. I will watch."

"No, Rob, you must sleep. I forgot you had no sleep last night."

"Oh, yes, I did. I took a nap at Barnett's. Please go to bed."

To this arrangement she submitted, and, taking his seat close by the boy's couch, Raymond studied his flushed face, more concerned at that moment over his temperature and pulse than with the brawling crowds, the invading force or the fate of his mine. When Munro knocked on his door he went out upon the threshold and repeated the failure of his mission, while the captain of the vedettes listened with his horse's rein across his arm. At the end he merely said: "All right. Let them come; they will find us ready. Did the kid turn up all right?"

"He turned up, but he has taken a chill and is burning with fever."

Munro seemed concerned. "He had nothing on but that little gray jacket. I tried to warm him up with some whisky and a supper. I hope he won't be laid up. Well, now, old man, what are you going to do—help us or the dudes?"

"I can't decide anything tonight. I'm worried about this boy. If he is better in the morning I'll have something decisive to say to you."

"All right; take your time, only don't take too long. It's up to you to decide. Good night. Keep me posted on the boy's condition."

A half hour later Jim Dolan and two or three of his fellow reporters tumbled in, eager to know what Raymond had seen in the valley.

To them he said: "Boys, I haven't a word to say. I'm sorry I can't offer you a bed, for Louis, my boy friend, is very sick. Dolan, I wish you would send up the best doctor in Bozle. Tell him there's money in it if he comes tonight."

To Matt, Raymond turned. "Go on with your meeting without me. I can do nothing till this boy dodges this fever." And Kelly went away, reluctantly, to meet with the leaders of the neutral party, robbed of half his resolution, for he, too, loved the sick lad.

At 12 o'clock, when some of the men were passing, Raymond went out and called Baker and said in the tone of one who had at last decided on a plan of action, "I want you to carry a message to Boggy and see that it gets there."

And Baker, having a long training as cowboy behind him, accepted his order like a soldier.

The telegram was addressed to the sheriff and read:

They're on to your box car game. Look out! A PEACE LOVER.

At 1 o'clock Kelly returned with lowering brow. "I wish you'd been there, lad. They're afraid of Munro and voted me down. We are to do nothin'."

Raymond, submerged in the rising flood of his anxiety, looked at his partner dully. "Well, perhaps it's better so, Matt. I gave my word to Ann that I would care for this boy as if he were my brother, and I'm going to do it, regardless of every other consideration. If he grows worse I shall send for Ann, and then I will have double reason to keep out of the movement."

Toward daylight Raymond called Kelly. "Send a message to Ann. Louis is a mighty sick boy and needs her care."

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE morning paper, which the maid brought to Ann while she still drowsed in her bed, contained the news of Louis' arrival at Raymond's cabin and his collapse.

"All the early part of the night," the reporter went on to say, "bands of clamorous men marched from mine to mine, calling upon the gangs to lay down their tools. Only two firms remained unintimidated—Reese Bros. and Kelly & Raymond. In the midst of all this turmoil," said the reporter, "Raymond, one of the men most concerned, was standing guard over a sick boy and would not leave his side for a moment." Ann glowed with a sense of deep obligation to that watcher.

Mrs. Barnett knocked on her door and called, "Have you seen the papers, Ann Marie?"

"Yes."

"What are you going to do?"

"I am going up there."

Mrs. Barnett entered. "How can you go, with that mob in possession? You must not go! It isn't safe for you, and I will not consent to have Don go again. Who will protect you?"

Ann flamed with wrath. "Have you no law out here that will protect a girl who goes to nurse her sick brother? I have nothing to do with your idiotic wars. I am going up there as a citizen of New York, not as a partisan of your side in this struggle. I shall not leave that boy there to suffer alone."

"I can't find Don," said Mrs. Barnett. "He must have gone downtown. Some one has just phoned a message from Rob. He says Louis has taken a chill

"Then let us go!" she cried, rising.

and that you are to come, if you can, but not to worry. He is well cared for."

"Can we reach him by telegraph?" asked Ann.

"The operator says there is no direct connection with Skytown, but that the wire from Bozle to the south is uncut. We can try."

"Tell Don to wire Mr. Raymond that I am coming at once, and that I will bring Dr. Braide if possible," answered Ann, alert and self contained.

She rang Dr. Braide's telephone a few moments later and called firmly. "Dr. Braide, I want you to go with me to Skytown"—

His cool, indifferent voice cut her short. "Who is it, please?"

"It is Ann Rupert"—

"Ah!" His voice changed—became swift, eager. "Certainly, certainly, Miss Rupert. I understand. I saw the note about your brother. It will be a privilege. I will run over at once and discuss the best plan for getting there."

Ann was eating her breakfast when the bell rang, and the maid at her order brought the doctor into the dining room.

"I am asking a great deal of you, doctor. I will gladly recompense you for any loss of patients," said Ann.

"Please don't trouble about my patients. It is a pleasure for me to serve you. I beg you not to bring it down to so mercenary a plane."

"That's very kind of you, but I must insist on making it a matter of professional service," replied Ann, for he, too, was a suitor, and she liked him, but at this moment she wanted his skill—his training as a physician, not his adoration. This he had insight enough to perceive.

"We can go by the Southern railway and drive from Sage Flat, or we can go over the stage road. In either case we must meet and pass Munro's guard. According to all accounts, he has a complete circle."

"I am not afraid of Munro or his men," she answered. "In fact, they will be our safeguard. I will telegraph to Mr. Munro that we are coming, and he will see that we are protected."

"If you feel that way, then the simplest and quickest route is over the old stage road. With a good span of horses and a light cart we can drive to Bozle by 4 o'clock and reach Skytown before dark."

"Then let us go!" she cried, rising. "I will order a carriage at once and call for you in half an hour."

"I will be ready," he alertly replied.

By means of the telephone Ann ordered the liveryman to harness his best span of horses to a mountain buckboard. "No, I do not need a driver," she sharply answered to his query. "Get them here quick!"

Before she left the receiver Barnett came rushing into the room. "What's all this? Jeannette tells me you're going back to Skytown today."

"In twenty minutes I shall be on the road."

"Alone?"

"No; Dr. Braide is going with me."

"Impossible! You mustn't do it! Our attack is to be made tonight. The whole hill will be a battleground tomorrow."

"I can't help that, Don. I must go to my brother. He needs me all the more. Think of that poor boy lying there burning with fever and a battle going on! Put off your attack. It's all foolish, wicked, anyhow. What good will it do? You will only kill men or get killed yourself."

Dr. Braide was waiting as Ann drew up to his door. He carried a big bearskin robe over his arm and held a medicine case in his hand. "Have you plenty of wraps? It's cold up there, they say. Let me arrange this robe around your feet. Shall I drive?"

"No, thank you. I will drive."

The horses were marvels. They pushed up the steep, winding road with steady stride, their heads swinging. Not till they entered the canyon did they lag into a walk. The clouds hung low, in great gray masses, covering even the secondary peaks. Patches of snow began to appear at the roadside. It was a bleak, inhospitable and silent world.

"There is something ominous in this stillness," Ann said at last.

"Where do you suppose we will meet Munro's men?"

"Anywhere after we leave the halfway house, according to report."

"You know this man Munro?"

"I've met him."

"Is he as terrible as people think him?"

"He seemed very boyish to me and not at all terrible."

"The morning papers stated that he had assumed absolute control up there, and that his men were drilled in true military fashion."

"So much the better for us," answered Ann, "for he will see that we are protected."

At about 11 o'clock they reached the wide mountain meadow out of which the Bear creek fell. The clouds hung just above their heads, a broad, seamless gray roof.

At the halfway house they found a stage load of people and several freighters, and every man's mouth was agape.

The tavern was a survival of the days when railroads were of the far-away future—a long, low log structure with a roof of dirt out of which dead weeds flaunted. The front room, which swarmed with men in rough clothing, seemed to be a country store and postoffice as well as an eating house. A small, active old woman met Ann with toothless grin. "Step right this way and get out o' the smudge."

Ann followed her into a minute bedroom which opened off the dining room. The old woman began to clatter. "Put off your things here. My, but them's fine furs! Did ye drive up from the Springs? Are you going on to the camp?"

"Yes."

"Waal, you'll find it lively up there! As near as I can learn they mean biz!" she whispered. "Some o' Jack Munro's men are in there now eatin'. They keep a mighty sharp watch on who comes in these days. Soon's you're ready I'll put you and your man down at my end of the table and I'll look after ye."

Ann laid aside her furs, but retained her hat, and as she re-entered the room made a dazzling appeal to those rough fellows, who eyed her with sly side glances.

Braide, already seated, rose to meet her. "We have reached an outpost of the guard and will be interrogated before we leave, I fear."

"I am quite ready to meet them," she replied, bending to her plate. "They can't refuse to let us pass."

The talk at the table was not illuminating. Each man apparently strove to fill his paunch before his fellow. Only one of them seemed to study Ann and her companion with candid interest. This was a small man with a chin beard and an eye as keen as that of a blue jay. As the other men filled up and left the table he came down and carelessly took a seat near Braide.

"I reckon I've seen you before," he began pleasantly.

"I shouldn't wonder. I'm Dr. Braide of Valley Springs."

"Where you aimin' to go now, if it's a fair question?"

"To Skytown."

"Goin' to treat somebody?" asked the old woman, who was hovering near.

Ann interposed. "Yes, he is going up to treat my brother Louis, who is lying ill at Mr. Raymond's cabin."

The stranger glowed again. "Didn't see nothin' of the sheriff's army on the way, did ye?" Here he winked at Braide.

The doctor smiled. "Not a thing. I don't think they've left the valley yet."

"I'd advise 'em not to. I'm going over to the camp myself, and if you don't mind I'll jest nacherly jog along a rod or two ahead of you—to show you the road."

As he rose to go the stranger said: "If so be it you folks have any influence with Rob Raymond, preach him into joining the movement. It'll be a mighty sight safer for him and a big help to the miners."

After the miner left the room Braide said: "We're in the enemy's country. He was plainly warning us, and his going along is in the nature of an armed guard."

"His escort may be of use to us," replied Ann. "Who was that man?" she asked of the old woman, who fairly whispered her answer.

"That's old Steve Adams. He's boss of this squad. All six o' them men are Munro's pickets."

As Ann and the doctor drove on the clouds began to lift, rolling slowly, ponderously, reluctantly upward from the timbered slopes.

Their guide rode rapidly, signaling the doctor now and then to keep pace with him, and after nearly an hour of fairly level ground the road entered another canyon and crawled upward along a prodigious wall, which beat back the clashing roar of a small but very swift stream of water.

It must have been about 5 o'clock when they rounded the great base of the Black Cone at the head of the canyon and looked away across the big camp and far out upon the valley to the west.

Adams, their guide, was a considerable distance in advance when a couple of horsemen encountered them. After a moment's conference one turned back, and the other came on swiftly.

Ann's heart glowed with the hope that it might be Raymond with a message from the sick one, but it proved to be Munro. He came up swiftly and, setting his horse upon his haunches, leaped cavalierly to the ground.

"Good evening, lady," he called as he approached the wagon. "Have you journeyed far?"

"How is Louis?" asked Ann quickly, with instant revolt of his assurance.

He felt the impersonal rebuke of her manner and replied simply: "He is better this afternoon, so I hear. I have not had time to call. It is a pleasure to see you again." He fixed his eyes on her companion. "I don't think I know you," he said, with a challenging inflection in his voice.

"I am Dr. Braide of Valley Springs."

Ann explained, "Dr. Braide comes to attend my brother."

Munro's face lost its reckless smile, and he looked worn and pale. "Doctor, I'm glad to meet you."

"We must hurry on," interrupted Ann, warmly impatient of Munro's glances.

Braide chirped to his horses and Munro swung to his seat and followed after. At the foot of the hill he called: "Keep that winding road. It will bring you to the top near Kelly's. I'll meet you there."

The peak was more than quiet—it was silent. It was as if a palsy had fallen upon every ablebodied workman, causing a swift devouring decay to set in.

"What a change!" exclaimed Braide. "I was here just before this trouble began and these hills teemed with men"—

"There is one smoking chimney. It must be the Raymond & Kelly mine." Ann pointed away up the hill.

"How do they keep going?"

"The strikers fear them, and, besides, Munro and Raymond are old acquaintances. I think he protects them."

Raymond was standing at the Kellys' door as they drove up, his face somber, his eyes clouded. He could not speak, so deeply was he moved, but with a nod at Braide and without a word threw back the robes and reached a hand to help her. "How is he?" she asked, with a catching of the breath.

"He is very ill, but I think"— His voice failed him for a moment. "I'm glad to see you, doctor. He needs you."

Everything whirled before Ann. "If he should die—oh, if he should die! It's all my fault!" she wailed. "It's all my fault!" and her numb limbs refused to move.

"Don't say that," he urged. "I've gone over it a thousand times. I don't see that any one is to blame. I know you are not. Come, we must go to him."

In that instant something seemed to pass between them—some invisible, intangible bond was established. Ann put out her hand, and he took it gently between his palms. "Be brave, [illegible] girl," he said tenderly.

She suddenly roused herself and hurried toward the cabin. Mrs. Kelly came to meet her with arms opened wide, her sweet face pale with pity. "Oh, Ann, darlin', we're needin' ye!"

Ann went to her for an instant, then put her aside and knelt beside the bed. Her heart grew icy cold with the horror and the pity of seeing that blithe, boyish face set and livid, the brows grave with the gravity of battle. His eyes were closed, and, at the moment, he appeared to be dying. She caught his lax hand and kissed it passionately. "Louis, speak to me! Speak to sister!"

Her low cry pierced Raymond's heart, and while he stood helpless, sick with sympathetic pain, the doctor took Ann gently by the arm. "Please leave me alone with Louis for a few minutes. Trust him to me."

Raymond turned comforter. "The doctor is right. His case is not decided yet. You must remember how strong and well he has been. He's not the pale slip he was when he came here. Please go over to the house and let Nora make some tea for you," he pleaded, and at last she yielded and, with a final look at the sick boy, went out with Mrs. Kelly.

With that half superstitious confidence which even the most intelligent feel when the doctor is present, Raymond soon followed. He was tired—tired! His long ride to the valley and back, his lack of sleep, but especially his anxiety, had worn upon him so that now, when he could shift some part of his responsibility, his steel woven frame began to quiver and his brain to thicken. He sank into a chair and laxly looked at Ann.

"Louis, speak to me! Speak to sister!"

"It is sweet to see you," he uttered slowly—"doubly sweet because of Louis. We've done our best, Nora and I. I was in agony for fear you would not come tonight. I didn't want to shirk responsibility or labor—but—I—I wanted you. It's been a long day for me."

Mrs. Kelly explained: "Rob is dyin' for lack o' sleep. That's the truth. He wouldn't leave the boy, and after riding all the day and the night before. But come now, have some tea—both. My mind is easier since the doctor came. Sure I know he will check the fever, never fear that."

Raymond soon put down his cup and rose. "Your drink has done me good, Nora. I will go back to the doctor and see if he needs help. You stay here," he said to Ann, and his voice was intimate and tender. "I will report at once."

When he re-entered a few moments later his tone was cheerful. "The doctor has made his examination and is confident of heading off pneumonia."

Ann's face lit with joy. "Oh, did he say that?" She reached both her hands to him. "Now you can go to sleep. I will watch tonight."

Together they returned to the bungalow, and Raymond, after a moment's conversation with Braide, threw himself on his couch. "Ah, this seems good!" he exclaimed to Ann and fell asleep almost instantly.

She drew the robe over him with careful hands and turned to Braide. "I'm so grateful to you, Dr. Braide. You are to eat supper with the Kellys. I think you would better go over to the house now. I will stay with Louis."

He protested against this, but she had her will. "In case he grows restless," he said at the door, "call me. However, I will return in half an hour probably."

A suffocating throb of tenderness rose in Ann's throat as she bent above Louis' flushed face and listened to his troubled breathing. Raymond lay in profoundest slumber, his face in shadow, but his presence was most palpable and appealing.

Nora came softly in. "Ann, dear, the supper is on the table. Go you along and eat. You're needed to keep the peace."

"Peace between whom?"

"Munro and Matt."

"Is Munro there?"

"He's waiting to see you. Keep him from Matt; he's in a bad temper tonight."

Ann went out with a wrinkle of vexation on her brow.

Munro was waiting just outside the door in the clear, yellow dusk.

"How is the boy?" he asked as she drew near.

"He is better, thank you."

"I'm mighty glad to hear it. I was worried about him on my own account. You see he was brought to me by one of my vedettes, and as he had a great deal of information I kept him with us."

"I hope you didn't ask him to betray his friends?"

"He was ready to talk."

"You shouldn't have listened. He is only a boy."

"It is no more than fair, lady, that one member of your household should be loyal to labor." His eyes burned into hers as he bent toward her. "What has changed you toward me?" he asked, with stern abruptness. "You give me nothing but 'marble brows' these days. What have I done that you shut your door in my face?"

"What you do is of no consequence to me except so far as my brother is concerned."

He was too keen not to perceive his advantage. "No woman can play with me and not get cinched at some part of the game."

"What do you mean?"

"You know what I mean. You were amused with 'the wild man' for a time. You played me against Rob for the fun of it, and then pulled out with Peabody."

Ann recoiled before a certain savagery in his voice, and, with her hand on the latch of the door, answered very slowly: "You interested me, I admit. You're very amusing at this moment, but you have no reason, no right, to say that I gave you the slightest encouragement to—to take this attitude toward me. It is the baldest presumption on your part."

At this moment Kelly opened the door. "Is it you, Ann?" He stepped aside. "Go in, girl, ye're supper's waitin'." Ann slipped in, glad to escape under the great arm which barred Munro's passage. "You stay outside," Kelly said to the young desperado, and his voice was dangerously calm. "I want a word with you. The blood of this night's work will be on your head, me lad. You can't excuse yourself by sayin' the committee demands it. You are the committee. Man, you're crazy!"

The young leader laughed. "They're the crazy ones, to come up against my men on this hill with a lot of old soaks, one lungers and ex-policemen dead on their hoofs. But don't worry, there'll be no battle—the clatter of a tin can will scare 'em into bug house fits. Now, Matt, let me finish what I came to say. We've been good friends, and I want to keep friends. You're a fair man, but, let me tell you, the boys are getting bitter against you independents in this fight. You have no business to stand out against the union."

Kelly lifted his big fist in a gesture of menace. "Listen to me, Jack Munro. I've been a working miner all me life, whilst you were at school; whilst you were playin' hooky and stealin' plums, and all the years you've been runnin' a roulette wheel I was pickin' at the rocks. If any man is fitted to advise 'tis Matt Kelly and not a play actor and celluloid bunko steerer like y'rself. Go yer ways, Jack Munro, but lave me and mine alone. This ends it. Ye'll have no welcome from the Kellys' door after this night's work, and if ye put so much as the toe of ye're foot across me path I'll kill you for the reckless, murderin' devil that ye are!"

Munro reeled under this gusty blast, but recovered himself. "You'll be coming to me for help inside of twenty-four hours, and you'll get it for the sake of Nora and the kids. Good night."

CHAPTER XXIV.

LOUIS came to himself just before midnight and recognized Ann, and though his breath was labored and his face lined with suffering it was good to feel his familiar self reaching out to her from his house of pain.

"How did you get here?" he asked.

"I drove with Dr. Braide."

"I'm pretty sick. I'm glad you came, sis," and he put his hand feebly into hers. "Where's Rob?"

"He's sleeping. You must be quiet now or you'll wake him."

"He's been good to me."

"Sh, dearest," she pleaded. "Don't talk now. Go to sleep."

"I don't want to sleep. I've slept enough. It makes my head ache worse."

In the end the boy ceased to groan and twist and at last slept, but Ann refused to go to bed. Her anxiety and the many questions pressing to be answered engaged her so deeply that she felt no need of sleep. Toward midnight Braide, in despair of inducing her to sleep, stretched himself in a low chair and fell into a doze.

It was exactly 2 o'clock when a single gunshot rang out sharply, like the voice of a sentinel questioning the silent night. As the girl listened tensely, three others, deeper throated, answered in quick succession. Then silence again intervened for a moment, only to be torn by a fusillade, a rat-tat-tat of assault which brought Braide to his feet.

Ann hurried to Raymond, calling sharply, "Rob, they are shooting! Don't you hear them? Quick! Quick!"

Raymond rose to his feet dizzily and looked at her blankly, the mist of sleep thick in his brain. Other shots and cries followed, and though faint and far they cleared his vision. Catching a belt of cartridges from the wall and turning to Braide he sternly asked, "Can you shoot?"

Before Braide could answer another shrill chorus of yells, fierce as the outcry of wolves, arose, a vivid light filled the room, and a second later a dull concussion shook the earth beneath their feet. Ann shrank and cowered, but Raymond, menacingly quiet, remarked: "Well, our turn has come. They've blown up our shaft house."

Bleeding Piles Cured
—after Years of Suffering.

Miracle-days may be past—but the day of saving people from suffering is ever-present.

What is more distressing than itching, Bleeding Piles? Some say the only cure is the knife. We say, operations are unnecessary. Read this letter:

"For years I had Piles, which protruded and bled freely. The itching pain was sometimes almost unbearable. Often I suffered so severely it was next to impossible to remain on duty. It was a hardship to walk. I tried many remedies, but with poor success.

"This winter, in New York—at the Bench Show—I suffered greatly—was almost compelled to remain in my room. I tried several remedies—without relief.

"On my return home, Mira Ointment was advised. I used it. In only a short time, all the irritation and pain ceased. I can now walk with ease and attend my duties as a member of the Fire Department.

"I strongly recommend Mira Ointment to anyone suffering from this annoying complaint.

CLEVER ANSWERS.

Cases Where They Won Promotion In Civil and Military Life.

A long list might be given of men who have owed their advancement in life to a clever answer given at the right moment. One of Napoleon's veterans, who survived his master many years, was wont to recount with great glee how he once picked up the emperor's cocked hat at a review, when the latter, without noticing that he was a private, said carelessly, "Thank you, captain." "In what regiment, sire?" instantly inquired the quick witted soldier. Napoleon, perceiving his mistake, answered with a smile, "In my guards, for I see you know how to be prompt." The newly made officer received his commission next morning.

A somewhat similar anecdote is related of Marshal Suvaroff, who when receiving a dispatch from the hands of a Russian sergeant who had greatly distinguished himself on the Danube attempted to confuse the messenger by a series of whimsical questions, but found him fully equal to the occasion. "How many fish are there in the sea?" asked Suvaroff. "All that are not caught yet," was the answer. "How far is it to the moon?" "Two of your excellency's forced marches." "What would you do if you saw your men giving way in battle?" "I would tell them that there was plenty of whisky behind the enemy's line." Baffled at all points, the marshal ended with, "What is the difference between your colonel and myself?" "My colonel cannot make me a lieutenant, but your excellency has only to say the word." "I say it now," answered Suvaroff, "and a right good officer you will be."

A WOOD SAWING FLY.

The Tool With Which It Makes a Cradle For Its Young.

It is marvelous how many of the tiny creatures in the insect world conceal and preserve their eggs. Some will deposit them in extraordinary places; others will insert them in the skins of living animals; others, again, deposit their eggs where the young grub, after coming from the egg, finds food close at hand.

Among these last mentioned are insects who bestow great labor in the cradle of their young. The place they select is a hard part of a leaf or the woody branch of a tree. In this they saw out a hole large enough to contain their eggs, whence their name, saw flies. For this purpose they are provided with an ovipositor of peculiar construction. It consists of two long pieces closing like a sheath over a third.

In the tenthredo this third piece contains two little saws, each of which has been compared to the tenon saw used by the cabinetmakers. The tenon saw is single, but that of the tenthredo is double, consisting of two distinct saws. The insect in using them throws out one saw and while it is returning pushes out the other.

This alternate motion is continued until the cut is made, when the two saws, receding from each other, conduct the egg between them into its place. Not only is the edge of the saw notched into teeth, but on every tooth a number of smaller teeth appear.

Tit For Tat.

He rejoiced in the not very humorous name of Wood, and he prided himself on his jokes and smart repartee. Few of his friends had escaped the lash of his tongue, and he had victimized many by his practical jokes—in fact, he never lost an opportunity of being funny. One day he met a friend whose name was Stone, and naturally a name like that was too good a chance to miss.

"Good morning, Mr. Stone," he said gayly; "and how is Mrs. Stone and all the little pebbles?"

"Oh, quite well, Mr. Wood," was the withering reply. "How's Mrs. Wood and all the little splinters?"

Milk In the Sickroom.

Milk is the chief article of food and nourishment in every sickroom and hospital, and every physician and nurse should know the source of supply, its purity, before ordering it in any form for invalids and convalescents. It is not enough that it comes as "country milk." There must be integrity and experience back of it. It has been scientifically demonstrated and proved that pure milk products are the most nutritious, economical and easily digested foods when the milk is obtained in all its purity and kept so from pasture to consumer.—Charles Elley Hall in Leslie's Weekly.

The True Idealist.

Every human being, unless he lacks utterly the capacity to love, is an idealist. No man can boast that he accepts only the "plain facts" of existence as his guide posts. Love makes idealists of us all. Through love we are given the power to look beyond the crude husk we call the fact. Any great achievement is impossible without this power. Life thrills with meaning and magic for the true idealist.

The Change of a Word.

A prospective woman tenant through the typewriter's omission of one all important little word of two letters received the following startling statement: "Dear, Madam: You can have the flat, provided you repaint and redecorate yourself!"

His Resources About Exhausted.

Father—Do you think you can support her in the style to which she has been accustomed? Suitor—Not in the style to which she has been accustomed since we became engaged.

STONES SET ON FIRE.

Truly Remarkable Action of Sea Water In Ireland.

All the talk was of the old country, its marvelous beauty, its marvelous happenings, and Casey said to the Texan:

"The sea setting fire to tall cliffs—you wouldn't believe that possible, I suppose."

"Assuredly not," returned the Texan. "Neither in Ireland nor elsewhere."

"By those words," said Casey, smelling his shamrock tenderly, "you prove your ignorance of Ireland, sir, and show you have never been to Ballybunion.

"The tall cliffs of Ballybunion wade knee deep in the rough Atlantic. They are the bulwarks of Erin's west coast, and since the world's beginning the wild Atlantic surges, breaking against them, have eaten them out in caves and hollows.

"These cliffs of Ballybunion contain in their depths masses or iron pyrites and alum. Now and then the salt sea water eats into these masses, and oxidization at once takes place, and flames burst forth, and the rocks crack and melt in the great heat.

"Once the cliffs of Ballybunion burned for weeks. Like a volcano, they sent up yellow flame and black, foul smelling, bitter smoke, and the Irish came from hundreds of miles to see that wonderful sight.

"Only in Ireland, only in Ballybunion, sir," said Casey, fingering his shamrock, "may you see cliffs set afire by the salt sea they stand knee deep in."

TAMED BY KINDNESS.

The Methods of the Elephant Hunter In the Far East.

This is how elephants are hunted in Ceylon: The people begin by clearing an open space near a forest, part of which is strongly fenced in with trunks of trees, with open places for doors. Then the elephants are found and with blazing torches, rattling of noisy instruments and spears are driven toward the open doors.

At last, with a rush, the great herd enters, the entrances are barred, and the poor giants of the wood find themselves hopelessly imprisoned. An elephant's rage is dreadful to witness, but the ingenuity of man has found a way of subduing it. One by one each prisoner is freed again, and tame elephants, remarkable for their sagacity, come up to him, stroke him with their trunks and otherwise cajole him until they lead him on to a good strong tree. The natives creep up behind, and in a minute the elephant is made fast to the tree by his leg.

All the time this is going on the tame elephants are humoring their deluded victim, but as soon as he is secured they go away and leave him. Then the men bring him cocoanuts and leaves to eat, which, of course, he refuses, as he is again in a great passion and struggling to be free.

But hunger subdues even the fiercest, and at last his wild roaring ceases, and he eats. From that time the taming process is comparatively easy. Again and again he is fed, as he requires it, by a kind hand, and the elephant, susceptible to kindness, becomes at last a docile servant of the man.

White Ants of Africa.

Natives of the east coast of Africa do not object to the presence of the great white ant colonies in their neighborhood. The ants exercise great fertilizing power on the crops. A resident of that country writes: "Every season I have seen the wonderful effects the white ant hill produces on the Kaffirs' maize and corn. Whenever there happens to be an ant hill in a garden its immediate vicinity can be at once distinguished, as the maize and corn are fully double the size of the surrounding crop. The bush country a few miles from this place is swarming with white ants and has also a large native population. The ants do not attack green crops to any extent."

A Taste For Dogs.

Mark Twain was once talking of war and of the hardships and privations of sieges.

"A Frenchman," he said, "called one day on a woman who had two dogs. They were ugly little brutes, and when they came near him the man pushed them out of the way with his foot.

"'I perceive, sir,' said the woman coldly, 'that you are not very fond of dogs.'

"The man started in surprise.

"'I not fond of dogs!' he exclaimed. 'Why, madam, I ate more than twenty of them during the siege of Paris!'"

A Patient Man.

The endurance of the music lover who sits out one of Wagner's long "Ring" operas has often been commented upon, but perhaps not more forcibly than in London. Well up above the stage was a burly figure in homespun, evidently a Scottish farmer who had come to London to see the sights and hear the sounds. After sitting through three long acts he murmured audibly, "'Twas a patient mon that wrote all this!"

A Lake of Acid.

In the center of Sulphur island, off New Zealand, is a lake of sulphuric acid fifty acres in extent. The water contains vast quantities of hydrochloric acid and sulphuric acids, hissing and bubbling at a temperature of 110 degrees F., and great care has to be taken in approaching it to avoid suffocation.

Man carries under his hat a private theater, wherein a greater drama is acted than is ever performed on the mimic stage, beginning and ending in eternity.—Carlyle.

PHYSICAL CULTURE.

Wrong and Harmful Ways to Exercise Young Bodies.

"Among the many mediaeval fallacies concerning health and hygiene one of the most deeply rooted is the straight shoulder delusion," said a physical culturist of the enlightened school.

"The number of persons who come to me clinging tenaciously to the old fashioned method of 'standing straight' is altogether astonishing," she went on to explain. "The yardstick which the well meaning mother passes through the arms of her little daughter has been responsible for many thousands of bony necks with unnaturally projected heads. It will ruin many more unless parents are brought to realize that this ramrod method of carriage is as unsanitary as it is ungraceful.

"If a mother would but watch the effect of this position upon the little bare shoulders and neck of her darling she would never again wish her babies to assume it.

"The worst of the matter is that while it is ruining the carriage of her head and the contour of the neck and chest, it is in no way assisting the breathing business of the lungs. The ramrod method of standing neither expands the lungs nor causes effortless respiration. On the other hand, if correct breathing is mastered the shoulders, back and head assume their natural and most beautiful carriage. It is impossible for them not to do so. The poise thus obtained is that pictured by artists. It is as far removed from the ugly yardstick attitude as from a consumptive forward droop. In fact, it is the attitude suggested by Mother Nature herself for her healthy offspring.

"In order to stand straight throw the weight of the body first of all on the balls of the feet. The subject should practice this poise, swinging forward and using the heels merely as a balance.

"Now lift the chest. This is done not by laborious breaths, which exhaust and do not accomplish the object, but by a mechanical movement as easy and as natural as moving head or finger.

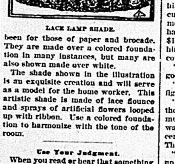
"With one's weight so poised and with the chest lifted it is impossible not to stand straight and to breathe healthfully."—New York Press.

A PRETTY LAMP SHADE.

Artistic Creation of Lace Flounce and Artificial Flowers.

Lamp shades of antique filet lace are the newest and most correct additions to a drawing room and boudoir. The fashion comes from Paris. The filet lamp shades are very handsome indeed and are particularly suitable for rooms in which the shades of the windows are made of the same lace.

The empire shape is the most fashionable for these lace shades, as it has been for those of paper and brocade. They are made over a colored foundation in many instances, but many are also shown made over white.



LACE LAMP SHADE.

The shade shown in the illustration is an exquisite creation and will serve as a model for the home worker. This artistic shade is made of lace flounce and sprays of artificial flowers looped up with ribbon. Use a colored foundation to harmonize with the tone of the room.

Use Your Judgment.

When you read or hear that something is no longer in style do not immediately give in to the idea. Possibly both sides have not been presented to you. One lady read that curtains were no longer in style. She read a beautiful account of the literary and artistic home of Henry Van Dyke, how no curtains in his house gathered microbes to devastate the premises, how the sunshine poured in, illuminating the rooms and bringing health and color to the atmosphere. It sounded well. She immediately tore down all her hangings and produced one of the coldest, uninviting aspects it were possible for her to obtain. Nor could her decision be changed. She forgot that the individuality of the Van Dyke home was missing; that her house was not the same style; that its furnishings were different; that its location was absolutely dissimilar; that in every respect it was a house of a "different color."

Windpuffs.

A famous German cookbook contains a recipe called windbeutel, or, in English, "windbags." A more graceful name and one just as expressive would be "windpuffs." For these puffs use half a pound of butter, half a pound of fine flour, the same weight in water and eight newly laid eggs. Clarify the butter and let it come to the boiling point with the water, then gradually stir in the flour until the mass cleaves from the sides of the pot. Remove from the stove and allow the puffs to cool a little. Flavor slightly with nutmeg or grated lemon peel and begin to beat the eggs through and through it with a steady motion. Put the mixture on to a well buttered plate and divide it into cakes the size of walnuts, then set them immediately into a quick oven and let them bake to a golden brown. Upon taking them from the oven sprinkle them with sugar and serve immediately.

MRS. MARGARET RHOADS.

The Oldest Tollgate Keeper In the United States.

The oldest tollgate keeper in the United States in point of service is said to be Mrs. Margaret Rhoads, who lives in Montgomery county, Pa. Surely she is the oldest in years.

For more than fifty years Mrs. Rhoads has been the faithful attendant of the gate of the Springhouse and Sumneytown turnpike at that point, but her experience in collecting fares extends over five additional years. Now, at the age of eighty years, she is still attending to her duties there.

In 1849, when the Springhouse and Sumneytown turnpike was completed, Mrs. Rhoads and her husband, John Jenkins Rhoads, were induced to take charge of the tollgate about one mile above Springhouse. Mrs. Rhoads collected the first toll ever paid upon the pike. After five years' service there the couple resigned and removed to Philadelphia.

MRS. MARGARET RHOADS.

Not being favorably impressed with city life, however, they returned to the country and took charge of the tollgate half a mile west of North Wales, at the junction of the West Point and Springhouse and Sumneytown turnpikes.

This was on March 31, 1855, and Mrs. Rhoads has remained there in continuous service since, a period of over fifty years.

Mr. Rhoads died in 1862, leaving his widow as sole guardian of the gate. The turnpike officials are proud of her record and think that, in point of continuous service at least, she is the dean of tollgate collectors in America.—Philadelphia North American.

The Best Way to Figure.

In a discussion of household economy a club woman said the other day: "The late Susan B. Anthony once threw a new, strange light on this subject. She was talking to me about the allowances that husbands make their wives, and I can't help thinking that there was a good deal in what she said.

"She said that an average man and his wife, an average woman, were discussing their receipts and disbursements. The man, a bookkeeper, had had his salary reduced. It was now $1,100. He wanted his wife to tell him on what weekly allowance she could hereafter run the house.

"'Well,' said the wife, 'there are a good many things to consider.'

"'I know it,' said the man. 'But just figure them up.'

"She began to calculate. 'There are the clothes for the three children,' she murmured. 'There's the servant's wages. There's the butcher, the grocer, the baker and the milkman. There's the rent, the'— "'Well, figure it up! Figure it all up, can't you?' the man interrupted rather impatiently.

"The woman looked up suddenly. 'I could figure it up,' she said, 'but I have thought of a much simpler plan.'

"'All right. What is it?' said he.

"'It is,' she answered, 'that you figure up instead what it will cost you for car fares, luncheons and tobacco and hand over the rest to me.'"—New York Press.

How to Air the Cellar.

A grave mistake is sometimes made in ventilating cellars. The object of ventilation is to keep the cellar cool and dry, but this often fails of being accomplished by a common mistake, and instead the cellar is made both warm and damp.

A cool place should never be ventilated unless the air admitted is cooler than the air within, or at least as cool as that or a very little warmer. The warmer the air the more moisture it holds in suspension. Necessarily the cooler the air the more this moisture is condensed and precipitated.

When a cool cellar is aired on a warm day the entering air, being in motion, appears cool, but as it fills the cellar the cooler air with which it becomes mixed chills it, the moisture is condensed, and dew is deposited on the cold walls and may often be seen running down them in streams. Then the cellar is damp. To avoid this the window should be left opened at night and late, the last thing before retiring. There is no need to fear that the night air is unhealthful. It is as pure as the air of midday and is really drier. The cool air enters the apartment during the night and circulates throughout.

A Square Lace Centerpiece.

The corner of a curtain pattern formed a quarter of an effective lace centerpiece. The girl who made it couldn't find what she was looking for—square centerpieces are unusual, yet a square centerpiece was what she wanted, and she set her wits to work to get it. Among her patterns was one for curtains—a deep border with a prettily turned corner, and that corner proved an inspiration. She traced it off four times, joining the corners until the prettiest sort of a square was the result. The design has been admired and borrowed and copied a dozen times, and made up into every sort of braid. For there are certain times when a square centerpiece or little table cover suits a particular purpose as nothing else does.

Consult Your Dressmaker.

A dressmaker, it is said, is the best person to consult when a lady wishes to have a photograph of herself taken. This is so because a dressmaker knows her customers better than any one else can know them. Even the photographer himself, artist though he may be, may turn the sitter's head in all directions without being able to seize the pose which is the most becoming to her. A thorough acquaintance with the sitter is necessary to give the right pose required to make the photograph a success, and a dressmaker who knows every line of her customer's figure may really be a most precious adviser on the subject.

A Monthly Clearing Out.

"One of my best friends," says a writer, "who, with six young children and only one servant, keeps a spotless house and a soul serene, told me once how she did it. 'My dear, once a month I give away everything in the house that we do not imperatively need. It sounds wasteful, but I don't believe it really is. Sometimes Jeremiah mourns over missing old clothes or back numbers of the magazines, but I tell him if he doesn't want to be mated to a gibbering maniac he will let me do as I like.'"

Scar Marks.

Scars are caused by the destruction of tissue. When this destruction is complete nothing in the world will remove the white blemish. When the injury is only partial much can be done by anointing the spot with zinc ointment every night and bathing it with a saturate solution of boric acid every morning. Electric massage treatments are helpful for the reason that they bring the blood to the surface and encourage a thoroughly healthy action of skin and glands.

Library Table Covers.

The most popular cover for a library table is of dressed calfskins in the Russia leather finish. The skins are lapped together with no attempt at straight lines and stitched flat on the machines, and the part that hangs over the table is left in the original shape, legs, neck and tail coming wherever they will. Usually the decoration is of burned wood, and they are slashed around for a couple of inches by way of a fringe.—Philadelphia Press.

A Colorless Cement.

For a good cement mix the best powdered rice with a little cold water, slowly add boiling water till the right consistency is obtained, then pour into a saucepan and boil it for a minute. This paste is almost transparent and well adapted for fancy paper work, for which a strong and colorless cement is required.

Emergency Screen.

Sometimes a screen is needed in case of illness or other emergency. A common clotheshorse and two sheets serve excellently until something better can be procured. Of course, if a darker drapery is available, so much the better, but in a sickroom something washable is absolutely necessary, no matter what the color.

To Lay Carpet.

Put on overshoes next time you are helping to lay a carpet, then smooth out the wrinkles and stretch the carpet by dragging your feet along it. The rubber seems to take hold of the carpet and makes the work a lot easier.

Don't mind if your hair shows a few gray threads here and there. As long as you can smile and be happy you will keep young. A few gray hairs can't cut you away from the joys of being alive.

When making jam pour a small quantity of the sirup in the bottom of the jar in which it is to be kept before putting in the jam. It will prevent air bubbles.

An unsanitary refrigerator is often the cause of serious sickness, yet few housekeepers think of laying the blame to this source.

When using carbolic acid as a disinfectant mix it with boiling water.

KEEP THE CLOCK FAST.

A Suggestion That May Prove of Value In the Home.

In one of the best known hotels in this country there is a clock in almost every room in the great building. Each one of these timepieces is run by electricity, which keeps them at precisely the same hour, minute and second of the clock in the main corridor. Not one of them, however, if compared with accurate railroad time, but shows its hands pointing just five minutes ahead of the exact hour.

It is a trick which has been tried in this hotel for a number of years for the benefit of patrons as well as for the many hundred employees, and it has worked with admirable results. The missing of trains and tardiness of service alike are unknown in this well ordered hostelry, and a simple subterfuge has developed into a most practical working system.

This little trick somehow seems to have a practical value in the home as well as in the public hotel, and it can be applied equally as well in the matter of morals, money and manners as in the matter of time.

How would it be, for instance, if the clocks all through the home were kept five minutes fast, not the actual timepieces, but the machinery which keeps family life running? Suppose the breakfast every morning was ready five minutes before instead of five minutes after the working members of the household sat down at the table. It is more likely than not that father and brothers and sisters would leave the house in plenty of time to reach their offices ahead of the appointed hour.

WIVES' LETTERS.

According to a Man, They Should Avoid All Mention of Love.

The wise wife will avoid all mention of love in letters to her husband. A man who is married to the woman he loves resents as a husband more than he did as a lover any crude and frank confession, and if there is one thing more than another that bores him it is the conventional monotony of his wife's letters or such parts of them as attempt to give expression to her feelings, and this not because men are brutal, not because they are less sentimental than women—for in truth they are more so—but for the very sound reason that men are more logical, more artistic and have a greater capacity for sensing the eternal fitness of things.

In other words, a man reasons that when he has once told a woman he loves her she will accept the statement as truth, and it offends his sense of self respect to be obliged to repeat himself. Particularly is it offensive to his sense of delicacy as well as to his most sacred feeling for her that he should be obliged to translate his passion into the feeble inadequacy of words and phrases. As a consequence a man very much in love will say or write almost anything rather than the words a woman most desires to hear—those three little words, "I love you."—"A Man Who Knows" in New York World.

CULINARY CONCEITS.

Thin sirup may be made thicker by boiling it down.

By long beating cake will be fine grained, although light and delicate with a small amount of beating.

Peanuts mashed into powder in a mortar, seasoned with salt and moistened with cream make a good sandwich filling.

It is said that if a clean cheesecloth is spread over the mixing board and well floured cookies may be rolled in a much softer dough than otherwise.

When frying croquettes the wire basket should always be plunged into the hot fat before the croquettes are put into it; otherwise they are apt to stick to the wire, which will make them fall apart when being taken out.

Mustard and horseradish mixed makes an excellent relish for cold meats. Mix yellow mustard and add to it an equal quantity of grated horseradish which has been boiled ten minutes in water. Thin the mixture with a little of this water.

Selecting a Hat.

A certain society woman who is noted for her original ideas on all topics was on a shopping tour with a friend one afternoon. At length she began to feel quite tired and after a glance in a mirror said to her companion, "I'm perfectly worn out, and I look a fright, so I'm going to get a hat." "Why don't you wait until you feel better?" asked the other. "No; I always try on hats when I look the worst, and then I can tell without doubt whether the hat will suit me or not. If it looks halfway decent on me with my hair stringing in my eyes and when I'm wearing a worried look I am sure it will look fine when I am fresh and have a new wave on my hair. I always want to know the worst about a hat. I can imagine the best."

Substitute For Soap.

For those complexions that cannot endure soap almond meal will be found an excellent substitute. It should be used with warm water and is not only cleansing, but is also refining to the skin. Formula: Four ounces of orris root in fine powder, four ounces of wheat flour, one ounce of powdered white castile soap, one ounce of powdered borax, ten drops of oil of bitter almonds, two fluid drams of oil of bergamot, one fluid dram of tincture of musk. Mix well and pass through a sieve, rejecting all coarse particles.

Hollow Cheeks.

If the cheeks are hollow it is because the muscles have become weak. To strengthen them wet with cold water and rub gently and deeply round and round with a soft Turkish towel.

MAKING A CHEF.

It Takes Many Years of Hard Work and Training.

"When you reflect upon what a chef goes through to complete his education it is no wonder that his services command high prices," said the culinary king of a restaurant.

"The chef," he continued, "begins as a boy, as apprentice to a master. For several years he works under the vegetable cook. He learns how to make mashed potatoes that look like white roses, how to cook and to arrange all the vegetables, from the truffles down, in a hundred fine and beautiful ways. He gets no salary. He gets only his board.

"Then for a year he studies raw meats. He learns how to select them and how to cut them up. He can tell at a glance, for instance, the genuine salt meadow mutton from the false. Along with this raw meat course goes also a study of fish and of game and of poultry—how to stuff, dress, lard, truss, and so on.

"Next, for a year, at a small salary, he stands before the range, learning how to broil, fry, roast and bake.

"He now knows the foundation of his art and is admitted into the presence of the chef himself—only assistants have taught him so far. The chef teaches him to make soups, pastries, ices and the more complicated puddings and souffles. Three or four years is none too long a time to study here.

"Ten years of hard work should turn a quick apprentice into a good chef. Such a chef without difficulty earns from $25 a week up to $150. If he gave half as much time to the bar, the church or medicine he would earn thrice as much."

A DRAMATIC ARTIST.

The Winning Ways of the Man Dressmaker of Paris.

The dressmaker is a slim young man with a long nose and big, winsome eyes. Wearing a gray frock coat and patent leather shoes, corseted and powdered and perfumed, he is more than a man; he is a dressmaker. He is saturated with dandyism. It is not of an offensive kind. His manners are a strange mixture of humility and insolence, for he is at once a salesman and an artist. And he talks, talks, talks, bending his slim body into polite curves, gesticulating with his thin white hands, rolling his eyes in their painted orbits, the while he fumbles silks and velvets and satins and lace and wool.

The mere man who comes into a dressmaker's shop of an afternoon—in Paris no one goes to the dressmaker's save only in the afternoon—begins by sneering at this fantastic creature. That mood does not last long. Contempt gives way to admiration. There is something marvelous in the way this lord of lace and ribbon dominates the women, the royal highness as well as the spoiled actress. He is charming; he is frivolous. Then of a sudden his face darkens, he becomes serious, he stares at her royal highness, studying her form from head to foot; he smites his brow and cries despairingly: "No, no! I can't see you in that gown—today I can't see you in any gown—I will study—an inspiration will come—you must wait." And royalty goes away flattered, she knows not why.—Vance Thompson in Woman's Home Companion.

Landor's Prose.

No poet has ever been a bad prose writer, whenever he cared to drop from poetry into prose; but it is doubtful whether any poet has been quite so fine, accomplished and persistent a prose writer as Landor. "Poetry," he tells us in one of his most famous passages, "was always my amusement, prose my study and business. I have published five volumes of 'Imaginary Conversations;' cut the worst of them through the middle, and there will remain in this decimal fraction quite enough to satisfy my appetite for fame. I shall dine late; but the dining room will be well lighted, the guests few and select." Without his prose Landor is indeed but half, if he is half, himself. —Arthur Symons in Atlantic.

Paul Jones' Promise.

After the great fight in which John Paul Jones in the Bonhomme Richard made splinters and shreds of the British vessel Serapis the English government generously decided that, though vanquished beyond a question, the captain of the lost vessel had behaved with becoming bravery and deserved promotion to the rank of commodore. John Paul Jones heard of this promotion and its cause and said, "Well, by George, if I ever meet that chap again I'll make him an admiral."

Striking Coincidence.

Mr. Gotsum—Maria, how long has that young Smoothley been coming here to see Nellie? Mrs. Gotsum—Let me see. You remember when the papers published that story about your having sold a gold mine for half a million? Yes? Well, as nearly as I recall it, that's the time when he began coming.

Had Hard Luck.

"You've spent most of your life in a circus?" asked the reporter.

"Yes," said the freak. "I started out as the fat man, then I married, and now I'm the living skeleton."

The Retort Courteous.

Miss Oldwun—I've refused many, many offers of marriage. Gayboy (absentmindedly)—Very thoughtful and considerate of you, I'm sure.

Every age has its problem, by solving which humanity is helped forward. —Heine.

The flights of the Imperial Viennese gymnasts are said to be thrilling in the extreme. The apparatus used in their act extends almost the entire width of the big hippodrome pavilion, and the performers catch each other by their hands and even their feet, after traversing a distance of sixty feet through the air. The Imperial Viennese Troupe is credited with being the highest salaried aerial act in the world

Made a Bluff at Hanging Himself.

FRED. RENFREW, CHARGED WITH THEFT FROM THE VICTORIA HOTEL, ATTEMPTED SUICIDE LAST NIGHT.

After his arrest last night, which is recorded elsewhere, Fred. Renfrew made an apparent attempt, in the police cells, to end his existence, and it is not known whether his intentions were genuine or not. The police officers are of the opinion that it was, to use a common expression, "only a bluff." Anyhow, Renfrew took off his suspenders and, after placing them about his neck, was in the act of fastening them to the upper portion of the cell door when Officer Snider, who was on duty in the station at the time, hearing a noise, investigated. He, as quickly as possible, opened the cell door, loosened the suspenders from off Renfrew's neck and took them away. After this Renfrew made no further attempt at self-destruction, although he was watched.

Queen Victoria Is Suffering From Shock.

Madrid, July 26.—The shock which she suffered from the explosion of a bomb on her wedding day is telling seriously upon Queen Victoria's health. Recently it was reported that she was suffering from a cold, but her illness is said to be really nervous prostration, which takes the form of hysteria and insomnia. She is an enthusiastic motorist, but for ten days her physician has forbidden her to indulge in the sport. The Queen has become a devout Catholic, and never misses daily mass. She has a tiny tablet, bearing the image of St. Christopher, the patron saint of motorists, on every one of her cars.

Sold Stolen Gold Watch For Two Dollars.

FRED. RENFREW IN THE TOILS, CHARGED WITH STEALING FROM VICTORIA HOTEL.

Some time yesterday a lady's gold watch and chain, two boxes of cigars and two bottles of gin were stolen from the Victoria Hotel.

The watch is the property of Mrs. J. C. Brain, whose husband is conducting the hotel. It was taken from her room.

Fred Renfrew, who worked about the premises, was suspected of the theft and last evening he was placed under arrest charged with the offence.

Sergeant Hayes investigated the affair and later in the evening recovered the watch and chain. It had been sold by Renfrew for $2 and the purchaser resides near Albert College. There is no trace as yet of the cigars or gin.

Renfrew this morning was brought before Magistrate Flint. He waived preliminary examination and elected to be tried before the County judge. He was committed for trial.

The Stationing System

"METHODIST" REPLIES TO THE LETTER WRITTEN BY REV. M. E. WILSON.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Dear Sir,—After perusing the Rev. Mr. Wilson's letter in reference to the stationing system, I was compelled to conclude that he had shown a spirit unbrotherly and vindictive, and not one that should possess a minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The Methodist church has always recognized the Stationing Committee as one of the church government, and I presume always will do so or until such time as it ceases to be a Methodist church.

In my experience, while admitting that the committee cannot in every instance give satisfaction, the appointments made have, from the material at hand, given general satisfaction, notwithstanding the reflections upon the committee made by him.

If I am not mistaken, Mr. Wilson was, not very long ago, discussing the probability of a union between the Methodists and the Church of England, and therefore it is not surprising that he suggests "something like Episcopal control" instead of the committee.

I am afraid that when Mr. Wilson penned his letter he had forgotten that he had ever read the 12th chapter of 1st Corinthians, or that he had, as the minister of his congregation, preached love and forgiveness.

There is no wonder that he has had trouble upon his circuit, and I would be surprised if his indiscretion has not brought further trouble upon himself as one being disloyal to his church's government and for libelling his brother ministers and laymen.

I write this as a protest to the spirit shown by a minister of the gospel and for his inserting a letter that reflects so unjustly, to my mind, upon the church government of which he is a minister.

Yours truly,
METHODIST.

Of Interest to Livery Keepers.

A somewhat new case came up at St. Catharines, before the Police Magistrate there, last week, when a livery firm were charged by a lady from Seaforth—who had been visiting there—of causing her to miss her train. She left a call for a cab to take her to the station and it was not sent. She also stated to the court that once before, while on a visit to St. Catharines, the same firm disappointed her in a similar way. The Magistrate, after hearing the particulars, decided in her favor, the livery firm having to pay the costs of the court and all the extra expenses caused by her having to remain over for another train.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

YACHTING.

The Viva Took Second Place.

The Bay of Quinte Yacht Club races, held at Glen Island yesterday, were very well attended and successful. There was only one Belleville entry—Sandy Burrows' skiff, the Viva, which, with five other entries, competed in Class C, a race for any style of boat not over 18 feet on the water line. The race was 12 miles, twice round a triangular course. In running before the wind the Viva was easily best, but on other points of sailing she was outclassed by the Juanita, a Rochester yacht, with an overhang like a city alderman and a veritable cloud of canvas. Sandy's speedy skiff had little chance against the Rochester flyer, which carried two feet of canvas to the Viva's one, and eventually won by about five minutes. The other four entries were not in it at all. The race was sailed in about two hours, and Sandy got second prize, a handsome silver mounted tray. The winner is the fastest craft of her size on the lakes. Large fleets from Watertown and Rochester were present. One power boat, owned by a Yankee, came from Sackett's Harbor to Picton, a distance of sixty miles, in three hours, which was going a few.

At the conclusion of the races Sandy Burrows sold the Viva to Mr. Alf. Gerow, of Picton.

Mr. Geo. Wilson assisted Mr. Burrows in sailing the Viva.

Death of a Child.

May Hazel Jarvis, five-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Jarvis, residing on Benjamin St., died shortly before midnight last night. The little one had been ill for some eight months with an incurable disease. Hazel was a bright child and the parents will receive the sympathy of many friends in their bereavement. The remains will be taken to Frankford for interment.

A Rascally Practice.

Stratford Herald: The poisoning of dogs is not to be commended. There are mongrel curs in almost every town or city, Stratford included, but poisoning is not a proper way to get rid of them. Besides being objectionable in itself, the wrong dog may be poisoned. A valuable animal is as likely to be killed as a worthless one. But a recent occurrence in Kincardine gives emphasis to what must have struck thoughtful persons that there is in such a practice danger to human life. A little girl, six years old, who was apparently well at 10 o'clock at night, was taken suddenly ill and died a little after midnight. The physician who was called said there was symptoms of strychnine poisoning, and an inquest was opened and adjourned to allow the contents of the child's stomach to be analyzed. The supposition is that as there have been several cases of dog poisoning lately, the child got hold of some of the poisoned bread or cake set for the dogs. Her brother testified to having seen some pieces of cake near the house and the parents did not know of the child's eating anything to produce such a result. If it turns out that the girl lost her life in this way it is to be hoped that the person who would be so heartless and thoughtless may be discovered and punished.

Suggestive.

Tweed News: Mr. A. W. Reynolds, who has recently purchased a new gasoline launch, is evidently making preparations for an extensive cruise. He was seen yesterday afternoon going in the direction of the lake with a suspicious looking keg on a truck. It is to be hoped that he will invite all his friends to join him.

Assayers Differ.

Toronto, July 26. — The Minister of Lands and Mines, Hon. Frank Cochrane, has, on the complaint of Mr. W. A. P. Jarvis, of Cobalt, directed an investigation into the conditions governing the assaying of minerals.

Mr. Jarvis complains that samples from his vein giving a good percentage of mineral under examination by Messrs. Evans & John, Cobalt, and other local assayers, when conveyed by the mining inspectors to the Government assayer at Belleville were found to be blanks.

Mr. Jarvis points out that either the local assayers are playing with the prospectors, the Government assayer at Belleville is not doing his work properly, or the samples get switched in the hands of the inspector.

The Minister is conducting an enquiry into the complaint.

ANOTHER HANDBOOK RAID.

Toronto Detectives Descend on Cigar Stores and Other Premises Where Bets Were Laid.

Toronto, July 27.—In spite of the lesson administered to the makers of hand-books in Toronto by the raid on their premises made by the police last month, followed by fines of $200 imposed upon all the keepers, the business of taking bets on horse-races in outside places has gone merrily on. As it was well known that the purity campaign had not produced the desired effect, but that some keepers thought their punishment gave them immunity for a season, the provincial officers decided to undertake another raid. Accordingly a simultaneous descent was made yesterday on a number of resorts and as a result twelve keepers are now in custody awaiting trial for keeping common gaming houses.

Places Raided.

The places raided and those charged with operating them are: Herbert Frankland, Bay street; John Honan, 125 Jarvis street; A. G. Duncan, 108 John street; John Goebel, 69 Queen street west; John Murray, 897 King street west; Frank Burrows, 920 Queen street west; John Allison, Queen street east; F. Wagner, 566 Queen street west; F. Worthington, 23 Yonge street Arcade; J. Midgley, 160 King street west; J. Rider, 220 Queen street west; F. McSweeney, 29 Colborne street.

Frequenters Charged.

The following will be charged with being frequenters of the places raided: William O'Connor, 224 Seaton street; William T. Edmanson, 237 Sherbourne street; James McGraw, 193 Seaton street; Charles Olcott, 125 Jarvis street; Edward Ward, 125 Jarvis street; Thos. Lynch, 102 Ossington avenue; Alexander Smillie, 39 Colborne street; John Kelly, 131 Mutual street; Frederick C. Clapp, 60 Spruce street; Joseph Dunlop, 163 Defoe street, Bert Norton, 899 King street west; Fred Dingle, 126 Strachan avenue; William Weary, 49 Stafford street, and John Anderson, 152 Shaw street.

Bail Not Accepted.

When the prisoners were searched at the police stations the amount of money taken from them totalled upwards of $2,300. Shortly after the police had brought in the prisoners Crown Attorney Corley notified the police inspectors that bail would not be granted in any case.

BRIEFS BY WIRE.

Late News From Foreign Sources in Pithy Items.

The City Hall at 'Frisco, which cost $7,000,000, has been entirely condemned as unsafe.

The Great Northern Hotel at Leeds, Eng., was practically destroyed by fire on Wednesday. The total loss is $750,000.

Fire practically destroyed the buildings of the Cleveland Country Club; loss, $150,000. The fire originated from defective electric wiring.

Reports that 15 persons were killed by a cloudburst in the Kent Cenis district, France, are incorrect. There was no loss of life. Traffic by way of Kent Cenis is indefinitely interrupted, the tracks and bridges being badly damaged.

The cabled news that at the Cercle Militaire, an exclusive Paris club, Major Dreyfus had been slapped in the face by an officer just after President Fallieres had honored him, was officially denied. Instead perfect good-fellowship reigned.

Stockholders moving for an examination of the books of the Wells, Fargo Express Co. of New Yrk declared that they had received interest of only 8 per cent., while it should be 40 per cent.; that the surplus was $19,000,000, instead of $12,000,000, and the amount of bonds $10,000,000 and not $5,000,000.

STRANGE DROWNING ACCIDENT.

Fatal Result of a Row Over a Little Fishing.

Montreal, July 27.—At Bourdeaux, a suburb on the Back River, Wednesday evening, two Englishmen were warned off the property on which they were fishing by a young man named Boisvert, the son of an hotel proprietor.

The father appeared on the scene and threw one of the Englishmen into the water, but as he was an expert swimmer, he saved himself.

By a strange coincidence young Boisvert and the other Englishman fell in, although they were not in contact. The two Englishmen succeeded in getting the lad out, but he could not be resuscitated.

The coroner's verdict was accidental death, although there was an effort to attach the blame on the Englishmen.

Mayor Boles Is Dead.

Ingersoll, Ont., July 27.—Mayor Jas. P. Boles died suddenly at Port Burwell about noon yesterday. The announcement of his death came as a shock to everyone here. Mr. Boles went to Port Burwell last week, and on Saturday was taken ill, his condition at once becoming serious. As a mayor he gave universal satisfaction, and was elected by acclamation at the last election.

Every day is a new life, every sunrise but a new birth.—Jordon.

W. J. BRYAN NOT HAUGHTY.

Granted King Edward Private Audience His Majesty Craved.

London, July 27.—William J. Bryan, who was introduced by Ambassador Whitelaw Reid, was received in private audience by King Edward at Buckingham Palace yesterday. The visit was paid at the King's special request, his Majesty having notified Mr. Reid that he desired to meet Mr. Bryan. The interview was quite informal and was marked by the pleasing cordiality which the King is accustomed to show Americans in whom he is interested.

Only the King, Mr. Reid and Mr. Bryan were present. The conversation largely turned on the subject of peace and the conference of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, with the objects of which his Majesty showed himself to be thoroughly in accord.

Subsequently the King received some eighty members of the Inter-Parliamentary Union in the throne room.

Delegates Didn't All Vote.

RICH VEIN OF SILVER

Located by Prof. Miller on the People's Limit.

Cobalt Bloom In Quantity Discovered By the Provincial Geologists, and Indications Are That Government Mining In Ontario Will Reap a Rich Profit—Visions Hold Entranced the People's Servants.

Toronto, July 27.—Visions of old pensions, repeal of all taxation and a dozen other paternal Government measures were floating around the Parliament Buildings yesterday when the news arrived by wire from Prof. Miller that the vein of ore reported a couple of days ago from the Gillies' Timber Limit had been found on further digging to be very rich in silver.

Rich Cobalt Bloom.

The first report was of a vein of smaltite six inches wide. The top part of the vein has now been uncovered, and shows a rich deposit of cobalt bloom. This is the arsenate of cobalt—smaltite being the arsenite—and it carries a much higher percentage of cobalt.

A good deal of preliminary trenching and digging had been done before the trench was run which exposed the new vein at a depth of three or four feet below the surface. All the veins in the district are practically vertical, and run to a great depth, 250 feet having been sunk in some of the mines. The present vein was apparently lost after some work, but it was found to break off at right angles when after an interval the original strike was resumed.

The whole find is one of very great value, but no assays have yet had time to be made.

Pleased But Reticent.

Hon. Frank Cochrane was evidently well pleased with the intelligence, but beyond referring to Premier Whitney's statement in announcing the withdrawal of the Gillies' limit for the benefit of the people of the province, he would not commit himself to any suggestion as to the course the Government might pursue in dealing with it. "You can speculate all you like, of course," he remarked playfully.

Hon. A. J. Matheson, as Provincial Treasurer, smiled with even more than his usual serenity when speaking of the find, but would not venture no more than Mr. Cochrane. He appeared to think that a silver mine was a good asset for a Government under any conditions.

ASKED TO ACT.

Railway and Municipal Board to Arbitrate London Railway Strike.

Toronto, July 27.—Mr. James Leitch, chairman of the Railway and Municipal Board, has received a telegram from Mr. J. C. Judd, Mayor of London, advising the board that his Worship has received reliable information that a strike is seriously threatened on the London Street Railway, and requesting the board to take action under section 59 of the Railway and Municipal Board act of 1906.

The cause of the trouble was not stated, but it is understood the threatened strike is due to certain dismissals.

There has been an intimation that the strike have been postponed in order to give the board an opportunity to effect an amicable settlement of the trouble, if possible. The board will go to London to-day.

The Strike Declared.

London, July 27.—At 3.15 this morning the street railway employes declared a strike. No cars will run to-day. It is not known how the men will meet the Ontario Railway Board when they arrive to-day.

Henry Scadding Is Dead.

Toronto, July 27.—Never once regaining consciousness from his injury and shock, from falling from a moving street car, Henry Scadding, 70 years old, died at 1[illegible] o'clock yesterday morning from cerebral hemorrhage. Mr. Scadding was formerly manager of the Dominion Bank at Orillia. He was the son of an early pioneer, Charles Scadding, and was a nephew of the Rev. Henry Scadding, author of "Toronto of Old." He leaves a widow and four sons —Charles Scadding, bishop-elect of Oregon; Dr. H. Crawford Scadding, Walter Reginald Scadding, and J. L. S. Scadding, of Wilkesbarre, Pa. All the sons but the latter were with him when he died.

Mr. Lennox's Trial Adjourned.

Toronto, July 27.—Yesterday Mr. Lennox staggered the Crown by swearing that a written agreement existed between himself and the city giving him authority to pay a clerk of the works and that it went back to 1890. The then city solicitor knew all about the agreement and advised it, and the original, of which he produced a copy was just upstairs over the head of the county judge. The trial was adjourned till Aug. 2, to give the Crown a chance to look over the situation. The other charges of perjury and that of conspiracy were adjourned till the same time.

LONDON CAR STRIKE.

Cars Running Up to Midnight—Public Sympathy Is Lax.

London, July 28.—Assisted by French-Canadians and Italians the Street Railway Co. is fighting the strikers. Up to midnight everything was quiet. Eight or ten cars were covering the city since 8 o'clock, the rest were safe in the barns, the company taking no chances of an outbreak.

Public sympathy is lax. Many do not know there is a strike on, and the cars are being used, especially by the citizens living in the outskirts.

From the union headquarters it was learned that the strike will be on in earnest to-day. Several of the "scabs" joined the union forces at last night's meeting. The men claim that as soon as the public know the situation, no one will ride on the cars.

Manager King said: "I am perfectly satisfied with the way things are going. We will break the strike all right, for not a bit of public sympathy is with the strikers."

Never call a convention of your friends to find out what you think yourself.

Railway Board Fails.

The Ontario Railway Commission held their first session on a strike question yesterday.

For twelve hours they were in conference. They were called in to mediate between the strikers and the Street Railway Co. They failed.

The statement given out at midnight by Chairman Leitch was as follows:

"The representatives of the employes expressed their willingness to submit all differences to arbitration by the board, agreeing to be bound by the award.

Men Willing to Arbitrate.

"The men's grievances were submitted to the meeting and were by the board communicated to the Street Railway officials, with the intimation that the men were willing to agree to arbitration.

"The officials of the company declined to arbitrate any of the grievances alleged by the men.

"The refusal of the street railway officials was communicated by the board to the men, who requested the board to investigate the charges against certain officials of the company, who, it is alleged, dismissed three employes for no just cause, but because they were members of a labor union.

"The request was granted, the board fixing Aug. 1, at 2 o'clock, at the Court House, London, for the investigation."

The strike is still on.

There are too many young men who start out to make their mark in the world and stop at a soda fountain or hammock on the way.

Crown And Peasantry.

Czar Orders Report of Lands Suitable For Division.

No General Strike in Russia Yet—Situation is Not Encouraging to Leaders—But They Will Push Preparations Energetically and Will Address Manifestoes to the People—Stolypin's Pen Busy.

Vienna, July 28.—The Politiscue Correspondenz yesterday says if learns from St. Petersburg that Emperor Nicholas has directed the crown lands department to make a report showing the portions of the crown lands suitable for division among the peasants.

No General Strike Yet.

St. Petersburg, July 28.—At a joint conference of the Russian revolutionary committees, held across the Finnish frontier early yesterday morning, it was resolved not to declare a general strike at present.

The determining factor in the decision not to declare a general strike or an armed uprising was the advice to the revolutionary military committee which reported that the time was not quite ripe. It was decided, however, to push preparations energerically and to address manifestoes to the arm, and navy, peasants, workmen and the people generally.

Appeal to Peasants.

The manifesto to the peasants, in substance, declares that the Government dissolved Parliament, in which the peasants' hopes were centred, and they now had no reason to wait any longer. The manifesto to the soldiers and sailors tells them that they are brothers of the masses who are fighting for liberty and took an oath not only to defend the Emepror, but the country, and that it is now their duty to side with the people.

Appeals to Cossacks.

After dwelling on the odious task imposed on the Cossacks, it appeals to them to no longer act as the oppressors of their fellows and requests the Cossacks of the second and third categories, who are being retained with the colors beyond their time to throw down their arms and return to their homes without awaiting demobilization.

The general manifesto to the action says the moment has arrived when the people must take liberty into their own hands. A separate address was issued to the Cossacks.

It develops that all the final conference there was considerable discussion.

Stolypin's Pen Busy.

M. Stolypin has issued another circular to the governors, instructing them to keep close watch on the population to prevent meetings tending to lawless acts, and giving them authority to expel dangerous characters and arrest persons belonging to the revolutionary parties, and when found in possession of incriminating documents to "exile them to the uttermost limits of the Empire." Trans-Caucasus has been placed under a state of exceptional security.

Spies Killed.

Half a dozen Government spies were found dead in the industrial section of St. Petersburg yesterday morning. Political assassinations are increasing in Poland and small strikes are reported to have been declared in many places in the provinces; but the peasant movement, so far as the reports show, is not gathering headway.

Half of the Seminovsky Guard Regiment has been sent to Cronstadt, in view of the ugly temper of the sailors there.

Compelling the News.

Twelve armed men entered a printing office at Yaroslav after midnight and compelled the compositors to print 50,000 copies of the address to the country drawn up at Viborg by the members of the outlawed Parliament, as well as a number of its proclamations issued by the Socialists.

The German consul at Moscow published a letter yesterday denying the report that Emperor William had advised the Emperor to dissolve Parliament, as reported in St. Petersburg July 22, the day of the dissolution of Parliament, stating that he was authorized to say that Germany did nothing to encourage the Russian Government to take that step.

A Member Arrested.

M. Koudreschux, a member of the outlawed Parliament, has been arrested for inciting the peasantry to rise.

Detachments of Cossacks, who have been scouting through the district of Gerebels looked for agitators engaged in inciting the peasants, are returning to Yeketermoslavl escorting over a hundred suspects.

Dozens of persons were arrested at Moscow while attempting to placard the walls of the city with the address to the people drawn up by members of the outlawed Parliament.

Strikers burned Woydslawski's factory at Lodz, involving a loss of about $40,000. The estate of M. Falkowski was plundered. The spirit of disorder is abroad, and many small incidents of violence are reported.

'Frisco Relief Work.

San Francisco, Calif., July 28.—Dr. Edward T. Devine, Col. George H. Pippy and Edward F. Moran, composing the commission which has had the relief work in charge here, resigned Thursday night. A salary of $6,000 a year was attached to the positions. The relief work will be carried on by subcommittees.

Canada's Alien Labor Law.

London, July 28.—The Privy Council has allowed the appeal in the Attorney-General of Canada vs. Cain and Gilhula, the appellant to pay the costs. This decision of the Privy Council reverses the decision of Justice Anglin, which practically declared the Alien Labor Act a dead letter.

Remanded a Week.

Toronto, July 28.—Mrs. Lillian Miller and Edmund Bridant, accused of killing the latter's wife, by drugs, were arraigned before Magistrate Kingsford yesterday. At the request of Crown Attorney Corley, the case went over for a week. Bail was refused.

Carpenters Won't Strike.

Toronto, July 28.—It was stated yesterday that the result of the ballot taken by the carpenters on the question of striking resulted in a majority of 12 against.

Strike Is Over.

Wheeling, W. Va., July 28.—The strike of the 8,000 miners, which has been on in Eastern Ohio since April 1, was officially declared off yesterday.

Ten Barely Escape In Fire.

Ottawa, July 28.—At Rapids Des Joachims, Pontiac County, the warehouse of Thomas Marion, merchant, and the dock were destroyed by fire at a loss of $10,000. Mr. Marion was away from home when the fire broke out, and Mrs. Marion, an aged nurse, and nine children, who were in the house adjoining the warehouse and dock, escaped in their night clothes. The residence was saved. The fire is supposed to have been of incendiary origin.

Newfoundland and Confederation.

BOND ON HIS EAR!

Our readers have already learned from telegraphic news, that the Governor-General's visit to Newfoundland has led to friction between the people of the Island, led by Premier Bond, the Lieut.-Governor of the Island, and the Governor-General of Canada.

From what has transpired, Earl Grey, the Governor-General, has without the permission of that great man, Premier Bond, been discussing the question of union with the Lieut.-Governor the Hon. Mr. McGregor. To such an extent was this petty spleen of the Bond anti-Unionists carried that they refused to extend to His Excellency Earl Grey, a public reception, Bond repudiating ~~having~~ anything to do with inviting the Governor-General to visit his kingdom. Mighty man is this Sir Robt. Bond.

Sir Edward Morris, Attorney-General in the Bond Government, however, while the Premier was absent from the colony, openly endorsed Governor McGregor's invitation and advocated before a public meeting a popular reception to Earl Grey, thus bringing himself in direct conflict with his Premier and a crisis in the Cabinet may be the result. It is also believed that trouble may arise between Governor McGregor and his Premier as a result of the latter's implied repudiation of Governor McGregor for inviting Earl Grey to the Island.

It is also noteworthy that while Governor McGregor has been charged with negotiating with the Canadian Governor-General on the subject of Confederation he does not deny that the subject was discussed with Earl Grey. Why should he? Surely the representatives of the Crown in North America might be permitted to discuss an important question of Imperial policy without asking or craving the permission of that great man, with a swelled head, Premier Bond, whose policy has been in the past to effect closer trade relations with the United States than with Canada. In fact his whole political life proves that he is an Anti-Canadian and a pro United Stateser.

Union with Canada will never be accomplished so long as Bond can prevent it. Knowing as he does that should Newfoundland ever become a part of Canada, he would be one of the small men of the Confederacy.

Whatever feeling there may be among the uninformed residents of the ancient colony upon the question of union, common courtesy, at least, would have suggested a friendly greeting and public reception to one occupying so exalted a position as Governor-General of Canada. Not so, however, with such a man as Bond at the head of the Government.

The action of this nabob brings to mind the story of one of the ancient Kings who ruled in years gone by in one of the islands of the Pacific, who, every day, after he had dined, sent forth one of his courtiers to sound the trumpet, as an indication that the King had dined and the denizens of the outside world might do likewise.

Earl Grey is a man of the world with great experience, and will know how to appreciate such snobbishness

THE MODERN PUZZLE.

(Baltimore American.)

Life is a puzzle
  All sages avow,
But never so vexing
  A problem as now.
Since the muck rake's been busy
  And stirred such a stew
Nobody can hardly
  Know just what to do.
To eat you must decide on—
  You will or you won't;
You'll die if you do
  And you'll starve if you don't.
If you're sick disease threatens
  In drugs dangers lie;
If you take them you're poisoned;
  If you don't you will die.
The air's full of microbes,
  To breathe it is death;
And yet to be living
  You must draw your breath.
All money is tainted;
  Your soul cannot give
It room—without money,
  Yet how can you live?
In water is typhoid;
  In wine ruin's brink;
So when you are thirsty
  There's nothing to drink.
Our grandpas and grandmas,
  Who were not so wise,
Just ate, drank and physicked
  And lived good long lives.
But we, with our knowledge
  Fear from night to dawn,
Doomed if we stand still,
  Wrecked if we move on.
No step can we take but
  We fear we will rue;
Alarmed if we don't,
  Scared green if we do.
Yes, life is a puzzle
  And bitter our cup;
We can't guess it right,
  And we won't give it up!

The Grand Trunk Railway has taken the last step in its adaptation to the ways of the continent to which we belong. In this hemisphere we most of us pass by the right; in England they pass on the left. On the Grand Trunk Railway the trains until Monday last, travelled on the left hand track. On all other American railways fortunate enough to have double tracks, the right hand track is used. Probably the British shareholders of the Grand Trunk, who have been seeing more rose color in the financial statements of late years than they used to when it was managed in London, will make less objection to the change now than they might have made at an earlier period. Whether they do or not the people who have to use the Grand Trunk, and who pass by the right all the rest of their lives, will be glad that this element of confusion has at last been indicated.

In times gone by some bogey was held up to frighten children into obedience. At the present moment the great bugaboo presented to the Canadian people is "Jim Hill," the great railway magnate of the United States. He, it is said now, contemplates running a railway through the Canadian Northwest to the North Pole, and established steamship communication between the pole and Liverpool. Well, let him. Canada can absorb all the money he has to spend.

The New York Evening Mail of the 26th onst., commenting upon the Hill schemes, says; "Jim Hill may go too far toward the North Pole with his Canadian operations. Hudson's Bay is open to navigation, as a matter of assurance, only about two months of the year. Hill's freight carrying steamships, plying from Port Nelson through Hudson's Strait and past the tip of Greenland to Liverpool, would have to do an enormous business in two months in order to make his hyperborean railway pay. But Hill's business is his own. He asks no government to guarantee success of it, or back him up in it. He is making a new empire in the far northwest. If he can bluff Boreas out of his absolute rule up there he will be entitled to all he can make out of the transactions."

YOUNG WOMAN DARES DEATH

HEAD DOWNWARD, SHE RIDES AN AUTOMOBILE FORTY FEET THROUGH SPACE.

Last season the Barnum & Bailey circus electrified blase show-goers at the annual opening in Madison Square Garden by presenting for the first time in America, the French sensation known as "L'Auto-Bolide," or the "Flying Meteor." In New York the act was re-named the "Dip of Death," and, judging from the nature of the performance, the title was significantly appropriate. Last season's tour of the Barnum & Bailey circus was largely confined to the west. This summer, the show will play the cities of the east, middle, west and south, and Manager J. A. Bailey has determined to give the people of these sections an opportunity to see this remarkable "thriller." Last season the act was performed by a Frenchwoman. This year, a plucky young American girl has essayed the feat, and experts say it is performed with even greater skill and daring than her predecessor in aerial automobiling displayed.

A review of the "Dip of Death," says: "This wonderful exploit has been variously described by a hundred writers, but in every instance the description has fallen far short of the actual thing itself. Indeed, it baffles description, for the apparatus alone is such an ingenious novelty that no one can fully comprehend the act of the artiste unless they first see the machine. To many persons illustrations depicting the act resemble pictures of some impossible performance, so opposed does it look to the practical. But that is owing, as stated, to the scientific build of the apparatus. For, after making a descent down an incline, the automobile takes an upward turn, reversing its position, and thus travels in a reversed position across a wide open space until its four wheels strike the opposite section of the loop, when it rapidly runs its course to the track. In its marvellous aerial flight through the air it describes a parabola covering a space of forty feet. The sudden jar, caused by contact in striking the opposite side of the course is weakened by the pneumatic tires acting as cushions, and then regaining its original position, the auto makes its journey to the end. The cleverness demonstrated in this wonderful performance is as apparent in the construction of the apparatus as it is in the originality of the conception. Of its dangerous character there can be no question. It is, as the Barnum & Bailey programme mentions, 'A fearful, flitting, fugacious frolic with fate,' in which the heroic artists 'dallies with death' at every performance."

The "Dip of Death" is not the only "thriller" with the Barnum & Bailey circus. A new act, and a sensational novel one is performed by two bicyclists, who accomplished the seemingly incredible of turning aerial somersaults on their wheels. Many new acrobatic, aerial and equestrian novelties are also promised when the Barnum & Bailey circus exhibits in this city on Wednesday, August 8.

PROMPT CONNECTIONS.

There is one feature of the wonderful service over The Lake Shore Railway that particularly appeals to those who travel much. The schedule is so arranged that connections, where any are necessary, are made promptly and long waits and delays are avoided. This, taken in connection with the luxurious trains, perfect personal service, highest speed, safety and punctuality has made the Lake Shore the most popular line in America. Careful travellers see that their tickets read "Via Buffalo and the Lake Shore Railway." For full information concerning rates, routes and service address J. W. Talks on Orange Meat

(THE PURE FOOD) No. 1

Canadian from field to table.

ORANGE MEAT is made from the best wheat grown in Canada. That's the reason why it is the best cereal in the world. From the Western wheat fields, it is brought by rail and lake right to our elevators at Kingston. Then our experts cook, malt and toast it changing wheat starch to wheat sugars. From the time it enters our elevators as wheat—until it comes on your table as ORANGE MEAT—it is never touched by human hands. The wheat is entirely handled by machinery. It is a Canadian cereal—perfected by Canadians—to build up the health and delight the appetite of Canadians.

ORANGE MEAT contains all the body, brain and vigor building elements of wheat. Analysis shows that ORANGE MEAT contains more wheat sugars than any other cereal.

It's not merely "something good to eat." It is a perfect FOOD. It contains the whole wheat—the outer shell omitted from flour and the wheat germ which supplies Phosphorus to the nerves and brain. ORANGE MEAT weighs ⅓ more than any other package.

Your grocer has ORANGE MEAT in 15c. and 25c. packages. 15c. size contains coupons good for new premiums. 25c. size contains 2½ times the 15c. quantity. Write "Orange Meat, Kingston", for new premium catalogue.

Do you eat Biscuits for their food value?

Mooney's Sodas contains all the nutriment of the finest Canadian wheat.

Do you eat Biscuits "just because you like them?"

Mooney's Cream Sodas come to your table appetizing, tempting, fresh, crisp, tasty.

In either case, don't you want the most nutritious and most delicious biscuits.

MOONEY'S ARE BOTH.

JESUS DINES WITH A PHARISEE—GOLDEN TEXT IS: "HE THAT HUMBLETH HIMSELF SHALL BE EXALTED."

HISTORICAL SETTING.

Time—On a Sabbath early in January, A.D. 30. Perhaps two or three weeks after our last lesson.

Place—In the house of a Pharisee in Perea, near Bethabara, at the fords of the Jordan, near Jericho (John 10: 40.)

Place in the Life of Christ—During his Perean ministry. Early in his last three months.

The Scene and Circumstances—V. 1. The invitation. 1. And it came to pass on his journey with his disciples southward in Perea, toward Jerusalem. As he went into the house. One of the chief Pharisees, R.V., one of the rulers of the Pharisees: not of the Pharisees as such, but a Pharisee who was a ruler: "some official distinction, as that he was chief of the synagogue, or member of the local Sanhedrim. To eat bread on the Sabbath day. Sabbath banquetting was common, and became proverbial for luxury.

We know of no case in which Jesus refused an invitation, no matter from whom it came. It gave him the opportunity and possibility of influencing for good those whom he could not otherwise reach. Social gatherings are Christian opportunities.

The house of this Pharisee ruler was doubtless one of the larger, better class of houses. The guests were naturally his prominent and wealthy friends. With them sat Jesus and his disciples. As usual in Oriental feasts, even to this day, unbidden guests came freely and stood about the room to look on: as sometimes with us at political and even religious club dinners, other persons can sit in the galleries and look upon the feasting of the members and their guests. Among these was the man sick with the dropsy.

That they watched him. R. V., "were engaged in watching." It is not certain that this was the object of the Pharisee in inviting him; or, if it was, that he was watching merely in order to find fault with him. He may have wanted to know more perfectly about Jesus. But apparently the guests, who were probably of the rich and better class, were watching intently with critical eyes, and would have been glad to detect some fault or failing. The Pharisees, says Bruce, performed the duty of religious espionage with exemplary diligence.

Note how opposition and wrong conduct brought out truths with new force. The guests were watching, but so was Jesus watching, only with a better motive. He turned the tables against themselves.

2. There was a certain man before him. In front of him, so that he could not help noticing him, and thus test his opinions and actions in regard to the Sabbath, and possibly his power of healing. More probably he came in of his own desire, in the freedom of an Eastern house, in order to be healed.

Jesus answering. Jesus addresses himself to the double situation; on the one hand, a sick man dumbly appealing for help; on the other, jealous religionists who were watching to find some fault of which to accuse him and destroy his influence. Spake unto the lawyers. Those scribes who were interpreters of the law. And Pharisees, who were exceedingly strict in certain outward forms of Sabbath keeping while they often lost its spirit. They were really, by their custom of holding feasts on the Sabbath, breaking their own rules applied to other things, and this gave a sharper point to the examples Jesus gives in v. 5. No cooking was done (Ex. 16: 23), but as those feasts must have necessitated more or less labor, the fact shows . . . how fast and loose they could play with their own convictions; how physical self-indulgence and unintelligent routine had usurped the place of spiritual enlightenment. Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath day? The dilemma, if they had planned one against him, was turned against themselves. These lawyers were bound to be able to answer such a question.

4. And they held their peace. They would not say "Yes," but they dared not say "No." They had on former occasions tried to accuse him of breaking the Sabbath by healing, but were shown that their position was untenable (Mark 3: 6), at least, so far that the people were on the side of Jesus (Luke 13: 17.) Their only safety was in silence. They wanted Jesus to give his own decision and then they could find fault with it. They may have wanted to see Jesus heal the man, even if he broke the law, and so have something of which to accuse him. And he took him. Perhaps to show that the healing came from him, perhaps as a medium of the healing power. And healed him. Showing the opinion of Jesus as to healing on the Sabbath. It was lawful to do good on the Sabbath day. (Mark 3: 4).

5. Which of you shall have an ass or an ox. The margin of the Revisions reads "a son or an ox"; and this reading is endorsed by the Int. Crit. and Expos. Greek Com. If your son or (even) an ox fall into a pit, R.V., "well." Palestine abounds in unprotected cisterns, wells and pits. . . The argument is that what the Pharisees allowed themselves for their own benefit must be allowed to Christ for the benefit of others. Will not straightway, at once, unhesitatingly, without thought of their Sabbath rules. An ass or an ox fallen into a pit, etc. Jesus knew that even their narrow interpretation of the Sabbath law allowed them to do thus on the Sabbath.

6. And they could not answer. For the question was unanswerable. If they would save an ox or an ass from his trouble on the Sabbath, by what reason or common sense could they say it was wicked to save a man from his affliction? "How much then is a man better than a sheep?"

Note the ways in which Jesus kept the Sabbath.

He went to church.

He walked about the city in his work.

He healed the sick, and did all the good he could to as many as he could.

He went to a social dinner, but carried his religion with him, and used the time in impressing great truths.

Note that Jesus, neither here nor elsewhere, abolishes or lessens the force of the fourth commandment! It is still in force as a day of rest and of worship. It is absurd to think that God would abolish from his Word what he has written on the nature of man and still keeps in force there.

Vs. 7-11. In the beginning Jesus noted how the guests (v. 7) chose out (were choosing) the chief rooms, seats: the best and most honorable places at the table, which were, as we have seen, those around the centre seats of the middle triclinium, where the host sat.

8. When thou art bidden . . to a wedding. A marriage feast. This is chosen because at a wedding feast there is more formality, a greater variety of guests, and more attention paid to their rank. Sit not down in the highest room. The place highest in honor, the chief seat. He felt like the Scottish chief: "where Macgregor sits, there is the head of the table." A more honorable man. Who would have a right to the place you have chosen.

9. Thou begin with shame. Begin emphasizes the reluctance of his movement. To take the lowest room (place). Since the other intervening places are all assigned. Thus the self-exalted guest had to take a much lower place than he would otherwise have received. The high place was occupied very briefly; the lowest place was permanent.

"Who pants for glory, finds but short repose;
A breath revives him, or a breath
o'erthrows." —Pope.

10. Sit down in the lowest room (place); that, "that," of results, rather than of purpose. "There is no recommendation of 'the pride which apes humility' going to a low place in order to be promoted."—Int. Crit. Com. Friend, go up higher. The one who chose the highest place did so according to his own estimate of his worth, and thus called attention to his conceit rather than to his worth. By his very act he was really in a lower place. The higher a monkey climbs, the more he shows his tail. The higher a fool sits, the louder and the farther he proclaims his folly. But the one who takes the lowest seat lets others make known his worth, so that he has worship (reverence, honor, respect) in the presence of them that sit at meat with him.

11. For whosoever exalteth himself. Christ now states the great principles illustrated by his parable. It touches the earth, but reaches to heaven. Humility is best for earth, and it is the passport to promotion in the kingdom of God, because it is the spirit of that kingdom.

12. Said he also to him that bade him. The remarks of Jesus to the host were suggested by the feast to which Jesus and his disciples had been invited. It was not a condemnation of the host who had invited Jesus who was poor, and probably his disciples who also were poor. The exhortation that follows was more than an exhortation to true hospitality. It was a parable of the kingdom of God, showing who he invites to the Gospel feast. The poor dropsical man who had been healed during the dinner was a living example. Call (invite) not thy friends, etc. This is not a prohibition of any gathering of friends and relatives; for Jesus was then present at such a gathering. But such a feast is not a charity or a proof of virtue. There is nothing characteristically Christian in it. The meaning is, call not merely thy friends, but use your hospitality to bring light, courage, helpfulness to the poor and neglected. Those who have good homes can do an immense good in this way. And a recompense be made thee. By a return invitation, by the social advantages gained, by the enjoyment and benefit of social intercourse.

13. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, etc. Those who are in need; those you call for their good and not your own. Compare Plato's Phoedrus, 233.

14. And thou shalt be blessed. You have the blessing of a virtuous deed, of having done good to those who need it: of adding to the happiness of the world; of partaking of the spirit of the saint, and angels in heaven. Recompensed at the resurrection of the just. The first resurrection, spoken of in Rev. 20: 4-5. He would be raised with them, because his actions showed that he was one of them. He would belong to the people and the city of God, because he would have their character. He would have the rewards that God gives and can give only to those who are righteous. Compare Matt. 25: 34-46.

Application. This parable is one for the whole church to ponder, would it be successful in doing the work for which the church was ordained. Jesus was then, and still is, inviting the poor in spirit, those who are spiritually maimed by sin, and are blind to the highest and best things of God and heaven and eternal life. The church is not a club for the good, the wealthy, the prosperous, but is ever to present a feast of the good things of the gospel to those who are in need, and to sound the invitation around the world. Only thus can they join in the recompense of the righteous, in the resurrection of the just.

MRS. HUNTER'S STORY

Says Results are "Truly Wonderful"

Mrs. I. Hunter, of 111 Raglan Road, Kingston, Ont. says:—

"I have suffered with kidney and liver trouble and chronic constipation for some time. I was subject to dizziness, bilious headache, nervousness, drowsiness, pains in the back and side, and a tired, weary feeling nearly all the time.

"I tried almost every medicine, was treated by doctors and druggists with little or no benefit.

"I tried Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill, and the results have been truly wonderful. I am so much better. Anti-Pill is a most wonderful remedy."

INTERIOR DECORATING

That's Our Business

And we keep an experienced staff of workmen busy the year round.

True we do outside painting also, but we give preference to decorating.

We have been so busy with our interior work this year that we have found it impossible to do much exterior work.

The service we render, our customers is par excellent—better far than is found elsewhere—we have the materials and the methods—have the ideas and the designs. This is why we have so much decorative work continually ahead of us.

Most people understand that we do better work and use better materials than is usually used by painters. This is another reason for our everlasting busy-ness.

We use white lead in all our work absolutely better than any other lead that can be found and superior to anything carried on sale in Belleville—and we can prove it Work with this lead will wear longer by 40 per cent and look as much better.

"Why is it," said a West side man, "that the Public Works department generally gives East Belleville the best of things? Not long ago a street in West Belleville was graded up with broken stone as big as a woman's fist, and it was left at that. Nice stuff to ride a bicycle over. If that had been on the east side crushed stone and gravel would have been added and the street finished up properly. The Public Works people do little enough for the west side. They might finish what they undertake."

In winter, says the man on the next block, I like to think how pleasant it would be pushing the lawn mower, but in summer I think how much nicer it would be to wield the snow shovel. There are others.

The death of the American millionaire, Russell Sage, recalls to mind the verse some American humorist wrote about him in connection with Carnegie's Hero Fund, the same being slightly altered:

There's the man who tried to borrow fifty cents from Russell Sage,
He ought to get a medal, he ought to get a medal.
There's the census man who comes and asks the ladies, "What's your age?"
He ought to get a medal as a hero.
There's the man who preaches sermons short whene'er the day is hot,
There's the man who pays his taxes when the ready cash he's got,
And the chap who'll build a public bath — we'll show him the right spot—
He ought to get a medal as a hero.

Referring to The Intelligencer's remark that cheese is high in price now, the Toronto Globe reminds us that this is under Laurier. A puerile remark. The Britons are fond of cheese, and they buy the Canadian kind because they like it the best. But where does the credit to Laurier come in?

THE BACK TAXES.

MAYOR SULMAN SAYS TAX ROLLS WERE NEVER IN BETTER SHAPE THAN NOW.

"I see," said Mayor Sulman to The Intelligencer this morning, "that there has been some discussion about back taxes lately. You can say from me that the tax rolls of this city were never in as good shape as they are to-day. It is expected that the 1904 roll will be returned next week. A large property-owner paid $200 on it yesterday."

"Good for him," said the newspaper man.

"He still owes $300, though," said the Mayor, as an after-thought appeared to strike him.

The Stationing System

To the Editor of The Intelligencer;

Dear Sir, — After reading and re reading the letter of the Rev. Matthew Elijah Wilson in your issue of Thursday, my first impulse was to treat it with silent contempt, as it was self evident that no body of men would tolerate such a state of affairs as he describes, but, as he is comparatively unknown to your readers it should be stated—

That the personnel of the Stationing Committee changes each year.

That his usefulness is impaired in other ways, but chiefly because of his quarrelsomeness.

He reminds me of the soldier who left the army because his regiment was always out of step with him.

It would be a decided advantage to the church if Mr. Wilson would do as the soldier did, and for the same reason.

Yours truly,
WM. JOHNSON.
Belleville, 27th July, 1906.

ED. NOTE. — Controversies of this character never do any good, hence this must end it. Let the church settle the matter.

Jumped Down the Bank to Save Their Lives.

The Norwood Register says; Shortly after six o'clock last Friday evening as the section men employed on the section east of Norwood on the C.P.R., were returning home after their day's work, they had a narrow escape from a serious, if not fatal, accident. They were riding on a hand car and were coming along near the old woollen mill site, when an east-bound freight, coming at a lively pace, hove into view. The hand car was brought to a stand still as quickly as possible—stopping about the middle of the overhead bridge—and the men had just time enough to jump and scramble down the embankment when the engine struck the car and hurled it into the air, smashing it to fragments. The men on the car were Messrs. Jas. Frost, Jas. Ferguson, Eleazer Kelly and Chas. McCarthy.

But the Imperial Oxford isn't just a perfect baker,—it's the easiest range to cook with, because it uses heat sensibly whatever you want the heat to do,—fry, broil, or bake.

Imperial Oxford Range

Its roomy firebox, its easy-to-manage sensitive drafts, hold the heat EVEN,—keep it under your control. And the special Imperial Oxford thermometer tells you always just where the heat is. But you can't really know what a fine set of ideas are built into this range until you come and see it.

Mr. Corby Buys the Old Bank Building.

AND WILL FIT IT UP FOR THE PUBLIC LIBRARY—AN IDEAL LOCATION.

It will greatly interest and gratify our citizens generally to learn that Mr. H Corby has completed a deal with the Merchants' bank by which he becomes the owner of the building on the corner of Pinnacle and Campbell streets, at present occupied by the local branch of the said bank.

We understand that the purchase price was $6000. The building, when erected, cost in the neighborhood of $30,000, and has always been carried on the books of the bank as an asset rated at $25,000.

It is the intention of Mr. Corby, we are told by His Worship the Mayor, to alter the front of the bank and change the interior in up-to-date style. When completed the new public library will not only be a credit to the city, but an enduring monument to the large-heartedness and public spirit of the donor, whose love for and pride in his native city is well known.

The improvements to the building will commence when the bank vacates it on November 1st.

Mayor Sulman, in talking of the matter, expressed great satisfaction with the arrangement. The building, when fitted up, he said, could not be duplicated for less than $20,000 at least.

"What will you do with the site which the city purchased on Campbell St.?" he was asked.

"We did not purchase it," was the reply. "The arrangements for its purchase were all made, but the deal fell through."

Free to You, My Sister

Free to You and Every Sister Woman Suffering from Woman's Ailments

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer from woman's ailments. I want to tell all women about this cure—you, my reader, for yourself, your daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourselves at home without the help of a doctor. Men cannot understand woman's sufferings. What we women know from experience we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhoea or Whitish Discharges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths, also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weaknesses peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete ten days treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial, and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer if you wish, and I will send you the treatment for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book "WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER," with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy. It cures all, old or young.

To mothers of daughters, I will explain a simple home treatment which speedily and effectually cures Leucorrhoea, Green Sickness and painful or irregular menstruation in young ladies. Plumpness and health always result from its use.

Wherever you live, I can refer you to ladies of your own locality, who know and will gladly tell any sufferer that this Home Treatment really cures all women's diseases, and makes women well, strong, plump and robust. Just send me your address, and the free ten days treatment is yours, also the book. Write to-day, as you may not see this offer again. Address

BROWNE KIDNAPPED.

Taken From Canada and Landed in Sing Sing Prison.

New York, July 28.—By a cleverly executed movement Marshal Henkel Thursday morning outwitted the counsel for Charles Browne, former examiner of silks in the customs service, who was extradited from Canada by William J. Flynn, New York agent of the United States Secret Service, and landed in Sing Sing without bringing him to this city.

Casgrain's Protest.

T. Chase Casgrain, K. C., who was counsel for Charles G. Browne, recently surrendered to the United States authorities on extradition proceedings, charges that, in taking Browne off the train and placing him in Sing Sing Prison, instead of taking him to New York for trial on the charge under which he was extradited, constitutes a violation of the letter and spirit of the extradition treaty, as well as a breach of faith. Mr. Casgrain has written a letter to the Secretary of State at Ottawa, setting forth the facts of the case, and he asserts that the matter will not be allowed to rest until satisfaction has been got.

Dowie Does Not Own Zion City.

Chicago, July 28.—John C. Hately was yesterday appointed receiver of Zion. His bonds were placed at $25,000. The adjudication in the bankruptcy proceedings against Dowie was set aside. Judge Landis of the United States District Court, decided yesterday that John Alexander Dowie does not own Zion City and its industries. He refused to appoint Alexander Granger as receiver, and ordered an election for a general overseer.

Harmsworth a Firefighter.

Halifax, N. S., July 28.—A despatch from Newfoundland says a fire occurred at Grand Falls, involving a loss to the Harmsworth Pulp Mills, just being erected, of over $30,000. The fire is a decided setback to initial operations. Lord Northcliffe, Sir Alfred Harmsworth, was present during the progress of the fire, and worked with a will to check its progress.

HAMLIN GARLAND

COPYRIGHT, 1903, BY HAMLIN GARLAND

"Oh, no!" cried Ann. "They wouldn't do that. They daren't do that."

"That's what they've done," he bitterly assured her. Then a thought entered his mind which staggered him. "The men—the men were in the mine!" he shouted and rushed into the darkness.

Ann heard his blows upon the door of the other cabin as he called: "Boys, roll out! The power house is blown up! The men are in the mine! Quick, out with you! Buckle your guns!"

Then the girl recognized Kelly's great voice. He was calling as he ran, "Rob, are ye there?"

"Yes; I'm rousing the boys."

"It's the shaft house."

"It looks that way."

"And the men, lad; the men!"

"I don't know, Matt. I've just got on my feet."

So much Ann heard before the sound of their feet died away down the path. The sleepers in the bunk house began to rumble and clatter about on the bare floors. One by one they emerged, slamming the door behind them.

Once outside the door the women could see the flames growing each moment in power, licking with avid tongues at the confused mass of splintered beams, and on the curtain of red light the forms of Kelly and Raymond played in silhouette as they strove furiously against the destroyer. Their workmen soon joined them, and each moment some hastening rescuer hurtled past the open door and as he ran cursed in bitter frenzy.

"Ann!" called Louis from the bed. Faint as it was, the girl heard his cry and hurried to his side.

"Yes, I'm here, laddie. What do you want? How do you feel?"

"My head aches so. I can't breathe good. He moaned. "Oh, dear, I'm so hot." The voice of his anguish stung Ann to the soul. With a sign to Nora, commanding silence, she closed the door in the hope that no sound from the burning mine would penetrate to the bedside.

Nora hurried back to her cabin, while Braide dropped some helpful drug upon the boy's tongue. When his patient had grown quiet the young physician said: "If you are not afraid, I will go down. Some one may be hurt and my help required."

"Go. I am not afraid," she commanded. "Only remember your first duty is here."

"I do not forget that," he answered. But even as he was collecting his outer clothing and his medicines Raymond flung the door open and entered. His hands were blackened and bleeding, his head was bare, and on his face was a look that thrilled the girl. "Doctor, three wounded men are coming up the hill. They must be made comfortable. Ann, you would better go back to Kelly's. These victims must be sheltered here, and they are not pleasant to see."

Ann felt herself diminishing in power and importance as he spoke. His voice came from the man's world—harsh, inflexible—but she uttered a protest—"Louis!"

His face softened and his hand went to his brow. "I forgot; you are right; we must not endanger him. I will have the men taken to the other cabin."

"Are the men in the mine all dead?"

"We can't tell. The engineer and some of the men on the dump were warned and escaped. The rest are below and out of our reach. We are working desperately to subdue the flames, but we are almost helpless for lack of water."

"It is horrible!"

His voice was very quiet as he said, "Munro shall answer for this!"

"Did he do it?"

"He did not prevent it!" He lifted his eyes to the sky. "It will soon be light, and then we can see to work."

He turned to leave without further explanation, but Ann called to him, "Send us word when you can, won't you?"

"As soon as we know the men are alive I will come and tell you," he promised.

As she watched and waited the day came leisurely, laggardly, over the hills and swarms of excited men and slattern women poured from their shacks and tents and holes in the rocks to acquire in detail the news of this midnight assault on the leaders of the independents. To do them justice, even the most virulent unionists were for the moment moved to sympathetic denunciation. The destruction of property was one thing, the murder of workmen quite another. As for the crews of the nonpartisans, they were ready at the word of a leader to search out and lynch those who laid the train and fired the fuse, but to all of these Raymond gave the same word of command, "Save the men below."

On the heels of this tumult, as if to pile Pelion on Ossa, messengers came shouting through the sunrise: "The deputies have come! The sheriff's army is camped on the park!"

Instantly the throng of idle sightseers swept back toward the town, leaving not so much as a word of well wishing to stand in their places. The ruin of the Kelly mine became a small thing to them, now that the real battle was on.

"Where is Jack Munro?" timorous people asked. "Where are the vedettes?" No one seemed to know, and the officers of the union were in a panic.

The sheriff had, indeed, stolen a march on Skytown and was only waiting for daylight to discover his enemy. This was his capital mistake. Had he pushed against the enemy at that moment, with Munro and his men still on a wild goose chase down the opposite canyon, he might have won the hill in a bloodless charge, but even as he dallied the vedettes came toiling up the trail from the south, weary, but full of fight, and lined out on the northern slope with the fort at their backs. And so at last the two forces of disorder—of passion and prejudice—were set face to face. Battle was now inevitable.

CHAPTER XXV.

At sunrise Raymond reported to Ann, his face a little softened. "The dynamiter Baker shot has died, but our men are going to live, the doctor says."

"I am very glad to hear that. What of those in the mine? Are they released?"

"No, but the fire is out, and we have cleared the mouth of the shaft. The first level is blocked with rocks and beams. The murderers must have lowered a bomb into the mine with deliberate intent to kill."

"It is horrible to think of them down there in the dark. Did you hear that the sheriff had arrived?"

His eyes darkened. "Yes, the fool! Why didn't he attack at once? Now Munro is intrenched, and they are challenging each other like crowds of schoolboys. The time has come for the governor to take a hand."

"Will he do so?"

"He must or be party to the bloodiest battle ever seen in the mountains. But I must go back," he said and turned away abruptly, leaving the girl with a keen sense of the stress and bigness of his life.

He was indeed badly needed at the mine, for only the men of the second shift and a few of the crews of Reese & Earle remained to help. Each independent mine was held to be in equal danger and to require the services of its most resolute men, and, besides, the certainty of a battle had drawn away the more excitable even of their own men. Kelly was working like a Titan, and his presence, his concentration of effort, inspired every man to his best.

A messenger from Carter met Raymond to assure him that the union had no hand in the outrage, and the young miner sternly answered, "As soon as I have rescued my men I will demand that the officers of the union have something to do with finding the hyenas that did do it."

They tore at the rocks and beams.

Munro sent a letter by Frank Brown wherein he said, "I can't leave here—the attack may begin at any moment—but I am on the trail, and when I discover the scoundrels I will deliver them to justice."

To this messenger Raymond said: "Tell Jack I want to see him at the earliest moment. This is not a matter for long range adjustment. I want to talk with him."

Brown, with true cowboy unconcern, grinned and said: "Well, you see, Rob, Jack's busy just now. They's a

Some Impressions Of A Belleville Delegate.

COL. PONTON WRITES OF THINGS AS HE SAW THEM AT THE SIXTH CONGRESS OF THE CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE.

The following interesting article was contributed by Col. Ponton, of this city, to a leading Canadian paper;

London, July 10.—The Congress of the "Ambassadors of Trade" has begun. Indeed it commenced when weeks ago the various Boards of Trade in India, Australasia, South Africa and Canada drafted their resolutions to be submitted at the meeting, and to be considered with the other agenda prepared gave British brethren in the home land, for the confluence of thought, the union and assimilation of ideas, the recognition of the various points of view, are some of the objects and will be the results of the gathering. The good ship Empress of Britain had on board a large contingent of those delegates whom Canadian cities chose as their representative men to reflect truly Canadian sentiment, and to further the process of mutual and national education which is so large a factor in dispelling misunderstandings, and thereby cementing unity through that knowledge which is power — Tout connaitre c'est tout pardonarer. All the passengers were unanimous in their appreciation of the comfort and steady staunchness of the Canadian Pacific Railway's latest contribution to the Empire's girdling of the globe. Courtesy, airiness and completeness in detail characterized the Empress. A quartette of young Montreal advocates kept smoking room and deck jolly with speech and story. No less than four gentlemen knighted for good service rendered, headed by the veteran, Sir Sandford Fleming, lent the dignity of their title to the passenger list, while three members of the Canadian House of Commons anticipating an early adjournment, shared their statesmanship and staterooms with us. Many good suggestions to be used at the Congress were exchanged, and at least Sir Sandford left no opportunity unused to convince and convert those who previously had not realized the importance of his all red cable proportion as the "Intelligence Department of the Empire."

During the week that followed arrival the delegates have not been idle—nearly all attended the great Dominion Day dinner, where Lord Strathcona and the Earl of Derby shared their early experiences with us, and where we listened to a speech from the Bishop of Ripon, worthy of the old literary traditions of this "land of scholars and nurse of arms." The Earl of Elgin was happy in allusion to his birthright as a fellow-Canadian, and forcibly spoke of the correlative duty to the flag which we Canadians owed, and would always gladly live up to, in exchange for the greatest autonomy that history had ever recorded. Sir Charles Tupper received a glorious welcome on the occasion of his birthday, and Mr. Belcourt, M. P., made an excellent impression with his grace of diction and feeling of thought. Through the kindness of Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., and Hamar Greenwood, M. P., both of whom have many responsible parliamentary duties to perform (Sir Gilbert speaking often and well out of London as well as in the House)—many of the delegates have had the good luck to hear some of the interesting discussions on the Education bill and on Egyptian and foreign affairs. The study of the personality, the style, the matter of those who now constitute the Mother of Parliaments is in itself most fascinating to those whose previous knowledge was gained only through the columns of the Star. There is nothing like the personal touch in this as in business matters, and, indeed, in this great imperial city, with its millions, with its world-influencing issues, there is much that must appeal to "both business and bosoms." London appears to us to be the healthiest, cleanest, strongest, most strenuous city that heart could conceive, and Canadians whose pulses beat firm and true, find that the heart of the Empire calls for and justifies a worthy and vivid response.

Apart from private hospitality and invariable courtesy, the first of a series of functions, social and elevating, was given by Lord Brassey on Saturday, and at his spacious residence we had the privilege of inspecting treasures and curios from the Southern Cross to the Arctic, all gathered by the indefatigable yacht Sunbeam, whose home has been on every deep. On Sunday special reserved seats were provided at both Westminster Abbey (that temple of peace and reconciliation), and at St. Paul's Cathedral,

> "Under the cross of gold
> That shines over city and river.'

Touching references were made to the railway tragedy of the previous Sunday which thrilled all England with sympathetic pain, and brought grief to so many homes and friends in our western world. A special memorial service is to be held in St. Paul's on Tuesday morning. The music at this grand Cathedral is admitted by all European cities to be the finest in the world, and peals through aisle and fretted vault with a solemnity and inspiration irresistible.

To-day (July 9) the Canadian delegates met, under the chairmanship of Mr George E. Drummond, of Montreal, and cleared the decks for action, uniting in the support of certain resolutions, some of which will be strongly composite, embodying the good points of many motions. The most harmonious spirit prevailed, and Canadians will endeavor to speak imperially and avoid mere provincial issues and predelictions.

This afternoon the British Empire League held their annual meeting in the spacious salon of the Mansion House, under the chairmanship of the Lord Mayor, who has large Canadian private interests. Excellent speeches were given by Sir William Holland, Lieut.-Col. Denison, of Toronto, and others, all in different ways, breathing but one spirit, permanent unity, expansion of commerce, assimilation of aims. Nearly one-half of the large audience were ladies, and that is a characteristic of these isles. They do not allow the public spirit to be monopolized by mere men, and they are most keen and well informed on all national and international questions.

The splendidly equipped volunteer regiment undergoing annual inspection on Saturday were a striking feature of London life. One regiment with attached corps complete, 1500 strong, would have gladdened the hearts of loyal Canadian militiamen, while the guard mounting at Buckingham Palace and at Whitehall is a thing of beauty and a joy forever. But strength, thoroughness, readiness, are all apparent. Whether trade follows the flag, or whether the flag follows trade, is not important. Whether it is the royal standard that floats proudly over Edward VII.—monarch, ambassador and peacemaker—or the little Union Jack on the frontier line which flies in the beams of a ceaseless morning, it is all one—"One life, one flag, one fleet, one throne, Britons hold your own—and God guard all."

SHATTERED NERVES.

MADE STRONG AND STEADY BY DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

When your nerves are out of order your whole health is on the verge of a break-down. Sudden sounds startle you your muscles twitch and your hands tremble; your self-control is shattered; your will-power gone. Your head aches, your feet are often cold and your face flushed. Your heart jumps and thumps at the least excitement; you are restless at night and tired when you wake. Your temper is irritable and you feel utterly down-hearted. And the whole trouble is because your blood is too thin and watery to keep the nerves strong. There is only one way to have strong, healthy nerves — feed them with the rich, red blood that only Dr. Williams' Pink Pills can make — and do make. Mr. Fred Forth 17 Sullivan street, Toronto, says: "I was a complete wreck with nervous prostration, but Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have made a new man of me. I had been nervous for years the least noise would startle me, and the least exertion would leave me utterly prostrated. I lost in weight, and physically I was almost a wreck. I had not taken the pills long when I found they were helping me; my appetite improved, my nerves began to grow steady, and day by day I gained until I was again a well men. My weight increased twenty-five pounds while I was using the pills. To any who suffer as I did, I can say that if Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are given a fair trial, a cure will be sure to follow."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills restored Mr. Forth, simply because they made the rich, pure blood which properly nourishes the nerves and keeps them strong. They will cure all the diseases due to bad blood and shattered nerves, such as anaemia, indigestion, headaches and backaches, rheumatism, lumbago, St. Vitus' dance, paralysis, general weakness and the secret ailments of growing girls and women. But you must always insist on getting the genuine pills with the full name Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People on the wrapper around each box. Sold by medicine dealers or sent direct by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams Medicine Co. Brockville, Ont.

A Moving Picture.

Peterboro Review: Last night there was an incident which would be worth hundreds to the moving picture man. It happened at the end of the street car-line just off the wharf. A young man was sitting on the river bank in deep thought when a vision of loveliness floated down to the wharf. With a start he awoke, rubbed his eyes and looked hard at the fair young thing until he finally convinced himself that it was she. Leisurely he pulled himself together and joined the young lady. A few minutes consultation followed and he was heard to say;

"You're game to go if I get a canoe?"

"You bet I'm game. I would just love to. It's an elegant evening."

There was no time to be lost and with a throbbing pulse the swain hurried to Rye's boat house and rented a canoe with several cushions in it. He paddled back to the railway wharf, where he pulled in close and held onto the planks. As every one knows, who has been there, the wharf is several inches above the top of the canoe.

"Can you get in from there?"

"Certainly I can get in. You just watch me," and the damsel gracefully gathered her skirts together and lifted them slightly, showing a few inches of a pretty open work stocking. She stepped forward, planting one number two and a half in the centre of the canoe. Up to this time the young fellow was quite composed and held the canoe tight, but he suddenly lost control of his nerves and the boat wabbled. When her ladyship lifted the other foot down from the wharf it did not land in the centre of the boat, but went over the side into the river. There was a faint cry, splash and splutter. For a brief second all was quiet Then a white chiffon hat and an all-over lace shirt-waist popped up out of the water. The young man made a grab for the object and at the same time the object made a grab for him. As he was leaning over the young lady's arms encircled his neck and like a flash he turned a somersault in mid-air and dropped into the water. There was another cry and a splash and a single d—— and all was quiet. In another second there were two wet figures looking at each other standing in the water and then they laughed together. They made their way to the wharf and climbed up, where they wrung out their clothes.

After a while he said, "Are you still game if I get another carpet and some more cushions."

She said; "I might as well be. I can't get any wetter than I am."

So off he went and in a minute or two returned with a fresh outfit. This time he pulled the canoe into shore and they got off to a good start.

Thinks York Loan May Pay In Full.

Toronto, July 27.—"I wouldn't be surprised if the York Loan paid its shareholders one hundred cents on the dollar."

This was the statement made this morning by a lawyer who is well acquainted with the work of the liquidators, and the situation of the estate at present.

Up to date the holders of 115,000 shares have been heard from. The Grand Trunk Railway, which was supposed to have one of the largest lists of shareholders in the world, has one-third less than that number. The work of assorting the York Loan pass-books, and proving the ownership of shares will not be completed till after Christmas.

The liquidators anticipate that the new railway line up Roncesvalles avenue will have the effect of materially increasing the value of the property. Already there have been many applications to purchase lots. The houses are nearly all sold.

APPEALS TO COLONIES

To Help Save Great Britain's Great Stake in South Africa.

Transvaal Progressive Delegates, Now in England, Make Known Their Views Concerning Its Government—May Secure to the Crown New Possession by Putting Control In Hands of British Men.

London, July 28.—(C. A. P.)—The Transvaal Progressive delegates, now in England, have issued an appeal to their fellow-colonists in other British colonies.

The appeal asserts that this is a critical moment in the history of South Africa—perhaps the most critical in her history. South Africa, as well as Great Britain, is concerned. They have suffered a great loss of money and human life, and disturbance of trade industry, and commerce consequent upon the long war.

What Britain Has at Stake.

Great Britain has more at stake now in the sub-continent than in the whole course of her past history, and much more than at such a critical period as the restoration of the Transvaal in 1881. Then we had not the territory from the Zambesi to Table Bay. The Orange Free State was an independent republic. Our interests are more uncertain to-day.

Any peril to the permanance of British institutions in South Africa means the dismemberment of the Empire. If through mistaken magnanimity on the part of the British Government the Transvaal should have Dutch administration and the Orange River Colony be given practical independence, for there would not be five British representatives in the Legislature of the Orange River Colony. The future of the flag and of all that British civilization means would be the merest gamble.

Interest of the Colonies.

Every colony in the Empire must be awaiting with intense anxiety the announcement of the Prime Minister next Tuesday in the House of Commons on the details of the new constitution for responsible Government to be given to the Transvaal. There is reason to fear that the safeguards which the Government will include in the constitution may not be sufficient to prevent the first representative and responsible administration in a country lately won by the sword from being controlled by the same Ministers who acted for Kruger in one of the most reactionary administrations in modern times, and who denied equal rights to all white men.

It is impossible to believe that any colony in the Empire would not insist, so far as their influence by an appeal may have on the British Government, on making absolutely secure to the Crown our new colonies by putting the administration in the hands of British men. The voice of the colonists now, even more than during the war, can assist to bring about a decision on the part of this Government in keeping with such past Liberal traditions as were included in Lord Durham's report, which, while it established equal rights, demanded British Government.

Balfour's Self-Abnegation.

Introducing his remarks on the South African question at Albert Hall last night ex-Premier Balfour said the Conservative party would rather forego office for a generation than say anything to retard the progress and safety of the Dominion beyond the seas. It would ill-deserve the name of the imperial party if this were not so, but he saw only danger in the course of the Government.

Short Paragraphs Which Contain Meaty Wire News.

While bathing in the St. Francis River at Richmond, Que., Miss Fredele Collier of Montreal, 17 years of age, was drowned.

The man who was found dying on a pile of bricks in Detroit on Thursday, and who died in the ambulance, has been identified as Joseph Melieau of Valleyfield, Que.

A severe electric storm, accompanied by a heavy fall of hail passed over Florence about 5 o'clock Friday afternoon. Much damage was done to oats and corn, and the barn of Jarvis Paul was burned.

BOMB THROWN IN NEW YORK.

Six Men Were Injured by Fragments From the Explosion.

New York, July 28.—Six men were injured last night by the explosion at 16th street and Third avenue, of a bomb, believed to have been thrown from an elevated railroad train.

The explosion occurred in a group of about a hundred plumbers who were standing in front of Teutonia Hall, waiting for a meeting to begin.

All the injured, who sustained cuts and bruises from fragments of the bomb, were taken to Bellevue Hospital.

Land Drifts Into Lake.

Sheboygan, Wis., July 28.—The mysterious disappearance of 37 acres of the shore of Long Lake, in Fond Du Lac County, was cleared Thursday by the discovery that the tract had broken loose and drifted into the lake as a floating bog.

Arctic Sails.

SHOWS HER SINCERITY.

Britain Reduces Her Naval Construction and Awaits Action of Coming Hague Conference.

London, July 28.—The agitation against the naval construction program has proved successful, and Edmund Robertson, parliamentary secretary of the admiralty, announced in the House of Commons yesterday that only three new battleships of the Dreadnaught class would be laid down, instead of four, as originally proposed. Two ocean-going torpedo-boat destroyers will be built, instead of five, and eight submarine boats instead of twelve. The total of the expenditure involved by the new program was $34,000,000 instead of $46,000,000.

Mr. Robertson added, however, that instead of the usual four armored ships, only two would be commenced, with the proviso that if the coming Hague conference should prove abortive, three would be laid down. In the estimates for 1907-1908, only a small sum would be included for new armored vessels, so these could not be commenced until late in the year. This would emphasize at The Hague conference the good intent of the British Government, and its desire to bring about a reduction of armaments.

The board of admiralty was unanimously satisfied that these reductions could be made without affecting the naval supremacy of Great Britain.

A HUNDRED MILLION BUSHELS.

Premier Roblin Says Manitoba Will Have Record-Breaking Crop.

Winnipeg, July 28.—In an interview with Premier Roblin, the head of the Agricultural Department of the province, he calculates that the crop will be harvested fully ten days earlier than last year.

"From information gathered by my department," he said, "Manitoba will harvest the best crop in her history, and it will tax the transportation companies beyond anything in the past. If Alberta and Saskatchewan have anything approaching what those in authority report, there will be over a hundred million bushels for export, more in fact than transportation companies will be able to handle in twelve months."

Mr. Roblin said the rust rumor was the veriest nonsense, as the closest enquiry failed to verify it.

NEW U. S. LAWS.

Stringent Regulation For Inspection of Meat In the Republic.

Washington, D. C., July 28.—Secretary Wilson yesterday made public the regulations under the new law governing the inspection of meat products for interstate and foreign trade. They do not, however, cover the subject of interstate transportation of meat, or the microscopic inspection of pork for export. Regulations on these subjects, it was stated, will be issued later.

The regulations issued yesterday are stringent throughout, and are in line with the best authorities on the subjects of sanitation, preservatives, dyes, chemicals and condemnation of diseased carcases.

The general regulations provide that the scope of the inspection shall be most rigid and searching.

WIDOW GETS THE MILLIONS.

A Few Small Bequests In Sage's Will—Nothing to Charity.

New York, July 28.—Except for a few small bequests the fortune of Russell Sage is left to the widow. There is no charitable bequest in the will.

Each of Mr. Sage's nephews and nieces is left $25,000.

There is also a bequest of $10,000 to Mr. Sage's sister, Mrs. Chapin, now deceased.

The section bequeathing the bulk of the estate to Mrs. Sage reads that she is "to have and to hold the same absolutely and forever."

While there was nothing in the will to show the value of Mr. Sage's estate, attorneys for Mrs. Sage estimate it at between $70,000,000 and $80,000,000, of which amount about $30,000,000 is outstanding in loans.

The old lady says she had walked the whole distance from Flint to this city, and intended to continue the journey to her destination in the same manner, a total distance of 130 miles. She intends to take up her home at Delaware and has not the money to pay railroad fare.

Summoned the Whitecaps.

Kingston, July 28.—Thursday night matters looked threatening for the whitecaps who recently doused a wife-beater named Patterson in the lake, for he complained to the authorities, and the cappers were summoned to court. They appeared yesterday morning, quite a company of respectable persons, but as Patterson was not on hand to prosecute, the cases were dismissed.

Rout of the Pretender.

London, July 28.—(C. A. P.)—A despatch to a news agency from Tangier, Morocco, says that a serious, all day long engagement has occurred near Muluya, and that the pretender's forces were completely routed, with heavy loss by the Sultan's troops, who afterwards paraded the district with rebels' heads stuck on their bayonets, as trophies of the victory.

COLT KILLS BROTHERS

Norman and Neil McLeod Die by Lightning Stroke.

They Sought Shelter In a Carriage Shed With a Younger Brother From Severe Electrical Storm—Young Boy Was Stunned For a Moment, But Recovering Found His Brothers Dead—Impaled on a Sharp Stake.

Cornwall, July 28.—A terrible double fatality resulted from a severe electric storm which passed over the eastern part of Kenyon Township. Norman and Neil McLeod, sons of Neil McLeod, township councillor, were killed outright and a third was stunned by the electric current. The three boys had sought shelter from the storm in a carriage shed which was struck by lightning. The younger lad was stunned for a moment, but, quickly recovering himself, he hastened into the wagon, where one brother was found to be quite dead, while the other, after giving some slight sign of consciousness, soon expired.

Impaled On Sharp Stroke.

Fred Suffel of Suffel's Station met with a terrible accident the other day. He was on a load of hay pitching it off, and when about half done slid down the rear end. He was caught on the sharp point of one of the stakes, on which he was impaled until assisted off. He received terrible injuries, from which it was at first thought he could not live, but he is now in a fair way to recovery.

Jack Campbell, foreman for Wm. Birmingham on his construction work at Morrisburg, while giving signals to the engineer, the derrick box caught the corner of a large stick of timber, throwing it against his leg and breaking the bone just above the ankle.

Jumps Overboard.

Port Arthur, July 28.—An unknown man committed suicide by jumping overboard from the steamer Saronic yesterday afternoon. The man, whose name in unknown, boarded the steamer at the Soo. When only a short distance from the Soo he showed signs of being demented. Yesterday morning, when the steamer was midway in Lake Superior, the rash deed was committed. He was sitting quietly in the cabin, reading the Bible, and without a moment's warning he made the leap, and before the watchers could interfere he had made his way out of the cabin and jumped into the lake.

Lost With All Hands.

London, July 28.—The steamer Campania, arriving at Queenstown, brought news of the total loss of the schooner Stanley Jersep of Nova Scotia off Newfoundland. She was struck by lightning, dismasted and battered to pieces on the rocks. The crew of sixteen were all lost.

Crushed Between Cars.

St. Thomas, July 28.—Two section men working at the new M.C.R. track at Springfield were seriously injured last evening. A train broke in two and the two men attempted to rush through the opening and were caught by the cars. John Rock's hip was frightfully torn and a large hole laid open exposing the joint. His right foot was was also injured, and his condition is critical. Jerome Rock is suffering from a crushed arm. Both men are Italians and cannot speak a word of English.

Drowns In Muskoka.

Beaumaris, Muskoka, July 28.—Mrs. H. K. Smith of Brantford was drowned at Keewayden Island Thursday afternoon while bathing. She floated on the slog a few feet over her depth, and on trying to regain the shore was drowned. Mrs. Smith leaves a husband and five small children. The remains were taken to Brantford for burial yesterday morning.

Thirty Hurt In Wreck.

Springfield, Mo., July 28.—Thirty persons were injured, two of them fatally, in the partial wreck of a westbound St. Louis and San Francisco passenger train Thursday night.

SAYS HE IS SANE.

Duclos Escaped From Asylum, Pleads Justification For Shooting.

Montreal, July 28.—Alexander Duclos, wanted on a charge of shooting Alphonse Desrosiers, and who escaped from Longue Pointe Asylum, is at the home of friend within a mile of the city. He gave out the following statement yesterday:

"I am quite sane and am staying at the home of a friend. I shall here prepare my case for the jury and will prove that whatever I did I was justified in doing. At the preliminary enquiry I had not what I considered justice, and I feel I must have absolute freedom to prepare my case. When the September term of the court of King's Bench opens I shall surrender myself and stand prepared for trial. Meanwhile no one can find me."

PRESENTATION OF PLATE.

Lord Strathcona Officiates at a Ceremony at Portsmouth.

London, July 28.—(C.A.P.)—About 50 Canadians went to Portsmouth yesterday to witness the presentation of a silver centre piece to the battleship Dominion. Lord Strathcona delivered a short address, and his daughter, Mrs. Howard, made the presentation. Afterwards the guests were entertained by the captain and shown over the ship.

Bristol and Canada.

Over forty colonial visitors to the congress went to Bristol to be entertained last night and to-day. Referring to the visit to Bristol The Daily Press says the fortunes of Canada and Bristol have been linked ever since the colony took its place as a British possession. The visitors will traverse the very town from which the Cabots sailed over four hundred years ago on their way, to discover Newfoundland. Now steam and cable have practically annihilated the distance from Bristol to the St. Lawrence. In the development of Canada Bristol takes the deepest possible interest, because it is sure to share in the traffic.

Too Good to Last.

At a meeting of Parr's Bank, C. N. Parr, chairman of the directors, said the name of Canada was a synonym for prosperity. He was afraid it might go too fast and suffer the inevitable punishment of reaction.

WHAT Fruit-a-tives OR "FRUIT LIVER TABLETS" ARE

Fruit-a-tives are the marvels of modern medicine. They have accomplished more actual cures—done more good to more people—than any other medicine ever introduced in Canada for the time they have been on sale.

Fruit-a-tives are fruit juices. They are nature's cure for —CONSTIPATION

—BILIOUSNESS
—BAD STOMACH
—DYSPEPSIA
—HEADACHES
—IMPURE BLOOD
—SKIN DISEASES
—KIDNEY TROUBLE
—RHEUMATISM
—IRRITATED HEART

Fruit-a-tives are the juices of apples, oranges, figs and prunes. These juices are concentrated—and by a secret process, the juices are combined in a peculiar manner. This new combination is much more active medicinally than fresh juices—yet so perfect is the union that Fruit-a-tives act on the system as if they were in truth a natural fruit, medicinally stronger than any other known fruit.

To this combination of fruit juices, tonics and internal antiseptics are added, and the whole made into tablets.

These are Fruit-a-tives—sold everywhere for 50c a box or 6 boxes for $2.50.

STROUDS

Drowns at St. John.

St. John, N. B., July 30.—Willie Campbell, little son of John Campbell, was drowned here yesterday afternoon. He went in swimming alone and probably took cramps. His clothes were found two hours later.

Hurt in Runaway.

St. Mary's, July 30.—In a runaway accident here Saturday morning, Mrs. Steele of Redwood Falls, Minn., was probably fatally injured, and her husband and John Oliver of Downey, were not seriously injured. A bolt in the whiffletree snapped, and the horse started on a hard run down the hill, at the curve of which they were thrown out. Mrs. Steele's shoulder was broken, she was badly cut and internally injured.

Drowned at the Soo.

Hamilton, July 30.—The remains of Francis McMillan, the 6-year-old son of John McMillan, who was drowned at Sault Ste. Marie, arrived here yesterday.

One Killed, 60 Injured.

Los Angeles, Calif., July 30.—A local Southern Pacific passenger train Saturday ran into a Sierra Madre electric car of the Pacific electric road at Onenta station crossing near Pasadena, killing a Mexican woman and injuring sixty persons, several probably fatally.

Steamer Valentine Sinks.

Cheboygan, Mich., July 30.—Miss Emma Schmidt, aged 23, daughter of Frederick Schmidt, a wealthy resident of Ann Arbor, was drowned Saturday when the steamer Valentine, with 40 passengers, went down in the Cheboygan River, after striking a dead head which pierced her hull. The others were all rescued by the tug Merchant.

Two Girls Drown.

Morristown, N. J., July 30.—Laura B. Bozarth, of Mount Holly, and Susie Stiltz of Smythville were drowned in Rancocas Lake last night by the upsetting of a row boat.

Bolt Kills Two Drivers.

Cleveland, O., July 30.—During a severe rain and electrical storm, which swept over this city Saturday afternoon, two people were killed. Both men were driving teams.

Ashore At Three Rivers.

Montreal, July 30.—The McLean Kennedy Liner, the Nyassa, Capt. Baker, which sailed yesterday for Three Rivers, to complete loading timber for Britain, went ashore at Vercheres, 21 miles below Montreal. She will be lightered and likely pulled off.

Pickpockets in Cornwall.

Cornwall, July 30.—Some $300 or so of Cornwall money was carried away by pickpockets during the lacrosse match here on Saturday. Several losses had been reported to the police, but the first clue to the guilty parties was furnished by Special Constable Wm. Hollister, whose purse was taken from his pocket, while on his way to the O. & N. Y. depot. Hollister arrested a man who gave the name of Quinn of Albany, N. Y., and says that he is on a holiday jaunt, calling on Montreal. Only $35 was found on him.

Every day is a new life, every sunrise but a new birth.—Jordon.

A Car Runs Past Switch.

Bad Collision on the Mimico Line on Saturday.

Fifteen People Injured, But Only One Of Them Seriously Hurt—Car Was Going Down Declevity Where Tracks Curve Sharply When Accident Occurred--An Investigation Will be Held.

Toronto, July 30.—A head-on collision between two electric cars, a heavy Port Credit car and a Mimico local, on the Toronto York Radial Railway, occurred at a switch one mile and a half east of the Mimico Asylum, near New Toronto, at 6.30 Saturday morning. Fifteen persons were hurt, only one, however, thought to be very serious.

The Injured.

W. Simpson, 312 West Queen street, knee badly crushed and otherwise shaken up.

James Grey, Long Branch, back and side hurt.

George Reed, New Toronto, back hurt.

J. Dunleavy, Church street, Toronto, bruised and shaken up.

John Nell, Sixth street, New Toronto, bruised.

John Leedham, New Toronto, bruised.

Robt. Elkin, Mimico Asylum, steward, back and leg hurt.

S. M. Griffin, Long Branch, bruised.

Walter Parker, Fifth avenue, New Toronto, leg hurt.

Henry Misner, Church street, bruised and shaken up.

Walter McDonald, Sixth street, New Toronto, leg injured.

Archie Leslie, motorman, Port Credit car No. 54, shaken up.

Geo. T. Humphrey, 144 Gladstone avenue, conductor car No. 54, arm hurt.

Harry McGraph, motorman, No. 1 car, knee and arms bruised.

Archie McIntyre, conductor No. 1 car, both hands hurt.

Ran Past the Switch.

The accident was due to the Port Credit car running past a switch where it should have met the Mimico local. The tracks at this point curve sharply on a decided declivity, and cars approaching from opposite directions are hidden from each other's view until almost on each other.

Motorman Leslie of the Port Credit car disobeyed orders in passing the switch before the arrival of the Mimico car, it is said, and thereby precipitated the collision. An investigation will be held.

Two Conductors Killed.

Montreal, July 30.—Two street railway conductors, N. Hudson and St. Germain were thrown from their respective cars yesterday, in opposite ends of the city, and killed. The men were both collecting fares, one in West Notre Dame street, and the other near the St. Denis street Subway.

MUSKOKA EXPRESS WRECKED.

Fireman Pinned Under Wreck and Burned to Death.

Toronto, July 30.—Three cars of live stock broke from engine on the Grand Trunk at Mimico after midnight this morning and ran down the grade, colliding head-on with the Muskoka express for Buffalo.

The Mogul of the express train of the Muskoka express was completely demolished.

Fireman Dennis Campbell was pinned under the wreck. The fire which followed the wreck became so fierce that it was impossible to rescue Campbell, and he was burned to death.

Engineer D. Lynch jumped and his leg was broken. He was taken to St. Michael's Hospital.

There were 50 passengers on the train, but none was injured.

The runaway cars and their contents were consumed in the fire.

Struck Toronto Church.

Toronto, July 30.—During the worst of Sunday's storm lightning struck St. Stephen's Church, wrecking the belfry and boring a hole through the roof. George Garrett of Clinton street, a Sunday school teacher, was just preparing to leave the church when the stroke came. His arms were full of books at the time. The shock scattered the books and knocked Mr. Garrett down. He was taken to a neighboring house and soon recovered, but complained of severe pains in one side. Mr. Harmon, Sunday school librarian, was also quite severely shocked. Fortunately the Sunday school scholars had left.

Motor Boat and Skiff Collide.

Toronto, July 30.—Saturday afternoon the Iris, H. Dodd's 18-foot motor boat, was racing nose to nose with the Viper and Yulisse, trying to make the buoy in the Toronto Gasoline Co.'s race. The Acushia, a 16-foot skiff of the Queen City Yacht Club fleet was coming strong for the buoy, too, in a skiff race and running at right angles with the Iris, which climbed up on to her bows. Mr. Dodd, on the Iris, to avoid the impact tried to shove the boat off, but the force of the collision threw him back into his engine and he was badly cut up about the head. Medical attendance was got at the Argonaut Club and the injured man was then sent to the hospital. He also suffers from shock.

Killed at Niagara Falls.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., July 30.—Samuel Weil, superintendent of the Electrical Light Reduction Co. of Niagara Falls, while working about the switchboard of the works Saturday, came in contact with a live wire and received 2,200 volts of electricity, which caused his death. He was 35 years old, and leaves a wife and four brothers.

Postmaster Drowns.

Ottawa, July 30.—Isaac Daoust, aged 35 years, postmaster at Totreauville, a suburb of Hull, was drowned at noon yesterday, while in bathing in the Ottawa River at Pine Point. He was not much of a swimmer and it is thought that having got out of his depth his heart failed.

Two Yachts Capsize.

Angelsea, N. J., July 30.—Two yachts coming in from the fishing banks capsized on Hertford Inlet bar off here yesterday, and so far as could be ascertained last night, eight persons lost their lives.

Slaughtered by Trolley Car.

Hamilton, July 30.—Edward Woods, a farmer whose home is near Winona was killed by a Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric car Saturday afternoon. He drove out of a lane right in front of the car which crashed into the rig throwing him out with such force that he was killed almost instantly.

Lightning Strikes Lighthouse.

Port Hope, July 30.—At 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon Gull lighthouse was struck by lightning and several of a party of sixteen young men from Port Hope, bound for Cobourg, in McMahon's gasoline launch, who sought shelter in the building, were injured.

The party comprised S. Welch, W. Welch, J. Bradley, C. Brimicomb, A. McIlroy, H. Jordan, C. McMahon, H. Holdaway, W. Mercer, W. Thomas, G. Lavery, N. Johnston, J. Baggs, L. Boney, R. McMahon, J. Sinnott and Mr. Layman.

Imperial Army Reform.

While Lord Roberts was insisting in the House of Lords that there should be created, in addition to the regular army, a reserve of half a million men, available for immediate mobilization, Mr. Haldane was, in behalf of the Government, announcing a policy of retrenchment in the House of Commons. A reduced force, greater efficiency and less cost are the objects sought to be attained by the new proposals. Not even military experts deny that the Imperial Army, heavy as is its cost, is unsuited to modern requirements, and is, therefore, a wasteful and expensive machine. According to the War Secretary, these experts are eager, despite their professional prejudices, that the present Parliament shall recognize the forces in such a fashion that they should no longer be an army organized for unreal things, but an army organized for actual war. His purpose is to reduce the army in numbers by about 26,000 men, but to increase its effectiveness, and at the same time so to develop the Militia that it shall be an efficient force for use at the shortest possible notice. The existing army is, in fact, to be reduced by eight battalions abroad and two at home. There will be six big divisions corresponding with the Indian forces. So that in grave emergencies they may co-operate in frontier movements.

Without entering into minute technical detail of the readjustments, intelligible only to experts, it may suffice to say that Mr. Haldane proposes to increase the reserve power of the army by improving the training of the militia, and bringing it into closer touch with the regulars, and enforcing upon it the obligation of service in time of war. Some attempt will be made also to add to the efficiency of the volunteers and the yeomanry, and no doubt something will be done to remove the slights and discouragements which have been heaped upon them. No one at present seems to be quite aware of the precise details of the methods which are to be adopted in order to achieve these objects. But it is satisfactory to find that even critics, whose main remedy consists in swelling the army by some form of universal, or at all events compulsory service, acknowledge that there are many admirable points in Mr. Haldane's scheme, which, though not fully comprehended at present, show a keen recognition of the defects of the present system. By military enthusiasts it is probable that the proposals of the Government will be accepted as an instalment on account.

He added, "There is absolutely no truth in the story from Toronto."

Mr. R. L. Borden is considering a number of invitations to address public meetings in various parts of the Dominion. So far he has made only two or three positive engagements, perhaps the most important of which is for the grand demonstration at Sydney Mines, N. S., on September 3, at which 8,000 people are expected to be present. Mr. Borden, while in the east, will probably address several other meetings in the Maritime Provinces. The Opposition leader will return to Ottawa about the middle of September and commence a series of meetings in Ontario and Quebec, the dates for which have not yet been arranged. One of the contemplated meetings will be in the western provinces, in Ontario, and two in the vicinity of Toronto.

An important point affecting fire insurance companies has been raised by the Phoenix Royal Imperial Privileged Insurance Company, of Vienna, which has decided that if it can help itself it will not pay any losses growing out of the San Francisco conflagration. Its ground is that its policies by their provisions became null and void by reason of the earthquake which preceded if it did not cause the fire. How many other companies will be in a position to take a similar stand, and will take it, cannot yet be said. Most of those concerned have accepted the situation and are making arrangements to meet the claims upon them. The action of the Phoenix Royal of Vienna, which had about $2,500,000 at risk, will be discouraging. The San Francisco that was may not be restored this generation.

It is pointed out at Manchester that at the Chambers of Commerce Congress at London, though the Canadian resolution in favor of preferential trade was carried on a vote of 105 to 41, chambers possessing 102 votes did not take part in the division. This means much or little as it may be looked at. It may mean that those who did not vote are favorable, but did not wish to place themselves upon record just now. Or it may mean they were indifferent as to what was done.

The exclusion of Chinese from British Columbia, is having its effect in the cities. Before the present law came into force, those who, owing to the scarcity of domestic servants had to employ Chinese and pay them $20 to $25 a month, now have to pay them as high as $35. Chinese laborers employed on the farms and ranches also demand considerably higher pay for their work. In fact, only those farmers with considerable means are able to stand the extra drain, and, as a consequence, the work of clearing the timber and scrub off the land has been brought to a standstill. There is a prospect, it is said, that East Indians may be brought in to do the work the disliked Mongolian used to do very well. It is not sure that they also will not be objected to. The gorge that rises at sight of a yellow toiler's face may not swallow a brown one.

There is a great scarcity of farm labor in the district surrounding Kingston, says the Whig, and as high as four dollars a days is being paid competent men. A farmer, who was in town to-day looking for help, stated that the price of hire was never asked. It was a case of come at any wage, for the harvest was on the ground and wasting for lack of the means of gathering it.

In Mississippi, recently, a lynching party were out after two negroes who were required for a roasting bee. The fugitives took to the swamps and were tracked by bloodhounds. Closer and closer the relentless beasts gained upon the tired blacks. At last, in despair, the men waited till the dogs came up. Then they tied the animals to a tree and walked away. It took all the snap out of the day's enjoyment for the rest of the party.

PEEK-A-BOO ISSUE.

COUNTESS SAYS IT IS NOT PROPER TO EXPOSE CHARMS.

Paris, July 28.—Parisian modesty is much exercised over the "window blouse," which is the French phrase equivalent to "peek-a-boo waist." The ethics of giving bird's-eye views of a woman's neck to the public is the burning question of the hour here as it is in America. Countess De Noailles, who is an authority in the fashionable world, has settled it as far as French society is concerned. Her dictum is as piquant as it is radical.

"I cannot admit," she says, "that it is decorous to expose our shoulders to the criticism of the coachmen and the coal-heaver."

But the countess wishes it understood that this decision in nowise affects the wearing of low-necked gowns at ball or opera.

"There," she explains, "we assume that we are among well-bred people—our equals, or nearly so—and at night we are not subjected to the close scrutiny of every passer-by."

Well-Known Thurlow Man Died On Sunday.

Mr. Alfred Bonkin, a well-known yeoman residing in the 8th concession of Thurlow, died last evening, after some days' illness, from an attack of apoplexy. Deceased was in his 41st year and had resided in Thurlow nearly all his life. Mr. Bonkin was a member of the A., F. & A. M. In religion he was a Methodist, having been for some years a member of the church. A wife and one daughter, Miss Helena, survive, also an aged mother and one brother, Frank, at Moira P.O. The funeral will be under Masonic auspices.

They Liked Belleville.

The Y.M.C.A. boys of Hamilton have of late been cruising in this vicinity, and the Spectator had the following special from them, dated July 25: "Yesterday morning, when about 15 miles east of Belleville, the schooner anchored to allow the boys, with the commodore at their head, to secure provisions. Those that were free immediately hunted up a suitable baseball diamond and a good game was enjoyed, the starboard bunkers winning by the large score of 21 to 6.

"Belleville was reached about 5 o'clock yesterday and after the usual hurrying and scurrying for post-cards and mail, they settled down to spend a pleasant evening. A concert was held on board, in which many of the belles of the town assisted. Early in the morning they proceeded on their way westward, taking with them the good wishes of the fair ones of "Belletown."

Chas. Nunn Lost $75; Richardson Suspected

THE ABOVE SUM FOUND ON HIM WHEN HE WAS SEARCHED—SAYS HE FOUND IT.

This morning, after the English lad, Robert Richardson, had been taken up to jail on remand for a week, he was searched and $75 was found upon him. Shortly after this, Mr. Charles Nunn, a G.T.R. despatcher, reported to the police that, on Saturday afternoon, whilst he was bathing in the river near Lazier's mill, on the Canifton road, $75 had been taken out of his pocket. The bills consisted of three twenty dollar bills, one ten and one five. This corresponds with the money found upon Richardson.

The latter, upon being questioned, stated that he found the money on the river bank, and that it was wrapped up in a piece of paper. It is believed to be Mr. Nunn's money.

TOO BIG TO PARADE.

BARNUM & BAILEY CONTINUE SUCCESSFUL EXPERIMENT OF ELIMINATING STREET PAGEANTS.

A circus that is "too big to give a street parade" is a novelty even in these days of colossal enterprises and mammoth amusement institutions. But that is the announcement of the Barnum & Bailey circus, which exhibits in Belleville, August 8th.

In speaking of the reasons for this striking innovation, a representative of the big show said recently: "The Barnum & Bailey circus has become so large that a parade is no longer possible or even desirable. If we could be absolutely sure of getting into town by daybreak, the parade would still be feasible, but with our five long trains of cars, this is too much to expect of the railroad companies. In many instances it is 8 or 9 o'clock before the last section arrives, and 10 o'clock before it is unloaded and the paraphernalia transferred to the show grounds. This leaves just sufficient time to erect the big tents and prepare for the afternoon performance. To take several hundred men away from the show grounds at the most critical time in the morning, in order to give a parade, would mean delay in opening, and consequent discomfort to the public. To compel thousands of people to stand out in front of the entrance, in the hot sun or rain, because the giving of the parade has delayed the opening for an hour or more, is positively cruel; but there is frequently no help for it when parades are given. By eliminating the parade the public is also saved a long and often uncomfortable wait on the streets pending the always more or less delayed procession, which at best has nothing new to offer, to say nothing of the interference with public traffic and the business of the city's merchants. Many municipal governments have recognized the latter facts by either refusing to give licenses for parades, or by making the tax so high as to be prohibitive. Street parades were all right when circuses were small, and were necessary from an advertising standpoint. The Barnum & Bailey show is too well-known to need advertising of this character, and instead of wasting time and energy on a conventional street display, every effort is concentrated upon the performance."

The experiment of cutting out the parade was tried in this country for the first time last season, and the circus man was asked what effect the innovation had upon the business of the big show.

"If anything, it helped the patronage," was the reply. "The necessity for eliminating the parade because of the magnitude of the show was generally recognized, and the public was anxious to see a show that was actually too big to give a procession. Before the advent of the show in some of the Western cities there were some unfavorable comments regarding the 'no parade' feature, even in the press; but after the public and the newspaper men saw the performance, noticed the increased vim and ginger that was installed into it because the performers and animals were not overworked, and the greater enjoyment of the people because they had not been worn out by a long period of tiresome waiting, there was but one verdict, and that was that the elimination of the parade was a success from every standpoint."

The Barnum & Bailey circus is the only one that has had the courage to cut out the parade. Another well-known showman, when asked if his show would follow suit, replied: "I would like to, but I can't. The Barnum & Bailey circus is the only one that is big enough to do it." And it is evident that it has introduced this innovation in the circus world because the show gives popular satisfaction without the aid of what is at best a conventional display of so-called pageantry.

The absence of the parade is more than compensated for by this year's big arenic acts and "thrillers." There are a number of big sensations, and the structural steel used in these startling acts alone utilizes the carrying capacity of several railroad cars. Incidentally, it is announced that a splendid free show will be given on the exhibition grounds daily at 11 and 5 o'clock, by Prince Youturkey, a remarkable performer on an elevated wire-cable.

UNEQUALLED SERVICE.

In all the world over, among all the railways of all nations, there is one line whose service stands pre-eminent—The Lake Shore Railway. Luxurious comfort, speed, safety, punctuality, personal attention and service, have here reached their highest development. Lake Shore trains run on time and when connections are to be made the schedule is so arranged that long waits and delays are avoided. In a word, here is a railway whose service in every respect leaves nothing to be desired. Travellers of experience know this to be so and all are careful to see that their tickets read "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway." You can obtain full information by addressing J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, O., or W. J. Lynch, Passenger Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

The Cheese Board.

There was, on Saturday, an animated discussion about cool curing rooms, the consensus of opinion being that their installation in this district must certainly be proceeded with next year, if Belleville district is to keep up with the procession.

The boardings on Saturday were 3955 boxes, of which 505 boxes were colored.

The sales were: Mark Sprague, 60 at 11 1-2c; W. J. Magrath, 230 at the same; J. C. Ayer, 540 at the same; W. S. Cook, 295 at the same; Lovell & Christmas, 490 at the same, and Mr. Grant, 300 at the same, and 335 at 11 5-8c; Thos. Watkin, 340 at 11 9-16c. Just before the Board closed the representative of Jas. Alexander bid 11 3-4c for 320 boxes. He got them, in fact, some people thought he could have got them for less.

Nearly 1000 boxes were unsold, but they afterwards sold on the curb at from 11 1-2 to 11 9-16c.

A well-known cheese man risked the opinion on Saturday that cheese would not go much lower for some time.

At the same date last year the boardings were 3715 boxes, against 3955 on Saturday last. The highest price at the same date in 1905 was 11 3-16c, against 11 3-4c on Saturday last.

TWO HUNDRED REVOLVERS.

A strange tale has just come to light, of how two hundred citizens of Ottawa attended a hanging armed with loaded revolvers. It was a time when Fenianism was rampant in Ireland and the United States, and when there were Fenian circles in Montreal, Ottawa and other Canadian cities. In 1867, Thomas D'Arcy McGee contested Montreal as a candidate for its representation in the House of Commons. He was bitterly opposed by the Fenian element among his own countrymen. Apparently his death was then decided upon, and a few months afterward he was murdered. The assassin was discovered, arrested and condemned to death. A Fenian rescue was expected, and two hundred Ottawa citizens took the precaution to attend the hanging to see that justice was not interfered with. The details of the story are entertainingly told in the August "Canadian Magazine" by J. E. B. McCready, the veteran journalist, who was in Ottawa at the time.

VACCINATION AND DANDRUFF.

There is as Sure Prevention of Baldness as There is of Smallpox.

It is now accepted that vaccination renders the vaccinated person exempt from smallpox; or at worst, he never has anything but the slightest kind of a case. Now as sure a preventive and cure for dandruff, which causes falling hair and baldness, has been discovered — Newbro's Herpicide. It kills the dandruff germ. C. H. Reed, Victor, Idaho, says: "Myself and wife have been troubled with dandruff and falling hair for several years. We tried remedies without effect until we used Newbro's Herpicide, two bottles of which cured us." Hundreds of similar testimonials. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

GRAVEL ROADS OF HASTINGS CO.

MR. A. F. WOOD TELLS WHAT THEY HAVE DONE FOR THE COUNTY'S PROSPERITY.

Madoc, July 27, 1906.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer;

Sir,—It is noticeable that there have been several applications in the west of Toronto counties lately for Government aid, from the "million dollar fund," to assist in establishing lines of county gravel roads, and it is interesting to note the applause accorded by the press for the proposed action, as though it was something new. Welland County is the last applicant, and proposes to spend $150,000, providing they receive $50,000 from the Government fund. It appears to have passed out of the public mind that, since 1870, the County of Hastings has expended, without aid from the Government, over $750,000 in building and maintaining its lines of gravel roads, free from toll and kept in good condition. What these western counties are proposing to get, this county has enjoyed for over 30 years, and with great advantage to residents. I have had occasion lately to look into the municipal statistics of the province, and it is safe to state the County of Hastings is one of the richest, if not the richest in the province, and owing to its long lines of good roads a good farm is as valuable in one section as another, anywhere within the southern part, comprising an area of over 1,400 square miles, and the general prosperity is as great, if not greater, than any other county.

A NOBLE STOCK.

Pride, Dignity and Beauty of the Modern Spaniards.

You may see today in any church portal in Spain the somber dignity of expression immortalized in the portraits of Velasquez, the sinister cast of countenance of Philip II., the nose and proud bearing of a Roman centurion. In the Basque provinces the dignity and pride of the peasantry are reflected in the graceful carriage and symmetry of movement for which the men of that coast and the girls carrying pitchers on their heads are justly celebrated. There is no trace of awkwardness in a Spanish peasant, on whose features is stamped the pride of Rome, who will talk to you with the ease and volubility of a Spanish courtier. It is a noble stock.

Though today the glory of Spain has departed and the modern Spaniard favors a western "bowler" and the women wear Parisian hats, the national type of Spain persists with all its dignity and characteristics. Living types of Murillo's street urchins may be seen in any Spanish village—a group huddled together in some shady retreat, brown, chubby, curly headed, merry little rascals, lunching off a watermelon picked up in the market, happy as princes in their hempen rags and with their meager morsel, or you may see the sunny side of Spain as Goya painted it—a dance in the open square, a bridal feast, a bullfighters' carousal, a brawl, an elopement. The apparel is less gaudy today, but the sun and the types and the spirit are the same.

That brawny picador with his wide brimmed sombrero, his swarthy countenance, aquiline nose and raven locks looks for all the world like a Roman gladiator. The lad at his side, with his finely chiseled features, might have waited on Poppaea. And that young girl in her white lace mantilla and the red roses in her warm black hair—such a one Goya would have delighted to portray as she stands there with her delicate head defiantly thrown back, her lustrous eyes aglow with mischief, the graceful line of figure and those pursed and pouting lips.—Nineteenth Century.

TONICS.

Two Edged Swords Capable of Mischief as Well as Benefit.

There is perhaps no class of remedial agents more abused than tonics. The abuse consists both in the excessive use and the misapplication of this class of agents, which within a restricted field possess an indisputable and important therapeutic value. The misuse of tonics is doubtless the outgrowth of a misconception of the real nature of this class of remedial agents and its limitations. Many physicians also seem to lose sight of the fact that tonics are, as has been said of drugs in general, two edged swords which are as capable of mischief as of benefit. Indeed, when the true nature of tonics—as is true, in fact, of most medicinal agents—is thoroughly understood, it is apparent that even in cases in which they accomplish the maximum of benefit there is also a certain amount of injury inflicted upon the organism, so that the effect obtained is really and simply the difference between the mischief done and the good accomplished. If the difference is on one side, the total result is benefit; if on the other side, the result is harm. This principle holds good with regard to most remedies, whether the means employed is a drug or a nonmedicinal agent.

The popular idea of a tonic is well expressed in the following definition, which we find in the National Medical Dictionary: "An agent which augments gradually and permanently the strength and vital activity of the body or its parts." A stimulant is defined by the same authority as being "an agent which increases the functional activity of any organ or series of organs." The distinction made seems to be that a stimulant produces temporary excitement, whereas a tonic produces a permanent increase of strength and vital activity.

The Word "Policy."

That "policy" which a man gets from an insurance company is no relative of that other word "policy" which the statesmen use. The latter is a lineal descendant, along with "polity" and "police," of the Greek "polis," a city. But the former is the late Latin "politicum," "poleticum" or "poleaticum," a register wherein dues were enrolled, which is believed to be really the Greek "polyptychum," a document folded into many leaves. If so, the development of the word may be paralleled by that of "diploma," the parent of "diplomatist," which meant simply a document folded double.

A Popular Welsh Drink.

All the Welsh counties swear by a drink called sowbeer. It is made from fourteen different field herbs, is harmless, except for its sleepy effects, and resembles treacle more than anything. The Welsh villagers always smoke a thin cigarette of dried sage when they drink sowbeer. The stuff is too complicated a mixture for the villagers to brew, but in all the larger towns there are dealers who make it.—London Telegraph.

Deceiving.

Minister—I'm sorry to find you coming out of a public house again, Hamish, after all you promised me. Hamish—Aye, sir, it's wonnerful what an awfu' deceivin' thing this mist is. D'ye ken, I went in there the noo thinkin' 'twas the butcher's shop.—London Tit-Bits.

Leaves seem light, useless, idle, wavering and changeable—they even dance. Yet God has made them part of the oak.

The above is a reproduction of a poster now appearing on the hoardings that has excited much comment by the originality and strength of the design.

INTERIOR DECORATING

That's Our Business

And we keep an experienced staff of workmen busy the year round.

True we do outside painting also, but we give preference to decorating.

We have been so busy with our interior work this year that we have found it impossible to do much exterior work.

The service we render our customers is par excellent—better far than is found elsewhere—we have the materials and the methods—have the ideas and the designs. This is why we have so much decorative work continually ahead of us.

Most people understand that we do better work and use better materials than is usually used by painters. This is another reason for our everlasting busy-ness.

We use white lead in all our work absolutely better than any other lead that can be found and superior to anything carried on sale in Belleville—and we can prove it Work with this lead will wear longer by 40 per cent and look as much better.

IN VACATION TIME.

(New York Times.)

There's a hole in his hat with the hair sticking through,
And a toe that peeps out from a hole in his shoe;
There's a patch in his trousers, a darn in his hose,
And a freckle that tilts on the bridge of his nose;
But, oh, in his heart there's the glimmer and shine
Of a sun that I wish could be shining in mine,
There's a smudge on his face that is dusty and dark,
But a song in his heart like the song of the lark;
There's a rent in his coat where the lining shows through,
But the whistle he tunes to the wild birds rings true;
And, oh, in his heart, with a sparkle like wine,
Is a gladness I wish could be sparkling in mine.
There's an imp in his hair that may keep it awry,
But a twinkle so rare in the blue of his eye;
There's an uneven slant of his trousers, made fast
With a nail through their tops, for a button won't last;
But deep in his heart lies a spring cool and fine
Of good cheer that I wish could be bubbling in mine.
There's tan on his cheeks where the flush of health glows,
And the skin has all peeled from the tip of his nose;
His pockets are bulged with tops, marbles and strings,
With jackknives and other unaccountable things;
But the brooks and the woods bring a music divine
To his ears that I wish they were bringing to mine.

There is no limit to the woes of the house-hunter. A resident of an Ottawa Valley village failing to secure a house, placed his family in a church. The irate church authorities ejected him from the sacred edifice. This is enough to make the man turn gypsy.

The immigration from Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska and Wisconsin to the Northwest of this country has assumed such proportions that the Republican candidate for Governor of Minnesota, Mr. A. S. Cole, has pledged himself to do what he can to arrest the movement. He vaguely hints that the Minnesota Legislature might make liberal appropriations of money to induce the people to stay at home, and to buy back those who have already settled in the Northwest. We fear that our Yankee friends will just have to grin and bear it. It is hardly likely that any money the legislature could grant them would induce them to change their views regarding the wisdom of their choice.

They have curious ways of blocking criminal prosecutions in New York, Judge Blanchard, of the Supreme Court has issued a writ restraining the District Attorney and the Grand Jury from taking any evidence as to the killing of Stanford White, and has issued an order requiring cause to be shown why all further proceedings in the matter of the killing of White by Thaw should not be dropped.

Soldiers generally are as one in rejoicing over the rehabilitation of Dreyfus, the French army officer whose long imprisonment on Devil's Island, the result of a mostrous conspiracy on the part of some of his fellow officers is a discredit to the army of France. It is good to be able to say that French army officers also rejoice in the return of Dreyfus to civilized life with his honor cleared of reproach. The episode is one that may give food for reflection to officers and men of all countries. An army without esprit de corps is not of much account.

HOW FAME COMES.

Men Who Became Great Through Accident or Chance.

Accident has played an important part in the making of great men. If Cooper had never been challenged by his wife to write as good a story as an English novel he had been reading he might never have been one of the great novelists.

If Napoleon had persisted in his attempts to be a writer of essays after he left the military academy the world would not have known this great general.

If Shakespeare had not failed as a wool merchant and turned actor and then, becoming disgusted with himself as an indifferent player, applied himself to writing there would never have been this great dramatist, and no doubt the plays of today would have been inferior to what they are.

Cowley became a poet purely through chance. When only a boy he found in his mother's attic a copy of Spenser's "Faerie Queene" and, becoming enchanted by the rhyme, determined to write poetry for himself.

Gibbon tells that it was while he was at Rome among the ruins of the capitol that he was first moved to write the history of the rise and fall of that great empire. Probably had he not taken a walk on that certain sunny day he would never have conceived the work that afterward made him famous.

Corneille, the French poet, was in the habit of making verses for his friends. Being flattered by their criticism, he gave up his profession as a lawyer and turned writer.

Franklin discovered electricity by accident, and Moliere was turned to writing comedy, from the tapestry trade, by a reprimand from his father for leading a dissipated life.

Newton discovered the force of gravitation through a mere chance. When a student at Cambridge he went one day to the country. Being weary with his rambles, he sat down beneath an apple tree, and while he was musing there was rudely aroused by a severe blow from an apple which, falling from the branches, struck him on the head. He was surprised at the force of the blow from so small an object, and this led him to deduce the principle of gravity.

Flamsteed became an eminent astronomer through chance. Because of ill health he was taken from school, and, wishing to have some books to read while in confinement, he borrowed a book on astronomy. He was so much interested in this volume that he procured others and at length adopted the study as a profession.

Pennant, the authority on natural history, received his propensity in that direction through a chance perusal of a book on birds which he found on a table in the house of a friend, and Sir Joshua Reynolds was first moved to his profession of painting portraits by casually reading Richardson's treatise.

Mistakes of Authors.

The author of "Don Quixote" makes the party at the Crescent tavern eat two suppers in one evening. Scott in one chapter of "Ivanhoe" gives the Christian name of Malvoisin as Richard, subsequently altering it to Philip. Pope makes a weasel eat corn. Kingsley makes John Brumblecombe read the prayer for "All sorts and conditions of men," though in the time of Elizabeth the prayer book did not contain it. Sir Archibald Allison speaks of "Sir Peregrine Pickle," when he means Sir Peregrine Maitland, and the same author translated "droit de timbre" as timber duty "a howler," which is only equaled by Victor Hugo's translation of "Firth of Forth," "premier de quatre."—London Academy.

Hard Praying.

This story is told by a clergyman of North Carolina: "An old colored man stole a pig and after getting home with the animal knelt to pray before retiring. His wife heard him praying to the Lord to forgive him for stealing the pig. She went to sleep with Uncle Eph still praying. Later in the night she woke up and saw her husband still kneeling in prayer. At daybreak his supplications had not ceased. 'Eph, why don't you come to bed?' asked his wife. 'Let me 'lone, 'Riah; de mo' I tries to 'splain to de Lord how I come to steal dat pig de wusser I gits mixed.'"

Learned Better.

"My daughter has learned one thing at boarding school," exclaimed the man, "and that is how to write a legible hand."

"How did it happen?" asked a friend.

"She kept writing home for money," said No. 1, "and I sent back word I couldn't read a word of her letters. It soon cured her of that Chinese chirography."

Almost an Insult.

"That suit you have on," said the chap who always talks whether he has anything to say or not, "is a dead ringer for one my brother has."

"Huh!" growled the fussy man. "What do you take me for—a clothes ringer?"

THE CHURCH SLEEPERS

LESSON FROM THE INCIDENT OF THE YOUNG MAN EUTYCHUS.

FELL AND BROKE HIS NECK

Sermon to the Careless, the Indifferent, the Irreverent, Who in Church Keep One Eye on the Sermon and the Other on Business or Pleasure—Direct Application of the Text Made by the Preacher.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Diver, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., July 29.—To the careless, the indifferent and the irreverent, who in church keep one eye on the sermon and the other on business or pleasure, this sermon has a direct application. The text selected is Acts xx, 9, "And there sat in a window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep."

No class of men work harder for Christ than do the traveling evangelists. When such men as John Wesley and George Whitefield and D. L. Moody have a word for a parish, they realize how large that field is, and they do everything in their power to travel over it before they die. The true evangelist preaches on Sunday. He also preaches on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. He not only preaches at night, but in the afternoons and in the mornings. He preaches at all times and under all conditions. He seems to say to himself: "The harvest is plenteous, but the laborers are few. O God, give me strength to wield thy sickle with superhuman power and gather thy sheaves by the multitudes into the gospel granary."

John Wesley, the traveling evangelist always began his day's work at 4 o'clock in the morning. Many were the times he preached two sermons before breakfast. On an average he used to travel every year nearly 5,000 miles. He preached from two to four sermons every day of his life. Not only that, but he everywhere disseminated his printed appeals for Christ. Truly Tyerman was right when he eulogized John Wesley's herculean labors in these words: "Looking at his traveling, the marvel is how he found time to write, and, looking at his books, the marvel is how he found time to preach." But preach he did. He kept on preaching under all conditions. He seemed to say, "My life is slipping away so fast that I must carry the gospel to as many people as possible before I die." Wesley preached in the early morning to the miners of Cromarty. He preached in the market places at noon. He preached in the fields in the afternoon. He preached in the churches at night. He preached at all times, under all conditions, to all who would hear the message of the atoning love of Jesus Christ.

Now, if I might not seem irreverent I would say that the Apostle Paul was the John Wesley among the early disciples. In all probability he was not an impassioned speaker like Peter. Peter always seemed to me to be the George Whitefield of the apostolic band. I can imagine him preaching on the day of Pentecost as George Whitefield so often stood before his audiences, with flaming eyes and earnest gesture and resonant voice. Oh, what a power Peter must have been! But, though George Whitefield had his work to do, John Wesley had his work also, and a far greater work. John Wesley went from place to place, not only preaching, but also organizing churches and collecting money for his evangelistic work. Such was the work of Paul. He was the John Wesley of the apostolic band.

Now, to-day we find this ancient John Wesley on one of his great missionary tours. He wants to make the most of his trip, so he stops only a short time at Troas. I think I hear him say to his traveling companion, "Luke, do you think we can get through our work here in a week?" "I do not believe so," answers Dr. Luke. "A week is a very short time." "I know it," says Paul, "but if we wait for the sailing of another vessel there is no telling how long we may have to remain here. I would like to preach to these friends for months instead of a week. But we must hasten on. I want to present the gospel to as many different cities as I can before I die. I think if we get up early in the morning and preach before breakfast and keep on preaching during the day and preach late in the evening I can sow a good many seeds. Our time is very short. We must hasten on to Assos and Mitylene and thence go to Chios and Trogyllium and Miletus."

Thus we see Paul hard at work in Troas. Six days slipped by only too quickly. On the last day before he sails he has so much to say that he continues his talks far on toward the midnight. While he is exhorting the Christians of Troas to be true to their faith a young man who is sitting on the window sill of the room dozes, loses his balance and falls out and breaks his neck. "And there sat in a window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep, and as Paul was long preaching he sunk down with sleep and fell down from the third loft and was taken up dead." Now, I would like to consider with you the reason why this young man fell asleep during the preaching of Paul and why his somnolence should be a rebuke to all Christians sleeping in our church pews.

In the first place, I believe that this sleeping Eutychus is a type of that large class of young men who think it is smart to act disrespectfully and obnoxiously in the house of God. When these young men attend church they always go under protest. While in the church pew by their actions they try to advertise the fact that they do not want to be there. When the minister preaches a little longer than he might, these young men yawn and twist and talk with their seat mates until they put themselves out of all touch with the service, and the preaching to them becomes stupid because they do not listen to it intelligently. They become like Eutychus of Troas, who under the preaching of Paul allowed his eyelids to become heavy and his head to nod until he fell out of the window, upon the sill of which he was sitting, and struck the ground, and he broke his neck. You have seen this class of men. They are to be found in every Sunday school and every church service.

This class of irreverent young people was well illustrated for me some time ago. I was attending the graduating exercises of one of the greatest educational institutions of the west. I sat in the gallery and could distinctly see all that took place. The huge building was literally thronged. Main floor, first gallery and rostrum were packed. The second gallery was also filled by the immense audience. A great orator was delivering the address of the evening. That audience, almost to a person, hung upon the speaker's words. But no sooner did this great orator commence to speak than three of the members of the quartette, which sang that night began to whisper and to laugh. They thought they were behind a curtain and no one could see them. They talked, and they seemed to say by their actions: "Oh, must we be bored? Do we have to sit through all this? We are singers. We care nothing for the fact that an orator, nationally famous, is delivering one of his greatest addresses to-night. When will the never ending flow of words cease?" That was a stupid address to those three singers, merely because in their obnoxious egotism they supposed they had outgrown it and could not be benefited by it.

I protest against the irreverence of these modern Eutychuses in the house of God. I protest against young men and also young women, for some young women are as bad as the irreverent young men, coming into a church and not giving the same respectful attention to God's ambassadors which they would give to an ordinary guest in their father's parlor. The house of God is not a playground. It is not a confectionery establishment, where young folks come to munch candy. It is not a place for young people to whisper and to write notes. It is a place to worship. And, if our young people do not come to church to worship, then they had better stay away. You must heed the fact that the sleeping auditor of my text was a young man.

But while Eutychus sits upon the window sill of the room in which Paul was preaching I see him continually glancing across the street. I approach him to-day and say: "What is the matter, Eutychus? Why are you looking so much out of the window? I should think you would want to keep your eyes all the time riveted upon Paul. Why, he is the greatest preacher of all the ages." "I have heard that," answers Eutychus. "That is one of the reasons I am here. But I can't neglect my business even for a Paul. Thus I am trying to kill two birds with one stone. I am sitting here upon the window ledge, so I can hear Paul with my ears, and at the same time with my eyes I can watch my store, just across the street. Thus you see if too many customers gather about my counter, why, I can just slip away and attend to them." Do you wonder, when Eutychus kept one eye upon his counter at the same time he was listening to Paul, that the sermon of Paul became very stupid and as soon as the shadows of night fell that Eutychus' eyelids grew heavy and that he slipped out of the window and broke his neck?

"But," says some one to me, "I do not see where you get authority for the statement that Eutychus was a young business man. The Bible does not state this. And, furthermore, how do you know that his bazaar, or shop, was just across the street? Are you not taking too much liberty with the text?"

No, I do not think I am. 'Tis true the Bible does not state this young man Eutychus, was a business man. But one fact I do know. If Eutychus was a young business man and wanted to keep his eye upon his shop across the street while he was keeping within hearing of Paul, the window sill would have been just the place where he would have sat. And, furthermore, I do know that, just as Eutychus might have been watching his bazaar, there are hundreds and thousands of men who when they come to church bring along their businesses with them, and while the ministers are preaching they are planning what they will do at the store the next day, or how they will purchase their fall goods, or how they can undersell their rivals. Furthermore, I do know that, whenever a merchant or a business man tries to carry his business into the church pew, that moment even the most brilliant and consecrated of sermons will fall upon ears as dead as did the words of Paul when he was pleading with Eutychus of Troas, who fell out of the window and broke his neck on the last night before Paul sailed away on his famous missionary tour.

O ye merchants and manufacturers and professional men, is there no lesson for you to learn in this Troas tragedy? You have often said, "If these ministers were only brilliant speakers and would preach interesting sermons we would come to church and stay awake and listen to their discourses." Is that true? Was not Eutychus listening to a brilliant discourse? Was he not listening to the most brilliant pulpit orator the world has ever seen? Ah, no, Eutychus did not fall asleep because he was listening to a stupid preacher. I believe he fell asleep for the same reason that so many business men become drowsy when they try to sandwich a sermon in between the ledges of their temporal business. While the sermon is going on some of them upon the fly leaf of a hymn book or upon the church leaflet are trying to estimate how much profit they can make upon some real estate deal or how much they can cut down their employes' wages without having them quit for good or go out on a prolonged strike.

You say the modern ministers preach too long. Open the leaves of your church history and find the biographies of our great preachers. I defy you to find any of them who made a great impression for Jesus Christ unless they were long preachers. And, furthermore, you cannot show me any church to-day in America who is noted as a deeply spiritual church unless the services of that church are long services. Not only do the audiences of that church sit through long services, but even after the benediction is given the members are loath to leave. They linger in groups in the aisles and about the doorways, and at last you find those church members talking with each other on the street corners as though they could not tear themselves apart.

But this sleeping Eutychus is the symbol also of the theological liberalist. His actions bring to mind the lives of those who do not care to what church they are going, as long as they are listening to some new minister and delving into the mysteries of some creed. Thus these modern Eutychuses say, "I must study all the novel creeds and sit at the feet of all the new teachers, because I cannot tell but in a few years one of these new creeds may become the accepted creed of my country." Thus we find them not identifying themselves with any one Christian church, but making it a practice to go around and investigate all churches and all beliefs.

We are in the seaport town of Troas. It is about the year 56 A. D. We see a crowd of people hurrying along, some of them talking very earnestly together. We hail one of them, whom we find to be an old acquaintance of ours. We say: "Hello, Eutychus! What is the matter Where are you going?" He turns quickly and says: "Is that you, John? Why, I am going up to hear this new preacher Paul. He has been in town about six days. He is going to leave for Assos to-morrow. Come up with us and hear him." But we say: "What is the good of going? You do not expect to become one of his followers, do you?" "Oh, no," answers Eutychus. "But I make it a rule to hear all the noted men speak who come to town. Last week there was one of the noted priests of Ephesus here. He was telling about his goddess Diana. Last month there was a soothsayer from India. A year ago we had that Egyptian magician with us. Two years ago there came that disciple of Epicurus from Athens. Yes, I went to hear them all. I always go and hear everybody who comes to advocate some strange creed. Come along with me and let us listen to this Paul. We can sit in the back of the room. Perhaps we can sit on the window sill. The window is close to the door, and then we can slip out if the speaker becomes tiresome." Is it too much a stretch of the imagination to picture Eutychus going to hear Paul in such a spirit as some of our modern Eutychuses go to hear the different speakers of our modern churches in these cities of the western hemisphere?

But, lastly, I remark this ancient Eutychus made another mistake, which so many men and women are making to-day. He did not believe that there was ever a last time for him to receive the gospel of Jesus Christ. He felt that if he could receive Christ to-day then he could receive him next week or next month or next year or even ten years from the night of his fatal accident. But there was a last chance for Eutychus, and there is a last time for us. And the sad fact is that for some of us this last time for accepting Christ may be to-day—this morning, this afternoon or to-night. Perhaps Christ is speaking to us as Christ spake in the parable of old, saying, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee." To-night the death angel may come to thee as he came to Eutychus of old, when he fell out of the window and broke his neck.

"But," says some one, "you must remember, though Eutychus may have broken his neck, that Paul, by the power of the Holy Spirit, resurrected him. The Bible distinctly declares that." Yes, my friend, you are right. But I would not have you lay too much stress on that fact. It is not every preacher who has Paul's power of restoring you to life if you were to break your neck. If you reject the gospel to-day and should die before night by some accident or disease, no preacher could obtain for you another opportunity, as Paul did for Eutychus. So I think, after all, that was Eutychus' last chance for salvation, for, if after that fall and resurrection he did not receive Christ, he would never have received him at all. And I know, further, that after the hard trouble God has lately sent upon you in your financial misfortune or in the death of your loved one or in the pains of your late sickness, if you do not receive Jesus Christ now, in all probability you will never receive him at all. Yes, after Eutychus was restored to life, in all probability there was no difficulty for him to stay awake and listen to Paul about the glories of a spiritual salvation. Is it any weariness for you now to listen to what Christ has done for you that you may live with him forever and ever? O ye modern Eutychuses, are you having your dulled ears opened to the glorious news of the gospel life? Have your dazed and dulled eyes become aflame with joy at the vision of the face of a loving Lord?

Thus, whether we live or die, may we never again be weary with hearing what Christ has done for us or weary in doing something for Christ. There is a beautiful incident, told by Mrs. Mary Livermore, that when she was an army nurse during the late civil war a young captain was fatally shot. At once his young bride was sent for and came to the bedside of the dying soldier. Two hours before his demise Mrs. Livermore was passing through the ward of the field hospital and saw him. She stopped a minute by his bedside and said, "My poor fellow, are you ready to go?" The young wife looked up and answered: "Yes, Mrs. Livermore, we are both ready, he to go and I to stay. When he enlisted I gave him to God and his country. I expected this and prepared for this." Oh, my friends, can we speak to Christ as that young wife spoke to Mrs. Livermore? Can we look up into the face of our Saviour and say: "Master, Saviour, Jesus, Lord, I am ready. I am ready to serve thee on earth or to glorify thee in heaven?" Ah, ye sleeping Eutychuses, can you be emancipated from your sins and say that? Perhaps, as Paul was preaching for the last time to this young man of Troas, I may be preaching for the last time to some of you. Under the power of the Holy Spirit may I be able to inspire you to give your hearts to Jesus, as Paul raised up the dead young man of Troas and made him a living disciple for Christ.

Prehistoric Regatta.

A novel feature of the ninth annual carnival at Kingston-on-Thames on Saturday in aid of the Royal National Lifeboat Institution was a "prehistoric regatta for members of the Ancient Britons' Coracle Club." The "ancient Britons" rowed in prehistoric undress.

ball on and he's floor manager for our side."

Raymond was in no mood to respond to humor. "Very well. Say to him that when I have dug my men out I will come to him," and something in the tone of this answer stopped the grin on the messenger's face.

Reporters drifted up, made hasty notes and passed on, lured by the more important material disclosed in the opposition of ranked and ready warriors on the hill. Only Dolan stayed, eager and sympathetic, fetching coffee from the cook house and lending such other aid as he could, so deeply concerned with this tragic deed that he seemed wastefully negligent of his own affairs. Seizing an opportunity for a private word, he began, in a low voice: "Rob, I know who led this thing. The union had nothing to do with it. It was done by a lot of Curran's spittoon cleaners. The fellow that Baker killed is from the Springs. I've seen him around Curran's."

"Do you think so?"

"I know it. When you want me to tell you what I know I'll do it; only not now. Wait till the militia takes possession."

"Will the militia come? Has the governor ordered it out?"

"He's got to order 'em out now. He's a dead duck, anyway."

Raymond returned to his work beside Kelly, and together they tore at the rocks and beams, magnificent in their leadership. An hour later all was ready, and into the heavy, shifting smoke which rose from the smoldering debris at the first level Kelly and his young partner descended to extinguish the burning timbers, to clear away the fallen rock and to signal to the imprisoned men below.

Again and again they were forced to lie flat on their faces with their lips touching the earth in order to breathe; but at last the smoldering material was all hoisted, the mine cleared, and they were able to look about them, dizzy, but exultant. The iron beams had caught and held a huge mass of rock which the concussion had shaken from the mouth of the mine, and to dig through this was the task that now confronted them; but the air of the shaft having cleared, volunteers thickened, and the exhausted leaders were able to rest their aching limbs and listen for signals.

They were mightily cheered by the faint but unmistakable sound of knocking. The imprisoned ones were calling in the well tried fashion—by hammering on the rock with their sledges. They beat cheerfully, as if seeking to reassure their rescuers.

An hour later the rescuers could hear the voices of those beneath, and it was hardly more than midday before they began to lift them out two by two in the big bucket.

Ann, hearing their shouts, came down the path with Nora to meet them. Kelly's eyes were dim with tears, and Ann's heart went out to him as he shouted, "They are all here, and unhurt!"

"But you are hurt?" she asked Raymond, with anxious, timorous voice, peering at his torn and trembling hands.

"No—only tired. How is the patient?" he asked as they started toward the cabin together.

"He is awake, but his pulse is still rapid, and he is very restless."

"What does the doctor say?"

"He insists there is no danger. I think he means it. But, oh, that poor boy is so sick!" She checked herself. "This will be a very serious loss to you, will it not?"

He strove to answer lightly. "Oh, yes; but our vein is there just the same. Luckily they couldn't blow that away."

At the door of the bungalow he turned. "I must leave you for a time. I must repair damages"—he looked at his hands and arms—"and I want to talk with my men."

Raymond found his men in the barrack, discussing with characteristic calmness the general situation while waiting for their dinner. And when Perry shouted "grub pile" in cow camp phrase each man bustled to his place with cheerful clatter. Raymond drew up with the rest, and for a few minutes no word spoken referred to the disaster.

As the first man, well filled, pushed back his chair Raymond called out: "Boys, I want to say a word before any of you go out. A council of war is necessary at this minute."

Those who had risen took seats again, and all faced his way. As he looked at them his throat filled with a realization of their loyal service, and he could not find voice for a few moments, but sat with bowed head, rolling a bit of bread between his fingers. At last he resolutely cleared his throat and began harshly: "Well, boys, the game halts right here. You see where Kelly & Raymond are—they're flat. We've got a good mine if we could work it, but we can't. Just about every dollar we had to spare went into that machinery, and our ore shipments were just beginning. I've been doing a little figuring, and I find we can pretty near pay all that's due you, but we can't do any more. If this strike were settled we might get somebody to come in and help us put up a new power plant, but as things shape up at this present time we're 'up a stump,' as they say back in Ohio. So I guess we'll have to let you go." There was a movement among the men which he felt as a protest, but he continued: "I hate to do this, especially now in the winter, but you can see how it is. If I were in your places I would go to Reese and the other independents and stick by 'em; help them fight this thing through on fair play lines."

His slight pause brought no response. When he began again his voice was softened. "And, boys, ride up and tell Matt a good word. He's hard hit."

His voice trembled dangerously, and he was forced to stop.

The tension was eased away by Nary, one of the older men, who broke out with deep lunged profanity in order to conceal his good heart.

"Well, I don't know how the rest of you feel, but I want to turn right in and put this mine into shape again and lynch the dogs that blew us up!"

Raymond lifted his hand. "Hold on, boys. Don't be too quick on the trigger. Keep cool till I ride up on the hill and take a look around and have a little talk with Munro. We must rally all the independents, which will take time, and, besides, you must remember I have a very sick boy on my hands, and there is Baker, who needs care. Don't rush. Let me go up and see what the sheriff seems likely to do. As I've told you before, I've no theory about the labor question. I never was up against it before, and I'm a little uncertain. I've always believed in the best man winning. I picked you fellows because you were likely chaps. I'm paying you the highest wages going because you earn it. You're satisfied, you say, and I don't see why we are not privileged to go ahead in our own way. I haven't felt any need of going into this fight for the benefit of the crowd till now. It looks now as though we should take a hand. Anyhow, we'll give Munro another chance to do us justice, and if he don't, then—well, we'll try some other plan." He shook off this disagreeable cloak of doubt. "But be that as it may, boys, I shall never forget the good work you've done for me when you knew the crowd was against you."

As they stepped out into the warm afternoon sun Kelly, with a jocular note in his voice, remarked, "Well, Robbie, we're gents at leisure. Nothing to do now but play the nurse"—here his voice swiftly changed—"or do battle."

"If it were not for the women and the sick I'd fight. We have nothing to lose now, and the boys are hot for it. Have you been up the street?"

"No, I have not."

"I don't see what we can do with these two wounded men and the boy and the women on our hands, Matt the real heart of this opposition is now in one man. If he were taken away these rowdy miners would scatter like grouse."

Kelly turned quickly. "You mean Munro?"

"I do! I'm going up to have an interview with him."

Kelly laid a big hand on his arm "You're takin' a big risk. Let me go instead."

"No, you must stay here. I am going and I am going unarmed. I am safer with empty hands, Matt. They will not shoot an unarmed man. I'm going to make one more appeal to Munro."

Mounting his horse, Raymond rode rapidly out along the ridge toward the hill on which the fortification stood. He passed now and then a group of men who knew him, and while one or two greeted him pleasantly all the others met his glance with menace. He felt the hot breath of their hate, but passed on without haste, regretting his action in leaving his revolvers behind him.

The camp had eaten its midday meal —for even in times of war men must eat; the miners had hastily devoured their rough food and were swarming on the hillside overlooking the sheriff's encampment. The vedettes were bivouacked in a small grove of firs to the left and a little below the fort (which was merely a log corral banked with dirt), and Munro was directing the shovel brigade at work on the walls of the redoubt, which was growing rapidly under the brisk movement of chattering miners.

As Raymond neared the crowd of onlookers he recognized Denver Dan and one or two other horsemen, but for the most part the spectators were strangers and plainly hostile.

He had drawn rein to pass to the left when Brock stepped forth on foot and roughly called out:

"What's your business up here?"

"I want to find Munro."

"Well, you go back to your shack and keep out of this."

Raymond smiled. "When did you become roadmaster?"

Brock raised his voice so that the rapidly gathering crowd might hear. "Here's the spy that warned the sheriff not to come on the freight train. Here's the man that ruined our plans. You can't deny that," he said, laying a hand on the horse's rein.

"I don't intend to deny it," replied Raymond, facing the lowering faces of the close packed throng as a mastiff might face a pack of coyotes, "and, what's more, I don't intend to apologize for it."

"Lynch him!" shouted some fellow at the back. "Lynch the spy!"

Raymond had been in danger many times in his life, but never had he looked down into such hate inflamed faces as now encircled him. The old reckless heart came back to him. He lifted his voice in appeal: "Have I a friend here? If I have, let him throw me a gun! I want to go fighting!"

"Here you are!" called a stranger, and a big, glittering revolver came whirling over the heads of the mob.

Raymond caught it deftly, and with the touch of its handle to his palm his eyes narrowed and his white teeth set: "Now let the dance begin! Some of you will cross the range with me!"

Denver Dan attempted a diversion. "Look out, fellers; here comes Jack!"

Munro's name and the pistol in Raymond's hand induced a pause. The foremost of the assailants turned toward the captain of the vedettes, riding swiftly to the rescue. "What's going on here?" he shouted as he reached the outskirts of the crowd.

Brock was ready. "Here's the man who has played with our plans all along, pretending to be neutral when he was nothing but a dirty, slinking spy from the very beginning."

"Liar!" shouted Raymond, and his boot toe caught the ruffian in the mouth and he staggered back among his fellows with a hoarse cry. For a moment he was dazed, then, raging, furious, his mouth streaming with blood, he jerked his revolver from its holder, intent to kill, but a hand clutched his arm, and Munro, spurring his horse into the mass of irresolute men, called out: "Brock, I'll kill you if you shoot—this is a friend of mine—you know that! He's stood out against us all along, but he's been on the square. I sent him to the Springs myself."

"Liar!" shouted Raymond.

Brock wiped the blood from his lips. "Mebbe you asked him to wire the sheriff last night. He admits he sent a messenger to warn him."

Cries of frenzied rage broke forth again, and the crowd surged against the two horses. Furious, throaty cries broke forth.

"Kill him!" "Hang him!"

Munro blew a signal to his men, and his voice rang out clear and sharp. "The first man that reaches a hand out of that circle loses it. If any lynching is done, I preside over it. Dan, come in here—you, too, Cook."

The two cowboys spurred their horses into the circle, and the four armed and resolute men faced the angry mob and held it at bay. Raymond, even in this hour of danger, regretted Munro's assistance; it put him under an obligation which weakened him. With his mind filled with conflicting considerations, he waited while the swift clatter of a hundred hoofs drew near and a squad of Munro's picked men surrounded their captain.

When they were clear of danger Raymond drew rein toward Munro. "Jack, you saved my scalp today, and I'm grateful; that's why I don't want to see you in the hands of the sheriff. I want you to pull out this minute. Come, now, this is the last appeal. Fly the coop. If you don't, they'll hang you. What do you hope to accomplish? Face the situation. You are the one to hit the trail, and hit it like a wolf. What do you hope to do?"

"I expect to hold this camp until the syndicate yields to the demands of the miners or until the governor interferes."

"Then what?"

"Then I step down and out."

"Suppose the sheriff attacks tonight?"

"I will send him back a-whirling. And now let me take an inning. You mustn't come up here again. I can't answer for what would happen next time. You stay where you are, and—listen! Take care of yourself. So long, and take good care of the lady."

CHAPTER XXVI.

Ann, being measurably relieved from anxiety by Louis' subsiding pulse, permitted herself a closer study of the brusque and ominous movements taking place in the scope of her window. She studied Raymond, in earnest but apparently unexpected conference with his workmen. No word of their low utterance reached her ears, but she observed that they organized into squads as if in obedience to some command and that each man armed himself and that each face was grim or recklessly smiling. That they formed her guard she knew, and this in itself ought to have been thrilling. But it was not—it seemed absurd.

Raymond did not show himself again to her until about 9 o'clock of the evening, when he entered the sickroom and said quietly to Braide: "Doctor, you better go to bed if the patient will permit. You may be badly needed early tomorrow morning."

"Very well," acquiesced Braide, convinced that a closer tie than friendship united Ann and the young miner and that they desired to be alone.

The door had hardly closed behind the young physician when Ann turned to Raymond and imperiously said: "You must not try to evade me. I want to know what is threatening. Tell me!"

"The camp is wild," he admitted, feeling the resentment in her voice, "and I don't see how a clash can be avoided so long as Munro is in command and keeps his present temper. But you need give no thought to that. All my men are on guard tonight, and, whatever happens, this cabin is safe."

"I like you to be honest with me," she said, more gently. "I'm not a child, and I'm not a timid person."

"You shall know," he answered, taking a seat before the fire. He had never been more admirable than at that moment. "My theory is that the sheriff's forces are eager to storm the hill before the governor has a chance to interfere and 'protect his pets,' that is the way they put it. If the attack is made a desperate struggle will follow. Probably the deputies will try to carry the fortification direct. Meanwhile Kelly and I have drawn up and forwarded to the governor a long telegram signed by the leading independents, reciting our disaster and demanding immediate interference on his part, and we are hoping to hear from him before midnight. I have also wired Barnett to warn the sheriff of your presence here and that we are guarding you. I think Don is with the deputies. If he is he will see that this cabin remains outside the field of operation."

"Where is Captain Munro?"

"His vedettes are camped on the north slope, but may engage the enemy at any moment, for Jack is quite as eager as the sheriff to win first blood. If it were not for the possible injury of innocent men and women I would say let them fight it out. Each camp is quite as crazy and lawless as the other. Now you have the truth. I have concealed nothing from you. I will even tell you that Munro has promised to come down for a final conference with the independents and that we are still hoping to persuade him to leave the camp."

The sick boy stirred uneasily and called faintly, and Ann went to him and bent above him tenderly. "Here I am, Buddie. Are you better?"

"Oh, I'm so hot! Take that blanket off me."

Raymond looked at Ann. "Shall I lighten his load?"

She shook her head as she put a glass of water to the boy's lips. "What time is it?" he asked as he fell back upon his pillow.

"Going on 10 o'clock."

"Has the fight come off yet?"

Raymond was cautious. "No, the camp is quiet."

He insisted on talking. "I hope they won't fight till I get over this cold. It's hard luck to be here. What day is it? How long have I been sick? You should have seen Jack when he rode up and stopped the man!" In this way his mind leaped and danced for an hour, but he grew drowsy at last and went away into sleep.

Ann spoke first. "Poor boy! He will always feel defrauded to think he is missing all the drama."

"Your father must have been such another enthusiast. I liked his name for you."

She colored. "That was the only thing I had to reproach him for. I reproach myself now for not acquiescing in it. I think it grieved him to have me side with mother against it."

"It is a sweet name to me—Hesper." He uttered it with the tenderness which dwells in the voice of a lover, and its letters sang together—but he dared not look at her.

Raymond was hastening to apologize for his temerity when the noise of a galloping horse cut short his speech and whitened Ann's cheek, so portentous was the sound of haste at such an hour. "I hope that is Jack," said the miner, and hastened to the door to meet and silence Munro, who entered with studied effect and, removing his sombrero, bowed very low to Ann. "Good evening, haughty princess. How's the kid?"

Ann, relieved to find the flying messenger an expected though unwelcome visitor, replied pleasantly, "He's better, thank you."

A covert smile curled the handsome lips of the young leader as he glanced from Raymond to Ann, and something in his bearing puzzled the girl. When he spoke again, with a growing deliberation, she perceived that he was in liquor.

"You mustn't be alarmed—these are rough times, but you'll be protected. Battle's comin' off this time, sure thing. We move on the enemy at daybreak. Sit down. Don't stand in my presence," he added, with a comical twist of his lips.

Ann turned with a startled glance to Raymond, who genially said: "I'm glad you came down, Jack. I want you to hold a conference with the independents."

Munro stiffened. "No time for conference. No time to talk with any one. I just came down to say howdy to the lady, that's all. Understand?" His voice rose.

Raymond lifted a warning hand. "Quietly, old man, don't disturb the boy. Let's go find Kelly."

Munro's face grew sullen. "Don't want to see Kelly—don't want to see you. I've come to see the lady." He faced Ann again. "I'm going into battle. May be killed tomorrow. Had to say goodby. I may not see you again."

To Raymond's great relief Kelly, who had heard Munro arrive, appeared at the door. His manner was easy and his voice low as he greeted the intruder. "Hello, Jack! How goes the Napoleonic business?"

Munro turned with darkening brows and labored to be gloomily impressive. "Got 'em scared, all right. They're meditating retreat this minute."

Kelly laid a hand on his shoulder. "Lad, you need sleep. You're worn out."

Raymond, with a significant look at Matt, turned as if to stir the fire, a movement which brought him behind his visitor.

Munro put his hands in his pockets and laboriously explained: "Been tryin' to keep awake on whisky. Trifle shot this minute, askin' Lady Ann's pardon."

Raymond's right arm encircled the young leader's waist, pinioning the deadly right hand to his side, while Kelly, seizing the almost equally skillful left, whipped the young desperado's revolver from his belt.

For a moment the fangless rattlesnake was bewildered. "What you mean, Rob?" he asked ominously.

"Come outside, Jack. Don't make a row—for the lady's sake. We want to talk to you."

"Let go o' me," he retorted, writhing in Raymond's clutch. In the midst of this he grinned at Kelly. "I know these arms. What's your game, Rob?"

"Come outside and I'll tell you," pleaded Raymond.

The sodden brain of the reckless leader was waking up again, and, with a bow to Ann, he said: "Sorry to 'sturb you, but I must take these men outside and kill 'em. See you again soon."

Raymond released his prisoner and stepped through the door in advance of him, but as Munro followed and stood for an instant on the step, peering into the darkness, Raymond seized him again and, with a furious twist, threw him to the earth and fell upon him in a terrible struggle. Matt, mindful of Ann and the boy, closed the door. The girl, not daring to look out, could only stand with nerveless limbs and pounding heart and listen. Once the desperate man uttered a gasping snarl, but it was cut short by a merciless hand, and all was still. Then her composure gave way.

Raymond fell upon him in a terrible struggle.

"Oh, Rob, don't kill him!" she called, heedless of Louis. Opening the door, she cried again, "Don't, please don't!"

Kelly was binding the captain's feet while Raymond, with a knee on his chest and one hand at his throat, looked up at Ann as she stood in the doorway and said: "Please go in. We are doing this for his own good. We won't hurt him. He'll thank us for it when he understands our motive."

Munro, like a trapped wildcat, snapped at his captor, but Raymond's long fingers prevented him. "Now, listen, Jack. You did me a good turn today, and I'm going to do as much for you. I'm going to save you from state's prison against your own fool's will. You're going to leave camp tonight, dead sure thing! And you might as well go quietly. If you don't, we'll pack you on your horse like a roll of blankets. Will you be quiet? Will you ride your horse or must we tie you on?"

Again the frenzied man renewed his struggle. Blindly, ferociously, like an animal, deaf to all reason, acknowledging no law but that of force, he writhed, beating the ground. His gasping breath was painful to hear. At last Braide, who had been picking handily at his medicine case, suddenly opened the door and ran out.

"Here is where the man of medicine comes in," he called jovially, and thrust a folded handkerchief beneath Munro's nostrils. "Let him breathe, Raymond," he said quietly. "It'll do him good."

Munro's knotted muscles almost instantly relaxed, his hands fell inert, his head turned quietly to one side, and his face became as peaceful as a sleeping child.

"What have you done?" whispered Kelly excitedly.

Braide laughed. "Hypnotized him. You can do as you wish with him now, but work quick."

"Much obliged, doctor," said Raymond. "Take him up, Matt. Let's put him away while he sleeps. He'll go by freight now." As they laid hold of the corpselike figure he added to Ann and to Braide, "Not a word of this to any one!"

A knock at the door startled Ann. But the visitor was only one of Munro's men, deferential, almost timid, in her presence.

"Excuse me, but has the captain been here this evening?" he asked politely.

The doctor quickly answered, "Yes, but he went away again almost immediately."

"If you see him, just tell him we need him on the hill."

"I'll do so gladly."

"Much obliged." The messenger withdrew, and they soon heard him gallop swiftly away, and all became silent.

At Ann's insistent request Braide went back to his couch, and she was again alone, waiting for Raymond's return.

The situation in the great drama was now quite clear to her mental vision. She could see the small army waiting below, foolishly eager for the coming of the dawn, and it was not difficult to imagine the excitement and consternation in Munro's forces when their leader failed to appear. She understood also something of the panic in Bozle and in the valley and realized that through the night the news of the impending assault on the peak was flying, loosed along aerial ways by the tapping fingers of a hundred deft, dispassionate operators.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Raymond was gone for nearly two hours, but when he did appear he was entirely self contained and very gentle.

"You must go to sleep," he said at once. "I will watch. I want to beg your pardon for seizing Munro in your presence, but it was necessary both for his sake and to prevent bloodshed. I saw no other chance of disarming him. I hope you will excuse my harshness in sending you away."

"You need not apologize. I understood," she answered. "What have you done with him?"

"Kelly has taken him away out of danger. Have any of his men called for him?"

"Yes, one, but he rode away again. Have you any further news?"

"Something is going on in Bozle. I could hear cheering, and I thought I could distinguish the galloping of horses. Whatever is coming, my duty is here, and now let me take you to Nora."

"No, no! I can't sleep now. My brain is whirling with this night's events. I feel as if I were about to witness some great storm, some catastrophe. Sleep is impossible tonight."

He turned with low voiced intensity. "What can I do to repair the injury I have done you and yours? When I left Barnett's home I was resolved never to re-enter your life again. I honestly tried to get away from Louis and to take myself absolutely out of your world."

She interrupted him with a gesture of protest. "You must not blame yourself—it had to be. Do you believe in fate?"

"I do not, nor in luck," he answered slowly.

"Neither do I, but I believe in compensations. Since I came up here I have worked out a theory of life. I've been happy here. That should comfort you."

"It would only I cannot rid myself of the thought of what you have sacrificed to be here. Each day has plunged you deeper into this lawless barbarism."

"There is where my theory helps me. One's life has a general average. My life had no real value to me nor to any one else till I came west. Pleasures come to me now when I least expect them. That is a wonderful thing to me. I thought I had lost all power to vividly enjoy, but I haven't. So you see I am not accusing you or any one. I have only reason to be thankful, if only no harm comes to Louis or my friends here. I shall not complain."

"It is very sweet of you to try to lighten my sense of guilt," he replied gently. "But I cannot absolve myself so easily. I can understand your theory, but I cannot understand how you find a disappointment. You have everything to make you happy."

She went on: "I am by heritage a worker. I know that now. My father's people were active and calculating folk, and my life in the city was unnatural. I've been deliciously hungry and weary since I've been here—life seems restored to its balance. You have done me good—you and splendid old Matt and sweet Nora."

He sprang from his chair and faced her. "You mustn't talk to me so," he exclaimed, almost harshly. "I shall forget my promises and say forbidden words to you. You unseat all my good resolutions."

She heard, but ignored his passionate words. A sort of mental and spiritual recklessness had seized her. "All my life in the east and in the old world, everything in the past, seems gray, as if covered by a mist. The realities seem to be here. I feel grateful to

COPPERPLATE ENGRAVING.

The Art Was Discovered Through the Merest Accident.

Every one has noticed on his visiting card the extremely delicate lines of his name, and almost every one knows that they are produced by printing from an engraved copperplate. Like many other things of use and beauty, this art of copperplate engraving was discovered through the merest accident by the goldsmiths of Florence in the fifteenth century. It is a historical fact, however, that one day an engraver on gold, wishing to take a proof of his work, made the usual sulphur cast and then filled up the lines with lampblack, thus enabling him to see exactly how his work looked. While occupied in doing this it occurred to him that possibly the same results could be obtained by filling up the original engraving with lampblack instead of making an impression of it and filling up that. Struck with the idea, he put it into practical use, and with a little damp paper succeeded in getting a fair impression from the engraving.

The discovery was communicated to other workers in the art, and they hailed it with joy, as it saved all the arduous trouble of making sulphur casts, but they never saw the full value of the discovery, and consequently the art of plate engraving lay for almost a century before its true import was discovered and brought out in all its great and beautiful results. Today collectors of plate engravings rave over the crude results of earlier times and search the world for examples of these early masters to add to their collections. Many of these collections have been presented to museums, where they may be seen and appreciated by the people.

THE BEST SLEEP.

It Is That Which One Cannot Avoid Without a Struggle.

When debating the question, How much sleep is needed? one must keep in mind that the best sleep, indeed, the only healthy kind, is that which one cannot avoid without a struggle. It is the sleep that always follows on weariness; it is not that which is obtained by difficulty. If a person slept for three hours right away and then awoke refreshed—that is, with no further inclination to sleep—he would not then be in need of it. His proper course would be to arise and engage in work. But he must be prepared to sleep at any time in the day when the longing occurs. To the latter rule there is one exception. Let us suppose that one has acquired the habit of sleeping half the night and lying half awake during the remaining half. Such a habit can be best broken by rising after the first sleep and refraining from a nap in the day. When the bed hour arrives the chances are that the victim of insomnia will be so sleep hungry that he will not wake until the proper hour for rising.

In any case it is a great mistake to turn over on the other side and remain in a half conscious state. Indeed, it is a more serious mistake than many would believe, says Home Notes. The brain is now in a peculiar state, more closely resembling the hypnotic than would be possible under any other normal conditions. Quite a lot might be written about the peculiar dangers and powers of this half waking state.

Not to Be Found In the Reports.

A prominent Philadelphia lawyer was narrating to a younger advocate some of the delays and complications of a chancery suit in which he was engaged. "Bless me," said the junior advocate, "I never heard of anything parallel to that except Jarndyce versus Jarndyce." The other at once looked thoughtful and pretty soon, pleading an engagement, went off. The next morning he went into the younger man's office with an air of great vexation. "Look here!" he said. "Why can't you remember names accurately? Here I've spent the whole night trying to find that case of Jarndyce versus Jarndyce that you mentioned, and there isn't any such case in the Pennsylvania law reports at all!"

The Word "Papa."

For some time after the word "papa" was taken into the English language in the seventeenth century it was restricted to courtly and polite speech and was common even among adults. Long after it had become childish it was still accounted genteel. Hood wrote of one who was "genteelly taught to say, not father, but papa." "Papa" may be comparatively a newcomer into the English language, but it is as old as Homer. Nausicaa in the "Odyssey" calls her father "pappa phile"—dear papa.

Canals and Roads In France.

It is curious that the French, who have done more than most nations to cultivate the graces of life, should be the people to boast the most perfect system of canals and roads in the world; more curious still that, when most practical, they are still careful not to sacrifice the purely graceful or decorative. The roads and canals are built for use, but between their serried ranks of poplars they become so many stately groves and avenues, crossing the country from end to end.—Century.

Changed.

Nagsby—You're naturally pessimistic. I don't think I ever saw you look cheerful. Carsby—Ah, that's easily explained! Nagsby—How so? Carsby—You didn't know me before I was married!

Matrimony.

Matrimony resembles a pair of shears, so joined that they cannot be separated, often moving in opposite directions, yet always punishing any one who comes between them.—S. Smith.

THE ALAMEDA.

A Famous Park That Is the Pride of Mexico City.

Nearly every city thinks its own parks the most beautiful on the face of the earth. This pride it is that has given to Europe and America their magnificent recreation and pleasure grounds. The German points with pride at the Thiergarten in Berlin and cries, "Match it if you can!" Whereupon the Parisian and the Londoner act the showman, with a wealth of gestures, proclaiming their own achievements.

The New Yorker has his Central park shrine, with which Belle Isle, at Detroit; Fairmount park, at Philadelphia; Shaw's gardens, at St. Louis; Lincoln park, at Chicago, and a hundred others are constantly being compared. With such a host of competitors for world honors it would be a bold person who would claim for Mexico City's Alameda the first place. It can at least be said of the park, however, that it stands at the head in a land of riotous flowers and tropical growths.

We Americans who have heard a hundred times of the Alamo, at San Antonio, Tex., may associate that name with the Alameda, for alamo is the Spanish word for poplar, the tree that was first planted extensively in the Alameda. Just twenty-eight years before the landing at Plymouth rock the viceroy of Mexico, Don Luis de Velasco, asked that a sum should be appropriated by the city for making pleasure grounds.

The market place of San Hipolito was the most convenient for that purpose, so changes were immediately made, trees planted, fountains erected, flowers set out and a high inclosing wall built that was pierced by gateways. West of this park extended an open space known by the significant name of Plaza del Quemadero, or burning place. Here rose a broad stone platform where the victims of the inquisition were burned.

About the time of the American Revolution this torture platform was removed and the open space added to the Alameda, resulting in a tract containing some twenty-two acres, being nearly 1,500 feet long and about half as wide. Miles of walks wind in and out among the shady nooks and pass in their meanderings a garden for birds and playgrounds for children, as well as numerous statues and figures.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

A compliment is always exaggerated.

The trouble with the marriage list is that it has to be revised so often.

About the only consolation found in growing old is that there is always one who is older.

These people with a great deal of assurance are quite often right, much as we dislike them.

Hatred of the rich is not modern. Remember the Bible story about Dives and Lazarus and how the rich man was punished?

Every man must be his own doctor and decide what is best in his case. The doctors and philosophers do not agree on anything.

A hen never tries to spread her wings over her grown rooster size son to protect him, but you will see mothers who haven't as much sense as the hen.

The Russian Crown.

The crown used by the Russian czar resembles the dome formed patriarchal miter, which was a favorite shape among the Byzantines. Upon the summit appears a cross formed of five beautiful diamonds, which is also supported by a large spinel ruby, polished, but not faceted. This ruby and cross are supported by a foliated arch composed of eleven great diamonds and rising from the back and front of the base of the crown. On either side of this central arch is attached a hoop formed of thirty-eight large and perfect pearls. The spaces on either side of these arches are filled with leafwork and ornaments in silver, incrusted with diamonds, underlaid with the richest purple velvet. The band which forms the base of the crown is of gold and is ornamented with twenty-eight magnificent diamonds.

The Independent Farmer.

Buy a farm, young man. No matter how small it may be, buy a farm and prepare it so that your land will provide you a living. Twenty years from now the man who owns his own farm will be independent and will have at his command the means of a livelihood. The expansion of manufactures cannot go on forever, and there will come a day in this country, as there has in others, when the supply will exceed the demand and the only absolutely sure occupation will be farming. Buy a farm while one may be had.

Rome's Triumphal Crown.

The triumphal crown of Rome was made of laurel leaves and was given to the general who achieved a great victory over an enemy. He entered the city not by a gate, but over a portion of the wall which was thrown down to afford a passage. At his funeral his laurel crown was placed in his bier and buried with the body.

Teacher Disappears.

Quebec, July 30.—Miss Robertson, a school teacher from Goderich, Ont., has mysteriously disappeaerd. She had been on a visit to New Glasgow, N. S., and was on her way home. She was met in Quebec by her brother, and they put up at the Hotel Victoria. Friday when he went to call for his sister she was gone, and her purse and jacket she had taken also, though she left her satchel containing her railway ticket home.

Lunatic Jumps From Window.

London, July 30.—Walton Hastings of Wingham, incarcerated in St. Joseph's Hospital here, insane, with a special nurse to watch him, jumped from a two-storey window on Wednesday midnight and escaped. No effort has yet been made by that institution to capture him. It is not known yet whether or not he is drowned. The last seen of him he was running wildly along the bank of the North Thames.

Did Selwood Suicide?

Toronto, July 30.—George Selwood, a local real estate man, is dead. He was found in his bed at 210 West Richmond street on Saturday. Asphyxiation was the cause of death. Selwood was quiet, and about 55 years of age, and well-known. A warrant for an inquest has been issued. The circumstances point to suicide.

Fred Olmstead Suicides.

Windsor, July 30.—Fred Olmstead, who with his wife and family lived at the Crawford House here, committed suicide on Belle Isle Saturday morning by taking morphine. He left a note addressed "To Mother," in which he said, "This is my last day on earth." The cause for this act has not yet been established.

THE FACE ON THE CENT.

It Is Not That of an Indian, but of a Pretty Little Girl.

Mrs. Sarah Longacre Keen, who lived and died in Philadelphia, came nearer being the queen of the American mint than any woman who ever lived. With the exception of Queen Victoria, whose image was engraved on every coin of the British and Indian empires, Mrs. Keen was first in the number of her metal photographs. Her face as a girl of twelve summers is to be seen on every American cent issued since 1836 from Uncle Sam's coin factory.

It is usually assumed that the face on the head side of the copper is that of an Indian, but a close look will reveal a Saxon profile. Just borrow a cent and look at it. The setting is that of an Indian.

Between 1828 and 1840 James Barton Longacre was chief engraver in the United States mint in Philadelphia. In 1835 a competition was opened for sketches and engravings for the new copper cent that was to be issued and which has since been in service. There were over a thousand designs offered. The prize was a good one. Longacre racked his brain for some original and singular design that would strike the judges, but for months he failed to satisfy himself.

One morning a number of Indians, with their chief, who had been to pay their respects to the great white chief in Washington, came to the city and were shown through the mint. They were introduced to the white chief's picture maker, who was just then showing his young daughter Sarah the great concern. The old chief was attracted by the sweet faced maiden and her interest in his feathers and paint. She childishly wondered how she would look in the feathered headgear. This was told the chief, who solemnly divested himself of his feathers and had them placed on the girl's head. The effect was so striking that the father took time to make a sketch of the picture, finishing it afterward for his own amusement.

At the last moment of the period given for sending in engravings he bethought himself of the possibility of the combination of Indian feathers and Saxon sweetness. He got it in, and much sport was made of the child at the time in the city because of the incident. The sketch passed through the seventh sifting and finally reached the last round. By one vote it won, and ever since Sarah Longacre's young face has served for the humblest of coins, than which no single coin in the world has such tremendous circulation.

One Vain Wish.

The Wife—He told me that if I married him my every wish would be gratified. The Mother—Well, is it not so? The Wife—No; I wish I hadn't married him.

The nobler the blood the less the bride.—From the Danish.

SAID ABOUT WOMEN.

A flattered woman is always indulgent.—Chenier.

The test of civilization is the estimate of women.—Curtis.

Provided a woman be well principled she has dowry enough.—Plautus.

Beauty is the eye's food and the soul's sorrow.—German Proverb.

Divination seems heightened to its highest power in woman.—Bronson Alcott.

The more women have risked, the more they are willing to sacrifice.—Duclos.

Women are supernumerary when present and missed when absent.—Portuguese Proverb.

A termagant wife may in some respects be considered a tolerable blessing.—Washington Irving.

Some cunning men choose fools for their wives, thinking to manage them, but they always fail.—Johnson.

Telling the Time.

One of the accurate ways of telling the time is to use your hand as an hour mark. Nothing simpler. All farmers not possessed of watches or clocks and who have some practical notions of common utilities not invented by man, but given to us by the Creator, know the rule. It is necessary to keep in mind the hour of sunrise and sunset and to hold the arm straight out from the shoulder, with the hand at right angles, bending from the wrist forward. If the sun sets at 7 o'clock and is still high in the heavens close one eye and make three measures of the width of the palm near the thumb. Each measure means one hour. Three measures mean three hours, so that the time thus obtained is 7 less 3, or 4 o'clock. With practice you can beat the average watch.

Horses and Oil Cakes.

"Say, d'you know anything 'bout hosses, hey? D'ye know they'll eat pork? Well, they will when it's fed 'em an' they have to. The heaves stops subsequent, though they're an all fired sight wuss afterwards. Belle went right onto a meat diet, hog meat an' oil cakes. Yep, linseed oil—it'll fat a rail fence. Belle took on weight amazin'. Cur'us thing 'bout oil cakes, though. Once a hoss has been fatted on 'em an' then grows pickid ag'in there ain't nothin' in the world'll put flesh onto him a second time. You can try as much as you're mind to; it ain't no use."

Somniloquy.

Talking in sleep is more common than is generally supposed. Of 200 students between the ages of twenty and thirty 41 per cent of the men and 37 per cent of the women talked in their sleep, and most of them could answer questions.

True of Trouble.

"He's out of a job now. He had a good opportunity, but he didn't take the trouble to improve it."

"Yes, it's a funny thing about trouble, isn't it? If you don't take it you'll have it."

Col. Ponton Made An Eloquent Speech

AT THE BANQUET GIVEN IN HONOR OF THE VISIT OF THE COLONIAL DELEGATES TO LUTON.

The Luton, Eng., News, of July 13, just to hand, gives a lengthy and very interesting account of the visit of the Colonial delegates to that town, and of the luncheon held in connection with it. It was, we are told, a gala day in Luton, and the streets of the borough bore a festive appearance. Luton, it may be remarked parenthetically, has a world-wide reputation for the making of straw hats. Over three hundred guests were present at the luncheon. Col. Ponton was one of those selected to reply to the toast of 'Empire and Commerce.' As usual, our popular fellow-citizen rose to the occasion, his oratorical effort being witty, forceful and apropos. It is thus reported in the Luton News:

Colonel Ponton, of Belleville, Canada, responded to the toast, in the absence of the Hon. A. McRobert, of Cawnpore. He might say, he observed, in the words of Kipling,

"There is neither East nor West,
Border, nor breed, nor birth,
When good strong men meet face to face,
Tho' they come from the ends of the earth."

—(applause). They who came from the North, the South, and the East could unite in saying those lines whilst the glorious English sun shone upon so many fair women and brave men, and hundreds of hearts of the Empire beat happily. He could best express that feeling by voicing a heartfelt expression of the opinion of everyone there, and by testifying to their hearty and cordial appreciation of this bounteous English hospitality that they were now receiving and enjoying—(hear, hear). He hoped he might be pardoned an allusion to straws—(laughter). Straws showed which way the wind blew — (hear, hear.) Certainly the winds were blowing prosperous breezes towards Luton, radiating and developing commerce and trade. He hoped that that wind might long get into Luton with the same halcyon, prosperity and success. He might also claim that straw suggested strawberries—the grand luscious English strawberries of which Izaak Walton said with all reverence: 'The Lord might have made a better berry than the strawberry but doubtless the Lord never did"—(laughter). In that strain he might also say: "The Lord might have made a better country than England and a better county than Bedford, but doubtless the Lord never did" — (applause). The people of Luton had taken them not merely to their hearts, but had loved them with their heads and hearts. They appealed to the head through the hats on the head—(laughter.) They appealed to business and to the bosom. That was, where the silken chain of commerce combined with deeper ties of kinship to perfect a true Imperial link. He had served his time with the Militia of Canada — a part of the British Army — but as one from Canada he was there to say that peace had her victories no less renowned than those of war. He believed just as truly as in the old days war was a business just as truly business was war. Just as in the old days, trade followed the flag, now in these days the flag followed the trade to protect that trade and commerce and to bind together the greatest commercial Empire, the greatest civilizing force the world had ever seen. That flag floated in the beams of a ceaseless morning, and when they thought of beating round the world and echoing the martial strains of England, their hearts had responded, wherever they might be, and they had come to realize that there was one goal before them and one home summoned them — England, the heart of the Empire — (applause). Those who were privileged to live in England must remember that throughout the Empire there were pulses beating responsive to their heart-throbs. He was sure they would respond to his deep regret that the Hon. A. McRobert was not able to be present to respond as the representative of that oldest country in the world — India, that gave to the late Queen, that womanly Queen and queenly woman, the title of Empress, and that gave to King Edward the title of Emperor ambassador and peace-maker—(applause). Responding to that toast, he might say that they who had been in Westminster Abbey, in that temple of peace and reconciliation, had realized also that magnificent as the structure was, and magnificent as the material fabric of that Empire was, yet there were two fabrics, one wrought in all its parts with cunning works of art, the other part with ligaments that bound the human heart — (applause). He felt that those fibres of feeling had been strengthened by that visit of the Chamber of Commerce, not the least by that delightful personal touch and contact that it had been their privilege and pride to enjoy in the old Motherland. Out in the Colonies, wherever they were, England was home. In conclusion, he might say in the words of the Canadian poet:—

The ageless forces do not cease
To mould us as of yore,
The chiselling of the arts of peace,
The anvil strokes of war;
Great are we, make us greater yet,
Strong, make us stronger far;
Our feet Antarctic oceans fret,
Our crown the Polar Star.

—(applause).

Trenton Lad Was Drowned Yesterday

STOOD UP IN A BOAT AND LOST HIS BALANCE, ALSO HIS LIFE—BODY NOT YET FOUND.

A lad named George Stewart, aged 11 years, and a son of Mr. E. Stewart, of Trenton, was drowned in that town on Sunday afternoon.

It appears that young Stewart and two other boys were in a boat rowing about the Trent river, just west of the bridge, when he stood up in the boat and, in an attempt to throw something, lost his balance and fell overboard. He came up a short distance from the boat, but his companions were unable to reach him and he sank to rise no more.

The unfortunate affair was soon noised about and, although every effort was made to recover the body, it had not, up to noon today, been found.

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered at the morning service. In the evening the Pastor's subject was "The Way Home." His text was from Ecclesiastes, 12th chapter and a portion of the 5th verse;

"Because man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the street."

During the service Miss E. Price sang a solo "One Sweetly Solemn Thought,"

The Rector, Rev. R. C. Blagrave, officiated at both services yesterday. In the evening his subject was "Scripture Interpretation," and the text was from Romans, 9th chapter, 6th verse;

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

At the above church last night, the rector, Rev. A. M. Hubly, preached on the Apostle Paul, "Murderer, Minister and Martyr." During the offertory, a duet, "Light at Eventide," was very sweetly sung by Misses L. Hubly and Emily Watkin.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

SPORTING NOTES.

Lacrosse results on Saturday:—Tecumseh 6, Montreal 3; National 8, Toronto 4; Cornwall 5, Capitals 4.

George Towns, of Sydney, N.S.W., won back the title of world's champion sculler and also won $2,500 by defeating James Stanbury on the Paramatta River course, three miles and 330 yards, which he covered in 19.53 1-5. Towns won by twenty lengths.

There was a small-sized riot at the Toronto ball grounds after the game on Saturday. An enraged fan assaulted the umpire, but was himself badly done up by a wallop with the umpire's mask. Outside the grounds, the visiting team, Buffalo, taunted the crowd to fury, and one of the Bisons, named Hill, was biffed on the face with a pop bottle, being badly cut. What a Toronto crowd was doing with a pop bottle is not stated.

Visitors From Far-Off New Zealand

Mr. D. C. Mitchell, of Dunedin, New Zealand, was a caller at The Intelligencer office this morning. Mr. Mitchell and his wife (who is a sister of Mr. P. Harrison, of this office) have been travelling through the Old Country on a pleasure trip, and came to Canada to visit relatives and see how this portion of "His Majesty's Dominions beyond the seas" compared with New Zealand. So far Mr. Mitchell is delighted with what he has seen, and thinks Belleville one of the prettiest places in any land. Mr. Mitchell went to New Zealand some 35 years ago, and has seen his home city, Dunedin, grow from a collection of mud huts to a city of stately buildings, wide streets and metropolitan up-to-dateness. Some of the views he shows made one realize that the land "down under," as inhabitants of the Antipodes love to call it, will take a lot of beating. Mr. Mitchell was delighted to meet Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who, having visited Australia and New South Wales, was able to converse with him concerning the Antipodes and its public men. Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell will tour Canada and New York state before sailing for England to embark for home. Mr. Mitchell is a produce merchant in Dunedin, but talks nonchalently of a little bunch of ten thousand sheep he owns "in the bush."

Who Stole Fred Clement's Ticker?

ROBERT RICHARDSON, A YOUNG ENGLISHMAN, ARRESTED ON SUSPICION.

On Tuesday last, Mr. Fred Clement, an employee of the G. T. R., had a watch and chain stolen from him. It appears that he was engaged upon the pilot engine, and, whilst absent about half an hour for dinner, the timepiece was taken from his vest, which was left hanging in the cab of the engine.

A young Englishman named Robt. Richardson, who was about where the engine stood at the time, was arrested on suspicion of being the party who took the watch.

Richardson, when questioned by the police, told different stories alleging that he had seen some other party near the engine during Clement's absence. As yet there has been no trace of the missing timepiece.

This morning Richardson was brought up before the Magistrate and remanded to jail for a week.

It will be remembered that, two weeks ago, Richardson was arrested on a charge of taking a horse and buggy from a shed in rear of a city hotel. He was then allowed to go and ordered to leave the city.

Poisoned by Eating Canned Meat

The many friends in this city of Mr. and Mrs. David Strachan (nee Cook), who were married here in May last and left at once for Winnipeg, where they now reside, will be sorry to hear of a mishap which recently befel the young couple. It seems they had been partaking of canned meat, and shortly afterwards were both seized with symptoms of ptomaine poisoning. Prompt medical attendance probably saved their lives. Mrs. Starchan was out of danger before her husband, who for a time looked as though he were about to "shuffle off this mortal coil." Both recovered, however, but will probably shun canned meat for some little time in the future.

QUARREL OVER A DOLLAR

Leads to Probably Fatal Stabbing at Hamilton.

George Gerrie May Die From Several Wounds Over the Heart, Whose Covering Is Torn—He Was Also Bitten by His Assailant, Who Claims He Did the Stabbing in Self-Defence—Anti-Mortem Statement Taken.

Hamilton, July 30.—George Gerrie, a builder's laborer, who hails from Oakville was stabbed, probably fatally, Saturday night, by Charles Cook, in a quarrel over $1. It took place at their boarding house 53 North John street, and each man had his own version. Cook was immediately placed under arrest. His story is that Gerrie owed him $1 and he went to Gerrie's room to collect it. Some words passed and Cook says that Gerrie went to strike him.

Cook had a jackknife in his hand cutting tobacco, and he claims that he stabbed Gerrie in self-defence. When Dr. McCabe was called in he found that Gerrie had several wounds. The most serious was the one over the heart. The blade of the knife struck a rib and glanced over tearing the covering of the heart. He was also bitten on the shoulder, and one hand was painfully cut.

His condition was considered so critical Saturday night that Crown Attorney Washington took ante-mortem statement. His story is that he ordered Cook out of his room, but that Cook bit him on the shoulder and stabbed him.

Cook, the prisoner, is an Englishman, about 27 years old. He came from Birmingham about two months ago. Gerrie, the wounded man is 25 years of age, and has relatives in Toronto and Oakville.

KILLS WIFE WITH AN AXE.

Man Then Cuts His Throat and Jumps Into the River.

Digby, N. S., July 30.—Avard Morine, a laborer of Bear River, killed his wife Saturday morning with a hatchet and then, after cutting his own throat with a razor, rushed to the river and threw himself in, drowning before a rescue could be affected.

About a year ago, Morine contracted typhoid fever, and since his recovery has been mentally unbalanced.

About 5.30 o'clock Saturday morning Morine's 6-year-old son, says Morine came into the room making a great noise by which he was awakened. His father attacked his mother in bed with a hatchet, striking at her viciously. The unfortunate woman finally managed to get clear of the bed-clothing, only to be pursued by her frenzied husband brandishing the hatchet.

At this time the lad found his voice and shouted to his father to cease hurting his mother, and getting from his bed succeeded in taking the hatchet from the man, but not before the latter had inflicted an ugly cut on his throat in an attempt at suicide.

Meanwhile Mrs. Morine had succeeded in dragging her bleeding body from the room and reached that of her mother-in-law, and then fell dead.

Morine then rushed from the house and crossing the road, plunged into the river. Edward Morine, brother of the man, attempted to effect a rescue, but Avard was determined not to be saved, and by the time Edward was able to get to him life was extinct.

Morine's insanity also showed itself in jealousy of his wife. She was 40 years old and very handsome.

Fatal and Wanton Shooting.

Huntingdon, Que., July 30.—Saturday night a shooting affray took place at the little hamlet of Cazaville. Some thirty farmers and laborers had gathered about the hotel, among them Ernest Lee, a son of the late Patrick Lee of Lee's Corners, and Jean B. Leroi. A slight disturbance arose. Lee, who had the insane habit of carrying a revolver, drew his weapon, and after firing two shots diagonally across the road, turned and deliberately leveled it at the breast of Leroi, who was within five feet of him when he fired, the bullet passing through the left side of Leroi's heart. At daylight Sunday morning Dale Laurin, bailiff, went to Lee's home, where he found him in bed asleep. He was placed under arrest. Young Leroi was 21 years of age. Lee was about the same age, and heretofore bore a good character.

Montreal, July 30.—Michael Gagnon, 55 years of age, supposed to be harmless and of unsound mind for years, shot and killed his mother, 75 years old, at their residence, Papineau road, and then, turning the gun on himself, fell dead, shot to the heart.

CIVIL WAR VERY SOON

To Ripen in Six Weeks Under Campaign of Education.

Russian Proletariat Organizations, Backed by All the Political Parties, Are Preparing For the Struggle Which Must Come—A Million Copies of Viborg Manifesto Circulated Through Underground Channels.

St. Petersburg, July 30.—It is evident that the proletoriat organizations' refusal to accept the challenge at this time upon grounds of the Government's choosing, does not mean that it is not their intention to give battle later.

Indeed the proletariat organizations, backed by all the political parties, including the Group of Toil, Social Democrats, Social Revolutionists and the Peasnats' League, have thrown themselves into the campaign of agitation for a simultaneous general strike, to be followed by a rising in the cities and the country, although the time is not propitious for the peasantry, as the country is in the midst of the harvest season.

The leaders believe that a month or six weeks at most will suffice to bring about a general strike, and they confidently expect that their campaign will be aided by the universal repressions to which the Government will be compelled to resort in its policy of open war against revolution.

The Constitutional Democrats are holding aloof, fearing to throw in their lot with their former allies, who see nothing ahead but red revolution, yet they are ready if the masses rise, and the Government fails to seize the usufruct victory.

Stolypin Meets Obstacles.

New obstacles have been encountered by Premier Stolypin in his efforts to secure the services in a reorganized cabinet of men of standing in Russia outside of official life. The conditions laid down by M. Guchkoff and Prince Lvoff are understood to have been rejected and that they have definitely refused to enter the Ministry.

Distributing the Manifesto.

Over a million copies of a manifesto to the army, navy, peasants and workmen, which was adopted yesterday and already has been printed at Viborg and St. Petersburg, have been started into the interior through underground revolutionary channels.

It has been learned that almost the determining factor for the postponement of a rising was the information that many of the fresh troops who had been introduced into St. Petersburg and Moscow, were strangers to the revolution propaganda, having been carefully selected for this reason.

TRAINS ROBBED IN POLAND.

In Skirmish High Officers in the Army Are Killed.

Warsaw, July 30.—Two daring train robberies were committed in Russian Poland Saturday, one of them resulting in considerable loss of life.

A train from the frontier station Herby, bound for Czenstochowa, was carrying money received from the customs house to the branch of the Imperial Bank under protection of seven frontier guardsmen. Gen. Zukat, chief of the frontiers guards; Gen. Weltenring, chief of the customs service of Warsaw, and Col. Brazezicki and Capt. Laguma were passengers.

Fifteen persons boarded the train at a way station. They evidently had been waiting for it and made an attack on the guardsmen, who were reinforced by the officers named. A skirmish followed, in which the two generals, two officials, five soldiers and one robber were killed, and Col. Bruzezicki and one robber wounded. All the wounded and dead were taken to Czenstochowa. The robbers escaped, taking $60,000 and the arms of those who had attempted to defend the train against robbery.

G[illegible] $37,500.

The second robbery was committed Saturday night on the Warsaw-Vienna Railway, six miles from Warsaw. While the train was under way, unknown persons pulled the danger signal, causing it to stop. Robbers, who were aboard, jumped out and seized the locomotive and detached the mail car from the train and ran it down the line. They secured $37,500 of Government money.

The Soldiers and Sailors

Appealed to by Outlawed Douma to Stand by the People.

Any Man Who Shoots at the People Is a Criminal, a Traitor and an Enemy of the People—Their Sacred Duty Is Not to Obey Commands of Illegal Government But to Defend Parliament and Free Russia.

St. Petersburg, July 31.—The text of the appeal to the army and navy adopted July 27 by the Radical groups of the outlawed Parliament, in conjunction with the central committees of the proletariat organizations is in part as follows:

"Soldiers and sailors, the Government has by Imperial command dissolved Parliament and troops have been assembled from all sides to oppress the people by armed force. The people's representatives were elected from among your fathers and brothers in order to lay before the Emperor the needs of the people and to obtain lands and liberty. But the Emperor would not listen to the elected of the people. He harkened to his former councillors, the grand dukes, Ministers, generals and the wealthiest of the land owners, who did not want to give up their lands, their properties, their emoluments, and their irresponsible power.

Russia Divided Against Itself.

"Russia is now divided into two parts. On one side is the vast majority—all the peasants and workmen, all the poor and oppressed, the best educated and the most enlightened citizens, the soldiers who see the most clearly, the best officers and all the martyrs in the jails, including many thousands of soldiers and sailors. On the other side is a collection of oppressors, such as Trepoff, Pobiedonostseff and the Mancherian generals, who ran away from the Japanese, but who fired on the people at Moscow and Odessa and Tchita; the petty Government officials, the police spies and the whole black hundreds, and there rely on your strength to beat down the whole Russian people. Will you shoot the people, shed the blood of the people and transfix the people's breasts with bayonets? Remember that you are the children of peasants, that you are the children of the Russian people, and that at the same time in the villages where you were born your own brothers who are remaining home are also agitating, are also demanding land and liberty, and that the Government is sending other troops to shoot and beat them.

Declare Government Illegal.

"Soldiers and sailors, we, the legally elected representatives of the peasants and workingmen, declare to you that without Parliament the Government is illegal. Orders, which is may now issue have no legal force. We call on you to cease to obey the illegal Government and actively to oppose it in conjunction with us, and the whole of the poor population. You have taken an oath to defend the fatherland. Stand beside us for land and liberty.

"Any man who shoots at the people is a criminal, a traitor and the enemy of the people. We inform all such, in the name of their fathers and brothers, that over their names will hang the eternal curse of the people.

"Soldiers and sailors, your sacred duty is to free the Russian people from the treacherous Government and defend Parliament. Every man falling in this holy war will cover himself with eternal fame, and the Russian people will bless his name. In this struggle your elected representatives will be with you. Be brave for the fatherland, for the people and for land and liberty against the criminal Government."

To Support Uprising.

Premier Stolypin has issued a special circular to the governors, instructing them to employ every means to compel the payment of the taxes now falling due, as well as the arrearages.

The central committee of the Social Democrats has been hastily summoned here from the provinces. It has been formally decided to support the action of the revolutionary groups last week in pushing the agitation for a general strike and uprising.

Marked Men.

Yekaterinslav, Russia, July 31.—The foreign consuls at Yekaterinslav have made representations to their Governments regarding the necessity for protecting foreign subjects, three foreign managers of mills having been attacked during the past week.

Fire and Pillage.

A mob of 200 workmen completely gutted a brewery at St. Petersburg Monday night. Before a detachment of Cossacks sent to disperse them arrived the men destroyed practically everything.

Three large estates in the vicinity of Samara were destroyed Monday night. The peasants are cutting the wood on both the crown and private forests.

A band of 200 peasants has burned the manor house and stock stables belonging to Nasymoff, president of the District of Zemstvo, and subsequently entered the neighboring village and sacked the spirit stores.

The Brodski grain elevators at Kiev have been destroyed by fire, involving a loss of $1,500,000.

It is officially announced from Warsaw that the loss resulting from the robbery of the Warsaw-Vienna train between Czenstochowa and Herby, July 28, amounts to $86,000.

Bomb-Thrower Arrested.

Odessa, July 31.—The police yesterday arrested 50 employes of the customs house who were on strike.

An Anarchist yesterday threw a bomb into a shop here and wounded a clerk. The bomb-thrower was arrested.

Shot Down.

Warsaw, July 31.—M. Burago, the leading official of the Sochatchev district and a policeman who was escorting him, were shot dead by revolutionists near here yesterday, in revenge for the part they had taken in the repression of the agrarian stike movement.

Will Prosecute Members.

St. Petersburg, July 31.—The public prosecutor has started proceedings against the members of the lower House of Parliament who signed the Viborg manifesto.

The charge under which the signers of the manifesto will be brought to trial is violation of article 129 of the criminal code, which provides for "attempts to overthrow the existing Government."

This is virtually high treason, the maximum penalty for which is hard labor in the mines.

No arrests yet have been reported, and the Constitutional Democrats do not anticipate anything approaching punishment of their representatives. It is understood the arrested members will be admitted to bail pending the trial.

Sage's Gift to Wife.

New York, July 31.—In connection with the reports of possible contests of the will of Russell Sage, a story was circulated yesterday to the effect that Mr. Sage gave $10,000,000 to his wife shortly before his death.

The Transvaal.

Kipling's stirring verses, quoted in another column, are calculated to arouse national attention to the political crisis which undoubtedly exists in South Africa, says the London Free Press. The promise of responsible government unconditionally, if carried out by the "C. B." Government would mean handing over the public administration to the Boer element which ruled in Kruger's time so oppressively to the Uitlanders." It would be a repetition of "the shame of Majuba Hill," namely, the capitulation to Paul Kruger immediately following that disaster to a handful of British soldiers, and while a sufficient force was on the march to retrieve the day. Mr. Gladstone's supineness of that day was the cause of all the misery for twenty years, culminating in the late war in the Transvaal.

The question raised is shall England throw away the fruits of the campaign which cost so much blood and treasure? After winning by the bravery of her sons and the sons of the colonial empire, control of the Boer provinces, after spending so many millions to plant justice and enlightenment in place of tyranny and ignorance, will England hand back to the conquered race the keys of those liberties which they had misused?

At the annual meeting of the Imperial South African Association in London lately, Lord Robert Cecil remarked that there could not be any doubt that they were face to face with very serious questions at least which in gloomier moments they might well think to be isoluble. There was the question of the constitutional government of those colonies, labor in those colonies, and the native question, which, perhaps, was the most important of all. Those were very serious and difficult questions, and it would tax all the statesmanship of England, great as he thought it to be, to solve them satisfactorily and well. It could only be done by the co-operation of men of all parties.

At a dinner given at the Hotel Cecil in the evening, Mr. Walter Long, responding to the toast, "The friends of South Africa," said that great colonial questions should not be treated in a party spirit. At the same time, the attack on Lord Milner, and the friction which arose in Natal, could not but create a feeling of mistrust. He was glad, however, to believe that a better state of things was now beginning to appear. It was the duty of everybody in South Africa and at home to do everything they could to strengthen and maintain that better state of opinion. But it would be an act of cowardice if the party to which he belonged surrendered or abandoned one jot the position they held when in office. They had always believed that the sacrifice of money and men that had been made in South Africa ought not to be made in vain, and whilst they welcomed representative government, it was necessary, and it was the duty of statesmen to see that in South Africa British supremacy was maintained.

SPRINGBROOK.

Miss Lillie McConnell returned to her home Sunday after a two weeks visit with friends in Campbellford. She was accompanied on her return by Miss Edna Nancarrow.

Mrs Charles Lott returned to her home in Campbellford on Sunday after spending the past week with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. David Heath.

The lawn social held on the church grounds on Thursday evening was a decided success. The grounds were very artistically arranged. The ice cream booth was the special attraction with its pretty green boughs, the lights and quartette tables, and young ladies as waitresses dressed in white, gave us a glimpse of fairyland. The receipts of the evening were close to $80.

The next meeting of the Rawdon Council will be held the first Monday in August.

The last meeting of the Woman's Institute was held at the Town Hall, Harold. Quite a number were present. The next meeting will be the last Wednesday in August at Springbrook. The subject will be Ice, its sources and dangers; Its usefulness in the family in health and illness.

A large number of our esteemed fellow-citizens are on their vacations just now, and a much larger number would like to be.

Talking of race suicide, the flies don't seem to believe in it, do they?

A party asks why it is, with so many automobiles in town, so few of them are seen on Front St. Probably the roadway is so bad that the motorists don't want to risk their lives on it.

• • •

The coolest place in this here town

A Chicago man tried to serenade a girl and she threw hot water on him Served him right. It must be an awful thing to be waked up these hot nights after a body has once got asleep.

A seasonable story is told by a West Belleville man. The other evening, he says, a man came to his back door, and in broken English asked for a cup of tea. He had food for his supper, he said, but was suffering for tea. He was given a seat and a cup of the beverage which cheers but does not inebriate. He finished it and looked longingly at the teapot. "More?" said the host. "Sure!" said the guest. This brief conversation was repeated till the visitor had drank six cups of fairly warm tea, and by that time he was perspiring like a watering cart. He went out to the gate with drops of sweat rolling off his chin. It makes the West Belleville man warm every time he thinks of the incident. Six cups of hot tea after a day of 90 in the shade!

"A Grumbler" writes: "Why is it, that the band concert was held on Monday night this week, when we were told some time ago that Tuesday was to be the night in future? Some people make arrangements in advance to go down and have tea at the park, afterwards waiting for the concert. I don't think the plans should be changed so brusquely, without due notice being given."

• • •

Comparisons are often made between the roadways of this country and those of England, very much, of course, to the advantage of the former. The comparison, as the Brockville Times points out, is hardly fair for three reasons: Canada is a very young country: it has thousands of miles of roadway to look after where England has only hundreds: and Canada has frosts which make it much harder to keep our roads in good shape. But nevertheless Canada should make a start. It is quite possible to construct roads on scientific principles which will withstand the frosts of Canada and prove economical in the end. A new road-making material known as tar slag macadam is now being used with the greatest success and it is said to be very little affected by frost. The material is made, as its name implies, from tar, slag from smelting furnaces and ordinary macadam. This material is clean and is better than asphalt inasmuch as it is not slippery.

Would it not be a wise thing to lay a section of this material on Front St? The roadway could, no doubt, be laid here at small expense. Mr. McKinnon, the Canadian Commercial Agent at Bristol, England, will forward full particulars of this new road material to any municipality which desires to test it. Here's a chance for some Chairman of Public Works to immortalize himself.

Peterboro Review: Belleville has a generous and philanthropic citizen in the person of Mr. Henry Corby, ex-M. Mr. Corby's latest evidence of liberality is in purchasing the Merchants bank building in Belleville at a cost of $6,000. He will make extensive alterations to this structure, which will be fitted up as a public library. The premises are admirably located for such an institution and the citizens are well pleased with the arrangements that have been made.

TOO BIG TO PARADE.

BARNUM & BAILEY CONTINUE SUCCESSFUL EXPERIMENT OF ELIMINATING STREET PAGEANTS.

A circus that is "too big to give a street parade" is a novelty even in these days of colossal enterprises and mammoth amusement institutions. But that is the announcement of the Barnum & Bailey circus, which exhibits in Belleville, August 8th.

In speaking of the reasons for this striking innovation, a representative of the big show said recently; "The Barnum & Bailey circus has become so large that a parade is no longer possible or even desirable. If we could be absolutely sure of getting into town by daybreak, the parade would still be feasible, but with our five long trains of cars, this is too much to expect of the railroad companies. In many instances it is 8 or 9 o'clock before the last section arrives, and 10 o'clock before it is unloaded and the paraphernalia transferred to the show grounds. This leaves just sufficient time to erect the big tents and prepare for the afternoon performance. To take several hundred men away from the show grounds at the most critical time in the morning, in order to give a parade, would mean delay in opening, and consequent discomfort to the public. To compel thousands of people to stand out in front of the entrance, in the hot sun or rain, because the giving of the parade has delayed the opening for an hour or more, is positively cruel; but there is frequently no help for it when parades are given. By eliminating the parade the public is also saved a long and often uncomfortable wait on the streets pending the always more or less delayed procession, which at best has nothing new to offer, to say nothing of the interference with public traffic and the business of the city's merchants. Many municipal governments have recognized the latter facts by either refusing to give licenses for parades, or by making the tax so high as to be prohibitive. Street parades were all right when circuses were small, and were necessary from an advertising standpoint. The Barnum & Bailey show is too well-known to need advertising of this character, and instead of wasting time and energy on a conventional street display, every effort is concentrated upon the performance."

The experiment of cutting out the parade was tried in this country for the first time last season, and the circus man was asked what effect the innovation had upon the business of the big show.

"If anything, it helped the patronage," was the reply. "The necessity for eliminating the parade because of the magnitude of the show was generally recognized, and the public was anxious to see a show that was actually too big to give a procession. Before the advent of the show in some of the Western cities there were some unfavorable comments regarding the 'no parade' feature, even in the press; but after the public and the newspaper men saw the performance, noticed the increased vim and ginger that was installed into it because the performers and animals were not overworked, and the greater enjoyment of the people because they had not been worn out by a long period of tiresome waiting, there was but one verdict, and that was that the elimination of the parade was a success from every standpoint."

The Barnum & Bailey circus is the only one that has had the courage to cut out the parade. Another well-known showman, when asked if his show would follow suit, replied: "I would like to, but I can't. The Barnum & Bailey circus is the only one that is big enough to do it." And it is evident that it has introduced this innovation in the circus world because the show gives popular satisfaction without the aid of what is at best a conventional display of so-called pageantry.

The absence of the parade is more than compensated for by this year's big arenic acts and "thrillers." There are a number of big sensations, and the structural steel used in these startling acts alone utilizes the carrying capacity of several railroad cars. Incidentally, it is announced that a splendid free show will be given on the exhibition grounds daily at 11 and 5 o'clock, by Prince Youturkey, a remarkable performer on an elevated wire-cable.

ST. PETER'S TOMB.

NOTED ARCHAEOLOGIST THROWS DOUBT ON ITS EXISTENCE.

New York, July 30.—Catholic intellectual circles the world around have been stirred by an open letter addressed to Pope Pius X., calling on him to open the tomb of St. Peter at Rome and settle for all time the curious gossip that, if such a tomb exists, it will be found to contain nothing. The New York Freeman's Journal published the full text of the letter to-day. The letter is signed by a person who styles himself Marcellus of the Old Stones. He is believed to be a noted Italian archaeologist.

"For fifteen years or more there have been doubts in archaeological circles as to whether there is a tomb where the famous monument of Michael Angelo stands, and where pontiffs for centuries have knelt in prayer before taking up the burden of governing the Catholic church.

"But no one has been bold enough to publish a letter calling on the reigning pontiff to excavate and so settle the doubts. Marcellus declares, crisfly, that there is no tomb, or, if such a thing exists, it will be found to have been desecrated.

"This," he says, "is the belief of the foremost archaeologists of Europe. There is still a doubt, and to settle the minds of all and in the interests of science, it is the duty of the Holy Father to order an excavation."

Marcellus' letter has drawn no response from the Pope, but two of the most distinguished archaeologists in the Catholic church, Prof. Marucchi and the Jesuit, Father Grisar, declare Marcellus is wrong, that there is a tomb, and that the body of the first of the apostles is there.

Father Grisar and Prof. Marucchi, however, and Mgr. Barnes, another eminent archaeologist, agree with Marcellus that the tomb should be opened in order that the doubters should be convinced.

This Building Will Pierce the Clouds.

New York, July 30.—'Cloud-piercer'—that is the name invented to describe the building of which the foundations are now being laid at the corner of Liberty street and Broadway "Sky-scraper was too commonplace a term for this 41-story monster. It is in a class by itself, a class far beyond anything ever known before in the "sky-scraping" line. Its 41 stories will tower to a height of 612 feet, topping the Washington monument by fifty-seven feet.

The tallest building in New York city at the present time is the Park Row building, which is made up of 29 stories, with a height of 382 feet. This great height was reached by a gradual evolution in building construction which began in 1384, when the Tower building of twelve stories was put up at No. 50 Broadway under the direction of Bradford L. Gilbert. This was regarded as a marvel in its day and everybody was skeptical about the ability of the new wonder to stand alone.

When it is borne in mind that the Singer building is to be but 60 feet square, the problem of securing a firm foundation for the 600 feet of steel and masonry towering aloft grows apace. According to a careful estimate by the engineer in charge of the building the steel skeleton alone will weigh 10,000 tons.

With the engineering difficulties of getting the great Singer building up and then making it stay there out of the way, the question of the fire hazard still remains. If any of the great sky-scrapers should go up in flames it would necessarily mean the loss of a great many lives, not to speak of dollars and cents.

In the really fireproof building, such as the 41-story "cloud-piercer" is to be, the steel skeleton is surrounded and protected by hollow tile. In the making these hollow brick have been subjected to a heat of 2500 degrees. They neither crumble nor burn when subjected to any heat less than this, and as the hottest fire temperatures rarely run over 1500 degrees, and hollow tiling is the most efficient protection obtainable for a building where human life must be protected.

Canadian Canned Meats are all Right.

DOMINION ANALYSIST MAKES AN IMPORTANT REPORT.

Ottawa, July 30.—When public perturbation over the Chicago packing house revelations was at its height, the Minister of Agriculture directed an investigation to be instituted into the Canadian meat packing establishments, and also asked that an analysis be made of all canned meats sold in this country. The packing house enquiry has not yet been reported upon, but the chief analyst of the Inland Revenue Department has submitted the result of the examination of canned meat products sold throughout the Dominion. Mr. Macfarlane's report is addressed to the Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, Mr. W. J. Gerald, and is as follows;

"In accordance with your instructions of 11th and 12th June last, a collection of canned meats was made as they are offered for sale in the Dominion. These included not only goods packed in Canada, but also about an equal number of samples as put up by manufacturers in the United States. The latter were of course obtained from dealers in Canada, but, as regards Canadian products, they were taken not only from retailers and wholesale merchants, but also at the factories. The samples were obtained in the course of June and July, the number from the various inspection districts being as follows: Nova Scotia 32, Prince Edward Island 16, New Brunswick 27, Quebec 33, St. Hyacinthe 32, Montreal 32, Ottawa 32, Kingston 24, Toronto 32, London 20, Manitoba 10, British Columbia 32; total 322.

"With reference to their examination in this laboratory, it may be stated that the manner of testing them was the same as referred to in bulletin No. 85. On opening the tins it was noted as to whether the meats appeared to be fresh and destitute of any disagreeable odor, and they were tested as to whether any preservatives had been used in packing them. Only four samples out of the total collection were found to give evidence of decomposition, a proportion amounting only to 1.4 per cent. The preservatives sought for were salicylic, benzoic, sulphurous and boric acids, but only the last named was detected in a comparative small number of samples, and in quantity not exceeding the limit fixed by the English Parliamentary Commission, of 0.5 per cent., and probably added in the shape of borax. There were 51 such samples among the 322 collected, or 15.8 per cent. This proportion is less than in the collection of 1903, when the proportion of samples containing borax amounted to 21.2 per cent.

"Full details regarding the nature and origin of the samples examined are given in the tabulated statement appended to this report. Since its completion, however, my attention has been called to the number for June, 1906, of the Monthly Bulletin of the State Board of Health of Massachusetts, in which there is a report on canned meats with the following statement; 'In general it may be said that the results are favorable to the manufacturers both in the west and in the east; but, certain preparations, the manufacture of which involves comminution of grinding, are very largely fraudulent in character, in that they are not what they purport to be. These preparations include the various potted tongues, chicken, beef and ham, and devilled chicken, turkey, ham and tongue.' Some of these are said to contain corn meal, for which no search was made in the samples described in this report. Since its preparation is desired with all possible despatch, I do not propose to delay it any longer, but intend to refer to the subject of such adulterated potted goods in a future report."

WICHITA MAN SWEARS OFF FOR GOOD AFTER HIS EXPERIENCE.

One Wichita man has sworn off and sworn off with a vengeance. And no one will be surprised on hearing his story. "Tanking up" one day last week, he "butted into" his employer on East Douglas avenue.

"Well, now, what's the matter with you?" asked the employer as the "half-shot" workman brought his hand to his right check with a ludicrously agonizing expression on his face.

"Got an awful toothache," answered the laborer, who, like most intoxicated ones, had but one idea, that of disguising his condition.

The employer looked at him critically for a moment. What he mentally decided the employer doesn't know till this day, but he will never forget the terribleness of his next words;

"Well, come with me and we will have it pulled out."

John Barleycorn had left enough pride in him to despise the entrapped liar, and he immediately decided to be game and stay until the distracting finish.

Without question the dentist took his forceps, and, being directed to one of the molars as the one that ached, he swung on, then around, then up and down, and finally, with a swing of the body which all but landed him on the floor, extracted the fine, large, sound tooth. When the employee quit bleeding, about three hours after, he took the pledge.—Wichita Eagle.

INTERIOR DECORATING

That's Our Business

And we keep an experienced staff of workmen busy the year round.

True we do outside painting also, but we give preference to decorating.

We have been so busy with our interior work this year that we have found it impossible to do much exterior work.

The service we render our customers is par excellent—better far than is found elsewhere—we have the materials and the methods—have the ideas and the designs. This is why we have so much decorative work continually ahead of us.

Most people understand that we do better work and use better materials than is usually used by painters. This is another reason for our everlasting busy-ness.

We use white lead in all our work absolutely better than any other lead that can be found and superior to anything carried on sale in Belleville—and we can prove it. Work with this lead will wear longer by 40 per cent and look as much better.

Lawn socials is the order of amusement at present.

Miss Blanche Hunter is the guest of the Misses Bailey.

Mr. Norman Johnson had a runaway last week while at work in the field with a rake. In their wild parade the horses capsized the rake, but fortunately were caught before much damage was done.

Mrs. Jas. Bailey spent a few days last week with friends in Lakefield.

Miss Maggie Brown, of Thurlow, has returned home after spending a pleasant time at the home of Mr. R. Scott.

Mr. Geo. Bailey lost a valuable cow last week.

Mr. Caleb Lloyd had his clothes badly torn and was also bitten by our storekeeper's dog. Such furious animals should be tied up in a back yard.

Miss Osborne, of Melrose, has been engaged as teacher for this school.

Mrs. Earl Bailey, in company with three young ladies, went in search of berries. All went well till they were returning home when the horse became unmanageable upsetting the rig and throwing the occupant out spilling their hard-earned labor. Fortunately the ladies escaped uninjured

Mrs. W. Broadworth spent Thursday at Mr. S. Armstrong's.

A large number of our young people took in the excursion to the 1000 Islands on Saturday last.

A very interesting lecture was given in the town hall here on Wednesday afternoon by some of the Institute ladies.

1000 ISLANDS AND ROCHESTER.

FULLER.

We are glad to report that Mrs. Richard Fryant, of New Jersey City, is among us once more. She intends staying a month in this vicinity.

Miss Maude Burke is spending this week visiting friends in Wellington.

Mrs. Chas. Ketcheson, of Moira, and Mrs. William Richardson, of Toronto, were the guests of Mrs. L. J. Burke on Monday last.

Miss Blanche Hallett, of Thomasburg, was the guest of Miss Sarah Hollinger on Tuesday last.

It is hoped that the "Sunday evening work seekers" will soon think it would be more gentlemanlike if they would stay in their homes.

Misses Lydia and Laura McCumber are on the sick list with the grip.

TIMELY TOPICS.

KIPLING'S LATEST.

The shame of a Majuba Hill
Lies heavy on our line,
But there is shame completer still,
And England makes no sign,
Unchallenged, in the Market-place
Of Freedom's chosen Land,
Our rulers pass our rule and race
Into the stranger's hand.

At a great price you loosed the yoke
'Neath which our brethren lay,
Your dead that perished ere 'twas broke
Are scarcely dust to-day.
Think you ye freed them at that price?
Wake, or your toil is vain!
Our rulers jugglingly devise
To sell them back again.

Back to the ancient bitterness
Ye ended once for all;
Back to oppression none may guess
Who have not borne its thrall.
Back to the slough of their despond
Helots anew, held fast
By England's seal upon the bond
As helots to the last.

What is their sin that they are made
Rebellion's lawful prey?
This is their sin, that oft betrayed
They did not oft betray.
That to their hurt they kept their vows,
That for their faith they died,
God help the children of our House
Whom England hath denied!

But we—what god shall turn our doom?—
What blessing dare we claim
Who slew a nation in the womb
To crown a trickster's game?
Who come before amazed mankind,
Forsworn in party feud,
And search the forms of law to bind
Our Blood to servitude?

Now, even now, before men learn
How near we broke our trust,
Now, even now, ere we return
Dominion to the dust.
Now, ere the gates of mercy close
Forever 'gainst the line
That sells its sons to serve its foes
Will England make no sign?

To study conditions among working girls, Miss Louise Bosworth, daughter of Alfred Bosworth, a wealthy capitalist, recently engaged herself as waitress for the summer season at the Mount Pleasant hotel, Bretton Woods, in the White Mountains of New Hampshire. When it became known that she was the daughter of one of Elgin's most wealthy citizens, Miss Bosworth left for Wellesley College, where she is a junior. Relatives say she desired to gain experience to use in connection with her studies in social economy.

Short sermons on hot days are appreciated, and should be the rule in all churches. A Toronto paper tells of a church in that city where the hot weather last Sunday made no difference in the length of the service, though it did finally, in the size of the congregation. The preacher went on to his 'fourthly' and 'fifthly' as coolly as if it were mid-winter instead of mid-summer, and when he got to his 'fifthly' the congregation had so dwindled in numbers that one wondered if history was going to repeat itself and the preacher have the same experience as another dominie in a kirk in Scotland. There, also, it was mid-summer, and the sermon was long drawn out. The congregation wearied of the sermon and the atmosphere of the church, left one by one, until there were only the minister, one member of the congregation and the 'preacher's man.' Finally the one unofficial auditor also went out, and Donald interrupted the 'seventhly' by saying: "Weel, dominie, they're all gone but we two. Here's the key of the kirk. You can lock up when ye've done.

ASPARAGUS.

Asparagus is the king of the vegetable world, and it is not unlikely that the exalted rank of his majesty accounts for the timidity with which the cooks handle it. The ordinary method of preparing a bunch for the table is to lay it on its side in a pot of water and boil it. Most folk cut the binders and allow the stalks to float around in the vessel like derelict logs in a Maine freshet. When served, the tips are as mush, while the stalks are too hard for mastication. This is criminal negligence; worse, it is criminal ignorance. It takes five years to get an asparagus bed started, and as the roots are gluttons, requiring a vast amount of rich food, assiduous care and constant attention, a meal of it is entitled to our highest respect.

Buy an agateware or porcelain pot six inches in diameter and nine inches high. Place the bound bunch of grass therein on end, first having trimmed the bottom even and square. If the bunch is seven inches high pour in water until only two inches of the tips remain above the surface—that is, give it five inches of water. Then let it boil and boil and boil until the stalks are perfectly tender. Pierce them with a fork to find out. The tips will in the meantime be cooked by the steam and will be firm, yet tender, when served. Then you will have a delicious asparagus, each stalk and tip a morsel fit for gods and goddesses. The stalk is quite as tasty as the tip, yet by the old method of cooking most of the former is too hard for mastication by anything less powerful than a rock crusher.—New York Press.

BE A GOOD LISTENER.

A Charm Which Women Would Do Well to Cultivate.

The wise woman is a good listener as well as a good conversationalist. It is much more of an art to draw out the best thoughts of other people than it is to converse well oneself. One often meets intelligent persons who never enter a room full of people without monopolizing the conversation. Their faculty for useless chatter is unlimited, and their conversation is liberally interspersed with the pronoun I.

Well bred people have a wholesome dislike of talking about themselves. One never knows how much they know or what wonderful sights they have seen unless some circumstance occurs to bring it out. It is left for the person of few ideas and narrow vision to keep up a ceaseless chatter. It is the occasional traveler who seeks to impress upon her friends the fact that she has seen something of the world. She never misses a chance of speaking about it. While this is not an unpardonable fault, it is a disagreeable one, which sometimes causes the inveterate talker to be spoken of in terms anything but complimentary.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

Ingrowing toe nails should be scraped thin in the center of the nail and then cut there and at the corners.

Persons who have irritability of the heart should not drink hot water. Hot water will cause palpitation in such cases.

Soap liniment is one of those harmless and useful things that should find a place in every house. It can be had ready for use from any drug store. It is excellent for bruises and sprains.

If you are choked and cannot get relief, get down on all fours and cough until you remove the obstruction. The plan of holding a child upside down and shaking him is the best plan known for relieving a choking baby.

A simple way to relieve sore throat is to take a lump of resin about as large as a walnut, put it into an old teapot, pour on boiling water, then put the lid on and place the spout to your mouth. The steam will prove very beneficial in allaying the inflammation.

Delicious Potato Salad.

A delicious potato salad: Chop very fine indeed half a small onion and half a green pepper pod. Cut six boiled potatoes into cubes less than half an inch in diameter. Mix the onion, pepper and potato together with five or six tablespoonfuls of oil. Add a teaspoonful of salt and a little paprika. Add vinegar in whatever proportion is liked. Rub the salad bowl with a split clove of garlic; put in the salad, shaping it firmly into a mound. Cover with a smooth mayonnaise. With lines of capers or sliced olives divide the mound into six sections. Fill in these sections with finely chopped hard boiled eggs, using both whites and yolks, and with chopped boiled beets. Decorate the sections in contrasting colors. Set a tuft of lettuce hearts in the top and decorate the edges with tiny gherkins cut in the thinnest of slices and spread out fan fashion.

Picture Frames.

The most effective picture frames, except when oil paintings are in question, match the woodwork of the room in which they hang. Dull gold frames, very unobtrusive, are liked when the woodwork happens to be white enamel. At all events, it is no longer permissible to crowd all sorts of frames in one room. A uniformity of some sort is decidedly indicated.

you, and I want to ask a favor of you."

"Anything you ask, except a renewal of my promise of silence."

She hesitated before the rising storm of his love. "I want you to let me—Louis and me—help rebuild your mine."

"What do you mean?"

"It's so simple. You and Matt need money. I want you to take Louis into your mine as a partner. Hush!" she warningly whispered as the sleeper's head moved on his pillow. "If he lives he will want to work with you. If he dies I must help you for his sake."

"He will not die. He will live. But you—Ann, there is something back of this." He laid his strong hands upon her shoulders, looking into her face with such piercing passion that she shrank and grew timid. "You need me? Is that it? Am I one of your compensations?"

She tried to smile. "That would not be flattering, according to my theory."

He refused to be diverted. "I don't care what your eastern world thinks of me if only you are content with me. I accept your theory. I deserve compensation—some sweet return for my lonely, loveless life on the plain. Will you come? Is that what you mean?"

He was master now, stopping at no polite bar. "I will not let you go till you speak your mind." His physical hold on her arms softened, but his spiritual self closed round her. "Six months ago I was a rancher in the foothills, and you were in a great eastern city. We were as wide apart as the poles. Now, here we are! I don't understand it. This I know—you are here, and I can't let you go. I accept your offer to go into the mine, but not for Louis' sake. I do it for my own sake because I want you to be my partner—my wife. What do you say, Hesper, my star of the west?"

She put him away almost in terror. "I can't decide now. I must be sure—sure, and I'm not sure. I must have time to consider. I must go back into my old life—to my native city."

"You say you are happier here than in the east. Why go back at all? Why risk the loss of this new found health?"

"I will be honest. It is because by contrast the old life begins to glow. The change in me may be due to physical causes. Perhaps I could carry my recovered joy of life back with me. If this should be so, then I might never want to return, and that would be cruel to you. Don't you see?"

"Then you should go," he answered quickly. "I want to make you happy. If I cannot, then it is better for one to suffer than two. Return to New York, and from that vantage ground look back on this new life. If I do not then seem fitted to make you happy I will not complain."

They were interrupted again, this time by Nora, who came in pale and troubled. "Rob, where is Matt? Sure, he has not shown his face since supper."

"He's in command of the guard tonight. He's not far away. Don't worry about him."

"Ann, dear, I wish you'd come home. I need you. Rob will sit with the sick one, won't you, Rob?"

To this suggestion Raymond gave assent, and in the end Ann went away, her demonstration unfinished—the question of her future still unanswered.

Nora was fairly broken. "Dear God! How long are we to be kept on the edge of destruction like this? Sure, my patience is worn out."

Ann comforted her as best she could, and at 1 o'clock, all being quiet outside, they went to bed.

Ann was awakened from an uneasy sleep by Nora's cry to Matt: "For love of heaven, where have you been? What is that noise?"

Matt's voice, rumbling in reply, barely reached her ears, for a deep, trampling, continuous tumult grew each moment louder and at last was distinguishable as the sound of horses' hoofs. Springing from her bed, she drew aside the curtain and peered out. In the clear, yellow light of the frosty dawn a regiment of mounted men was streaming up the road between the cabins. Dressing hurriedly, she went out into the sitting room just as Raymond came in, his face excited and exultant.

"Our reign of terror is over. The desperadoes are scattering like quail. The governor in a spirit of reprisal has invoked federal aid, and Colonel Wood of the Fortieth United States cavalry is about to take command of the camp."

"Oh, I am so glad! Now there will be no more fighting, and you can restore your mill."

"You are right. Mobs do not fight the United States army," he answered, with the pride of a potential soldier.

They faced each other, even at this moment, with a knowledge that the most important matter of all remained unsettled between them, and all day and the next, while the forces of disorder dissolved and the camp readjusted itself to military rule, Ann nursed her sick and brooded over her problem.

The second day passed slowly—even though she slept at times—and no further word of intimate meaning passed between them. Raymond came in from time to time with news of the changes in progress, but did not tell her that the state was full of praise of the part he had played in bringing peace to the camp. He shrank from doing this, for the reason that, as usual, the press was extreme, loading him with compliments for his firm stand, for his influence over Munro and for his powerful protest to the governor, whereas, to his mind, Matthew Kelly was the leader of the free miners. "I was only the secretary—the clerk," he explained.

Dolan, however, brought to Ann a knowledge of the great light which had been turned suddenly on her lover's abashed figure, and the glow of pride which came to her brought a keen realization of how closely his success was interwoven with her good wishes.

Hounded and brought to bay by his admirers, Raymond made a speech bluntly protesting that he was not entitled to any credit in the matter. "I tried hard to keep out of it," he declared. "I'm not seeking honor of that kind." But his argument was in vain. His denials were called the excess of modesty, and at a meeting of the various factions looking to an adjustment he was amazed to find himself put forward as chief arbitrator of the contention, mainly by Barnett and the mayor of Valley Springs.

Just at sunset, as Ann, lingering at Louis' side, was about to cross to the Kelly cabin, Munro, wild, white and breathless, burst into the room.

"Where's my gun?" he demanded. "Where's Rob?" He was a hunted man in every look, in every gesture. "My gun!" he demanded sharply and ran into the inner room. When he reappeared his face was set in a grim smile, for in his hand dangled a shining weapon. His panic was at an end. Whoso faced him now must give account of himself.

"Goodby, girl!" he called, and his voice was wildly tender. "Don't forget me!" With a bound he reached Barnett's horse and rose to the saddle just as a stern voice called "Halt!" and a blade of fire reached out of the dusk and pierced his side.

Spurring his horse in a swift, rearing circle, he flung from his right hand an answering puff of smoke, and a tall man with a rifle in his hands dropped at the corner of the cabin, but from his knees again took aim, and the beautiful horse went down, flinging his desperate rider over his head.

Horrified, frozen into immobility, Ann stood in the doorway, while Munro shook himself free from the saddle and dragged himself clear of the groaning horse. Resting himself on his elbow, with the face of a calm panther, he confronted a second armed officer. His right arm was useless, but his mind was clear, his eyes steady, and as his new assailant approached he shifted his weapon to his left hand and rolled upon his useless right arm, and the bullet intended for his heart went wide then. Lifting himself with terrible effort, he fired again and put a bullet into the very heart of his pursuer, who fell in a heap just as Raymond and Barnett, followed by Kelly, came rushing to the scene of combat. Raymond bent above the fallen leader. "How is it, Jack? Are you hurt?"

"Hurt? I'm shot to pieces. Raise me up. There's another. Let me get him." He struggled again to rise.

Raymond pushed him gently to the earth. "Never mind him now. You need help. Where's the doctor? Why didn't you jump the camp, as Kelly told you to do, Jack, old man? Why didn't you?"

"How could I—no horse—no gun? I'm no jack rabbit to go slinking into the sagebush." He raised his voice querulously. "Some o' you boys get me a drink. I feel weak."

A half dozen started, but Braide put a glass to his lips. Munro looked at him with a steely gleam in his eyes. "I ought to kill you," he said slowly, "for doing me last night." His voice rose to a stern command: "Take hold and stop this blood. I can't stand this very long. Don't you see that?" he ended, with a note of fierce impatience in his voice.

At Braide's orders they took him up and carried him into the bungalow, where Louis lay watching, listening, with Ann close beside him trying to shield him from the sight and sound of this tragic end of a gambler.

The dying man suffered the doctor's examination in silence for awhile, then quietly asked: "Well, doc, what's your verdict? Do I hit the long trail?"

"It looks that way, Jack," Braide replied, with a good deal of feeling.

Munro closed his eyes and his face quivered. At last, when he had regained control of his voice, he said, "Ann, I want you—here."

She obeyed his call, sustained by her great pity, and, kneeling at his side, asked quietly, "What can I do?"

He looked at her with wide eyes, whose expression filled her throat with aching sorrow. "I'm leaving camp on a long trip," he said quietly, "and I want you to say a good word for me. Maybe it'll make it easier for me where I'm going."

At these tender words Ann's fear and hesitation passed into a sort of awe. He was so piteously young, so boyish, to take that lonely journey into the night. She took his hand in both of hers and whispered a little prayer to which the dying man listened intently. At the end she added softly: "I have faith that the great Judge will deal with you mercifully. He knows all your motives as well as your temptations. Surely his forgiveness is greater than man's."

"I take my chances," was his indomitable reply. "I want to live, but I'm not afraid to die. Doctor, give me something. I don't want to go just yet—I want a few words—give me breath, can't you?" he demanded sharply.

Braide shook his head, and the dying man closed his eyes, and his hands shut convulsively. When he opened them he could only whisper, "Girl—your hand!" Ann gave her hand. He pressed it hard. "You're the best—I ever met. Stay with me. It's a dark trail—and no blazes in the green timber. Goodby"—

CHAPTER XXVIII.

IN a few days Louis was able to be removed to the valley, but his recovery was slow, and Dr. Braide strongly advised against his return to the east. As a proprietor in the mine, Louis was now doubly anxious to be on the ground, but being prevented from that he called on Rob for frequent personal reports, which the senior partner was very glad to make.

At last the day came when Ann decided to leave Louis in his care and return to her mother, desperately determined to test her new found happiness and her love, though she did not put it thus.

Raymond received the announcement of her plan with outward composure though he said sadly: "Now that I know more about your life in the east, I am not so sure I can make you happy, even with a million. I've lost my ambition to be rich, for what could I give you, who have had everything? I am going to flee to my mountain. I can't bear to see you take the train, and I will not say goodby. I will wait as patiently as I can till you send for me, and if you feel that you—that I am not fitted to make you happy I will not complain." And they parted with only a clasp of hands.

On the journey eastward Ann had a great deal of time to think, and the farther she descended upon the plain the more certain it seemed that she was leaving it all behind—Raymond, the good Barnetts and all—and a sadness which lay beyond tears seized upon her. She felt, too, that Louis was growing out of her life. He would soon be a man in the world of men.

However, she approached New York on a glorious morning in May, and the North river was a glittering spread of leaping wavelets tossed into the sunlight by a brisk southwesterly wind, and her spirits rose with a bound.

The morning was deliciously cool and very brilliant with sunlight, and as she rolled through Madison square and entered upon the lower avenue the girl's throat filled with a sob of joy. The generous, good mountains had not merely lured her to themselves, teaching her to love them, they had restored her sanity and the power to enjoy the glint of sunbeams anywhere in the world. She was elate, throbbing with recovered love of life, with the regained joy of being young, and, best of all, she found herself looking back each moment with undiminished affection to the high peaks. Into this moment of elation the thought of her mother intruded with chilling effect.

The complete lack of sympathy between mother and daughter dated from the day of her birth, for she had never known maternal care. From the time she could speak paid servants and teachers guided her in feminine ways. The cold and smileless woman who gave her birth was a being of another world. No caresses were ever invited by the mother, and none was ever offered by the child. Even the companionship of the gentle, impulsive father was cut short or interdicted altogether during melancholy periods by his wife's exacting demands.

When Louis came the father revolted, refusing to be forever at the whim of his wife. He gave up attendance upon her and devoted himself to the children. This, Ann afterward recalled, was the beginning of her mother's morbid seclusion. Then came boarding school, from which she was called to receive her father's last words, and these admonitions, gently spoken, with a sad sweetness of tone, like the dying hum of a bell, she had never forgotten. She had been a mother to Louis, and she was coming back now with the consciousness of a duty well performed, but as she approached the towering wall of the great apartment hotel in which her mother made her home she lost courage, and the resolution she had made to forget their differences and to confide her perplexities died away.

Mrs. Allard received her in bed reading—she was forever reading useless books—and impassively said, "What an unearthly hour to arrive!"

Ann took her lax hand and bent and kissed her chill lips. "How are you feeling, mother?" she asked tenderly.

"Miserable, and Mr. Allard is away, as usual," she replied, with a bitter frown. "Your letters were very few—very unsatisfactory. Why did you not return sooner?"

Instantly Ann's old feeling of spleen, anger and resentment resurged like a tide and threatened to bury all her good resolutions, but she struggled with and rose above her resentment and said gently: "I didn't intend to neglect my duty. I wrote as often"—

Her mother interrupted her as she entered upon a more extended confidence. "Go to your room and bathe and get your breakfast. We will talk over Louis' extraordinary plans afterward."

The interview with her mother was quite as painful as Ann had feared. She began by demanding to know why Louis was not with her, and when Ann re-explained bluntly that he would not come Mrs. Allard looked at her daughter in cold silence for a full minute and then said: "There is something about you that I don't understand. You look well, but Louis should come home. That climate doesn't agree with him."

"On the contrary, his illness is due to his own impetuousness in riding up into the mountains without sufficient clothing."

"What's the meaning of this talk of his about buying a mine?"

Ann explained this as patiently as she could, and when Mrs. Allard contemptuously said, "He shall do nothing of the kind," Ann broke out:

"Mother, you don't seem to understand that Louis is no longer a child and that he is growing very difficult to manage. I used my best powers to persuade him to come home and consult with you, but he refused. Furthermore, the doctor advised against his coming just now."

"I don't care what the doctor said. My plans are settled. I am to spend the summer in the Tyrol, and I want Louis with me. The air there is better for him than the raw winds of that crazy mining camp. I wish you would write him or telegraph him at once to come."

"You are not asking me to go with you, I hope?"

"Certainly you are going."

Ann turned white and tense and sat for a long time in silence, a deep humming sound in her ears, well knowing that the hour of revolt had come. Her voice was hoarse with emotion when she spoke, "Mother, you must not make any more plans that include me."

"You would have liked Robert, and I love him!"

Mrs. Allard's eyelids opened in surprise. "Why not?"

"Because I am to be married very soon."

Mrs. Allard seemed stunned for a moment, but she recovered and asked ironically: "Are you, indeed? How very considerate of you to tell me! May I ask to whom?"

"You may. His name is Robert Raymond."

"One of those western miners?"

"Yes, a miner, but an eastern man."

"Now I understand Wayne Peabody's glum face. I infer that this Mr. Raymond is rich?"

"No," replied Ann, quite simply, "he works with his hands among his men."

"It's like you to throw yourself away. Do you think I will consent to such a piece of folly?"

Ann was cold and calm. "Fortunately your consent is not required." Then the thought of how all this would sound to her lover moved her, and with tears of entreaty in her voice she cried out: "Oh, mother, don't let's quarrel, wait till you see Robert! You cannot help but admire him—he is so big and manly. I came here to ask your help, your advice. I wanted to confide in you. I want your love, your sympathy."

"You have it—my profound sympathy. But you cannot have my consent to such a foolish act."

Ann rose, wounded, bleeding, but no longer in a mood for confidences or entreaties. "Further controversy is useless, mother. I have given my future into Robert's hands."

Once more in her room, she caught up a little framed portrait from her desk. "Oh, my beautiful, poetic, dear father, now I know why you loved the mountains and why you sickened and died here in the city! You gave me a precious heritage, and I have only just found it. I will live as you would have me live, dear." She touched the picture to her lips as a sign of her dedication of herself to her new life. "You would have liked Robert, and I love him!"

With bosom heaving with passionate resolution she hurried to her desk and wrote a telegram in big, strong letters, as if to make an imperishable record:

Robert, come for me. I am waiting.

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

AGRICULTURAL.

Farm Hints for August.

After haying and harvesting are over and the high prices paid for early vegetables, fruits and chickens can no longer be expected, the farmer and the market gardener, as well as the poultryman and florist, enjoy a brief respite from their usually hurried and laborious life.

Vacation Time

on the farm, if it comes at all during the growing season, may best be located in August, after the haying is over. The farmer and his family have had a hard pull and the overwork and heat have manifested their usual effect. The vacation should be a rest and also a complete change.

It is to be hoped that most farmers will find time before the hurry of fall work begins to take a little outing with their wives and families. It does one a world of good to see how other people live, and to learn whatever is worth learning in their habits of life. There are few of us who cannot improve our manners in this way if we choose. Perhaps the best and most enjoyable way to accomplish this is to drive over the country in one's own wagon, and stop often to talk with the people on the road. The railroad and steamboat give few opportunities to see what is best worth seeing and knowing about the country, and are only useful in passing rapidly over long reaches of uninteresting country. One can learn far more in the same time of what is really worth knowing of the country by travelling with a horse and wagon or a bicycle, or even on foot.

Topdressing.

Fertilizer applied to grass fields after mowing should be some quick-acting material like nitrate of soda, or it will not pay. Generally it is best to dress the grass lands only at the time of the fall or spring rains, when it will go at once where needed. Should a spell of dry weather come immediately after sowing, a part of the fertilizing material will be wasted, and, in any event, only a quick-acting fertilizer will be any great benefit to the aftermath. If anything is put on, use one hundred pounds to the acre of nitrate of soda, applied just before a rain.

Seeding Down.

This month and the first of September is the best time in the whole year for seeding down land to grass. Where the land is too wet to admit of planting a hoed crop it may be plowed up and reseeded directly upon the inverted soil. If the bottom is too soft for two horses to plow easily abreast, it may be often managed by working two or three horses tandem, keeping them all the time on the sod. It will not be easy to cart manure onto such land after plowing, but a dressing of ground bone and wood ashes or other good fertilizer may easily be spread and harrowed in with the seed, and there will be no trouble in topdressing such land with manure in winter when frozen

Work in the Lowlands.

This season of the year is usually dry and warm, and the water in the brooks and meadows is generally low, affording an excellent opportunity to drain such lands as need it, and thus render productive some of the very best of our unproductive tracts.

The lands adapted to cranberry growing are peat meadows located in such manner that they may be drained eighteen inches below the surface, and flooded to a depth of two or three feet above the surface at will. Such bogs, if in the neighborhood of a bank of clean, sharp sand, are well suited to cranberry growing, and under good management and intelligent care can probably be made more valuable in this way than in any other. In cases where there is not a sufficient head of water for flooding, or where the sand cannot be easily obtained for topdressing, it will probably pay better to grow hay after draining; or if in the neighborhood of a good market such land is well adapted, after draining, to the growth of onions, celery, cabbage, summer lettuce and a variety of other vegetables which thrive in a somewhat damp soil.

The Market Garden.

Lettuce seed sown in the early part of August will usually head up in October before hard frosts injure it; but it is well to have it where it can be covered on frosty nights. About the middle of August those gardeners who have greenhouses usually sow the white seed lettuce for early sales in November and follow with successive sowings every fortnight. Radishes are also sown in the same way.

Spinach seed sown in August will be large enough to cut up for sale or for storage in November, and unless sown near the last of the month will usually be too large to stand the winter in the field. For wintering over in the field, the last of August and the first week in September is the best time for sowing seed. Kale is sown about the same time.

Strawberry plants may be set out this month if good strong runners are used and not allowed to run much after setting. The beds planted in spring will need attention to place the runners evenly.

The Apiary.

The best part of honey harvest is now over in most localities; finish extracting and remove supers; give young queens to stock that need them, and gentle feeding should be done to stimulate the queens to lay, so that we have a good lot of autumn-raised bees to carry the stock well through the coming winter and spring, so preventing spring dwindling, which in great measure arises from early cessation of breeding. Feed up all stocks now rapidly that require food. Syrup is made as follows: Cane sugar, ten pounds; water, five pints; salt, one ounce; vinegar, one tablespoonful. Cheshire's remedy, or phenol solution, one-half ounce to each quart of syrup; boil a minute or two, and add phenol solution when cool. By using this solution all risks of foul brood are avoided. See to sale of honey.

Many dairymen like to sow barley and rye together this month for fall feeding. The rye, if fed down in fall, will usually survive the winter and make a crop the next year almost as good as if seeded later and not fed down.

Poultrymen will now be busy supplying the beach hotels with spring chickens and killing off the old hens as fast as they become unprofitable as layers. They usually bring a far better price this month than later.

The Poultry Yard.

August is a month which most choose as a time for weeding out their old birds. Laying slackens to some extent and the demand is usually pretty good for old stock at this time. But if the old hens are not sold off they can be made to lay pretty well until cold weather by feeding them plenty of meat or milk. On this stimulating diet they will keep busy through the hot season and put off moulting until the first cold snap. Then they should be disposed of promptly, or they will be idle all the late fall and winter. Hens more than two years old should be weeded out anyway, as they will not be of much use for eggs after July. Hens of the sitting breeds, too, are liable to be a nuisance all through August, and it will save trouble to let the hen man have them.

Some cloudy day in haying time gives a chance to whitewash the henhouse and chicken coops. Plenty of lime should be used and the mixture made in boiling water and applied hot, adding a little soft soap to prevent flaking when it dries and a little carbolic acid. The wash should be applied very freely, using a force pump or brushes. On nine out of ten farms the coops are overrun with lice in summer, although the owners may not know it, unless they chance to take a bright lantern into the coop some night and examine the roosts carefully. The lice work at night chiefly and will be found travelling all over the roosts and around the sides of the building, on the nests, etc., that is, if the buildings have been neglected. Use kerosene, lime wash, etc., freely, and see that the hens have a chance for a dust bath. The small chicken coops are no doubt bad and need thorough renovation, else there will be a lot of stunted chickens and some dead ones if conditions are very bad. Fleas and lice are not natural inhabitants of the poultry yard and only come when fowls are neglected or mismanaged.

Turkeys need some care when partly developed and the young chicks must be kept out of the damp grass. Keep them in the wire run on short grass in rainy weather. Young turkeys need more animal food than chickens and a greater variety. It is not much use to try to raise them unless they can have wide range and in a locality where there is not much black head disease.

Spring ducks have been low priced of late owing to over-production, but they pay fairly well to those who understand the business. They do not need a pond and will grow about as well when they never see enough water to swim in. They should be bedded on straw at night and in a thoroughly well ventilated coop.

WOMEN'S INSTITUTES IN CANADA

(N. Y. Country Gentleman.)

Much is being done for the farmers nowadays. Possibly more might be done for the farmers' wives. Mrs. Helen Wells, who has been lecturing at the women's institutes in Canada, thinks that we might learn something in this direction from that province.

"I could not help comparing," she writes us, "those districts that have been carrying on these institutes for two years with those where there had been none. I think the women's institutes in Canada are doing more lasting work than any other institutes now in existence, for the simple reason that the teachers' and farmers' institutes are two or more days' organizations, while the women's institutes meet every month in the year and are practically study clubs, and the annual meeting is much more largely attended and is of more interest because the women have been studying. We ought to have for our women on the farm just as much help as is given to the men. From your paper I know your broad views on education, and I want you to turn your attention to this, to me, very important subject. I shall never be satisfied until New York State at least reaches out the same helping hand to the women on the farms that it is doing for teachers."

Mrs Wells encloses a clipping from the Syracuse Herald, in which she gives some further information of these institutes. It follows:

"Appreciating the fact that no matter how skillful or intelligent a farmer may become, if the woman in the home is ignorant of her duties, if there is not an intelligent co-operation between husband and wife, the result will be failure, the Canadian government has instituted a series of organizations for the study of all things pertaining to the home, and given to each organization a small fund, sufficient to enable it to carry on its necessary work and once a year send delegates to address the annual meetings.

"Commencing with one institute, the work has grown until in about six years it has reached the point where nearly one thousand institutes are held annually, which means that there are nearly that number of study clubs working the whole year through, meeting monthly and covering all topics interesting to women. Certainly there is no one so obtuse that they cannot discern the immense educational value this will have on the women of Canada, on the children of Canada, and on the homes of Canada.

"I have had the pleasure of spending two seasons attending and addressing these women's institutes, and when I saw the enthusiasm, the interest, the evidences of thought—in short, the developing power of this work among the women, saw the generosity with which the Canadian government thus seeks to help its daughters, and contrasted it with what the American government is doing for its women of the farming districts—well, for once I did not feel like proclaiming our country as the greatest and best. For it is a careless parent who does not educate the daughters as well as the sons.

"To-day the great Empire State is spending money for the education of the farmer — not half enough money, but some; but when we ask, 'What is she doing for the farmer's wife? there is an ominous silence. The farmers' wives are asking for aid in their work. If it is necessary to know how to properly feed the cows a balanced rations, it is equally necessary to know how to properly feed the family, so that the growing child may receive the nourishment that will give blood, muscle, nerves and flesh. If ventilation for poultry is worth study to the farmer, ventilation in the home is worthy of study for the farmer's wife.

"There are a thousand questions she must solve, and she does not know where to turn for help, and upon her judgment and wisdom rest the health and happiness of her dear ones. Is she not worthy of assistance? The women of the cities and large towns have realized their need, and hence the great club movement was started, a movement which as a lasting educational benefit to the women of the United States cannot be estimated. Having its birth in a dissatisfaction with their present attainments, in a desire to know more, to be wiser to meet the needs of the day, these women, craving more light, formed themselves into clubs for the study of many subjects, each as they felt their own need. But no matter what the subject to be studied, it is always with one point in view — the betterment of the home.

"In cities and large towns this is a comparatively easily solved problem, for once organized the club can obtain the services of specialists who will tell in an afternoon the results of many years of study, and so the club receives educational benefits of inestimable value. Usually a specialist loves his work; and is eager to interest others in the subject so dear to him. Out on the farms and in small villages this educational work of the clubs becomes quite another problem. The specialist who freely gives an hour to the city club cannot afford to give a whole or half a day necessary to reach the country, and so the almost impossibility of there being any actual benefit from the clubs established in those districts.

"Here is where we need the state. Just as the farmers' institutes are established by state help, so the women's institutes should be established through the country. It has proved itself of great value in Canada, so much so that their government is extending and enlarging the work constantly. Why cannot the United States do as much for her daughters? Certainly the Empire State, that gives so freely to help its other educational factors, that strives to help its sons in the farmers' institutes, its teachers in the teachers' institutes, will not refuse to aid its wives and mothers in a woman's institute.

DOMESTIC HINTS.

Vegetable Cutlets.

Delightful vegetable cutlets are made in this way: Mash six large hot boiled potatoes, adding butter, seasoning and enough hot milk to slightly moisten. Chop fine one onion and fry golden brown in a tablespoonful of butter. Boil and chop fine new carrots and white turnips to make one heaping cupful of each, add these and the onion to the potato, season very highly with salt and pepper, add a tablespoonful of chopped parsley and mould into small cutlets. Dip each in slightly beaten egg, roll in fine breadcrumbs and fry golden brown in deep, smoking hot fat.

Salmon Loaf.

Take salmon, remove the bones and break into flakes with a silver fork. Add four tablespoonfuls of melted butter, one cup of breadcrumbs, one-half tablespoonful of salt and four well beaten eggs. Put in a well greased pudding dish and steam for one hour. This may be served hot on a platter with riced potatoes and a cream gravy or sliced cold with a garnishing of lettuce or parsley and lemon.

Tomato Fritters.

Season one pint of stewed and strained tomatoes with a half-teaspoonful of sugar, and salt and pepper to taste. Bring to the boiling point, add a paste made of one tablespoonful of butter and one of flour, rubbed together. Stir until thickened, cook for five minutes and pour over four thick slices of stale bread. Let soak well on one side, then turn. Beat an egg enough to mix, dip each slice in it, then in dry breadcrumbs. Fry in deep, smoking hot fat, drain and serve at once.

IMPORTANT SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY.

A Clinical Preparation That Positively Kills the Dandruff Germ.

A most important discovery has been made after a year's patient laboratory work aimed in a certain direction—It is Newbro's Herpicide, a preparation that prevents falling hair, and speedily and permanently eradicates dandruff. These evils are caused by a germ or parasite that burrows into the scalp, throwing up dandruff, as it seeks to sap the life of the hair at the root. There's no baldness without falling or thin hair, no thin hair without dandruff, and no dandruff if the germ is destroyed. Newbro's Herpicide is the only preparation that will do the work. "Destroy the cause, you will remove the effect." Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Blackberry Sponge.

Put small cubes of bread into an earthen bowl, pouring over the bread as it is fitted into place hot blackberry juice, made by cooking blackberries until they are soft, sweetening and passing through a sieve. Use as much juice as the bread will absorb, set the sponge away in a cool place for several hours and then turn from the bowl. Serve with whole blackberries, sugar and cream.

Chocolate Syrup.

Put six tablespoonfuls of grated chocolate into a saucepan over the fire, add two cupfuls of boiling water, simmer slowly, stirring occasionally until dissolved. Add four cupfuls of granulated sugar, stir until dissolved, remove the spoon, simmering for seven minutes longer. Now strain and add two tablespoonfuls vanilla extract and pour into bottles, which should be hermetically sealed. When ready to serve allow one and a half gills of ice cold milk and two tablespoonfuls of syrup for every glassful required; put them in a large, cold fruit jar, shake well for three minutes, pour into chilled glasses and drop a teaspoonful of whipped cream on each.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

If you dread a sea voyage because of sickness, try taking cathartic medicine two days before you sail. If you are seasick and want something to stow into the emptiness after 'coming round,' start in on hardtack and a good apple. They will go to the right spot and stay there.

A grandmother who has had a lifetime of experience in household matters says that tansy is an excellent preventative of moths. Sprinkle the leaves freely among the woolens and furs. It is convenient for a country housewife, who generally lives within easy reach of a wild tansy bed.

For warts on the hands an infallible home remedy is washing soda. Prick the skin at the root of the wart, and each time you wash your hands rub the wart while wet with a piece of washing soda. This remedy is slow but painless, and leaves no scar.

An authority on cooking says that a tumbler of red currant jelly turned into a pint of ice cream is delicious and imparts an attractive tint to the cream.

If a napkin is wrung out of hot water and wrapped around sandwiches and they are put into a cool storeroom they will remain as moist as when first spread.

To make a low room look higher, let the curtains hang to the floor. To make a high ceiling look lower use short curtains that hang only to the window sill.

To make a tough piece of steak tender, put three tablespoonfuls of salad oil and one tablespoonful of vinegar on a large flat dish. Lay the steak on the mixture, and let it rest in this way half an hour. Then turn it over and let it rest another half hour in the same quantity of vinegar and oil. It is said that the toughest steak will yield to this treatment and be tender when served.

In making bedroom slippers, instead of buying soles, cut them from the discarded hot-water bags. On the rubber sole lay an inner sole of soft flannel, and bind them together; on this foundation sew the knitted uppers. You will like the result.

The following way to reheat a roast of beef is given by a European cook. By it the roast will be, to all appearances and flavor, a first service, unless it had been marred by the marks of the carving knife: Wrap the roast in tough, buttered paper and put it in the oven. Let it stay until it is thoroughly heated; but do not allow it to cook. Reheat the gravy and serve beside the meat in a hot gravy boat.

For stings or bites from any kind of insect apply dampened salt, bound tightly over the spot. It will relieve and usually cure very quickly.

WOOING CINDERELLA

By Ruth Sautelle

Copyright, 1905, by Homer Sprague

Scarcely had Dudley forced his breathless way through the thicket into the little cleared space at the edge of the bluff when a young voice assailed him.

"I thought you would come before long. You are the prince, of course."

He wheeled with a start and stared. She sat on a low rock, looking straight at him out of smiling brown eyes. There was a general impression of brownness. It seemed to be a gown of some shimmery brown stuff—or was it gold?—and a kind of aureole of fluffy, light brown hair. How the deuce did a girl get up that cliff? About how nearly a puffing porpoise had he sounded, anyway? Pity a man couldn't keep track of his breath! He'd go into training on that hill till he could take it on the run without turning a hair—he would, by Jove! Must be something the matter with her eyes. He'd never seen—that is to say, they sort of—

"You said yes, didn't you?" she interrupted sweetly. "Surely you must be the prince."

"I beg your pardon," began Dudley, suddenly realizing that she had asked a question some minutes ago and that an answer was expected of him. "The prince, you say? I've never been accused before, you know." And then, in a flash of comprehension, "Most assuredly I am the prince—if you are the princess," he finished triumphantly.

The brown eyes twinkled into his more distractingly than before.

"Oh, not at all!" she laughed. "I'm only poor Cinderella."

"Cinderella?" questioned Dudley, looking the mystification he felt.

"Why, yes—you see"— She hesitated. And then a very wonderful thing happened. A line of rosiest pink appeared just above the brown collar and crept up stealthily, enveloping the tiny ear, flashing into flame on the white brow and hiding at last in the light hair that blew about her face. Dudley, fascinated, watched its progress and forgave the intrusion.

"Of course it's very simple, only disgracefully stupid of me. And"—sitting up straight and suddenly becoming very brave—"I'm not in the least afraid to tell you."

Dudley mumbled suitable assurances, while the girl moved uneasily on her rocky throne and continued to look brave.

"I just—I only—the flower was way over the edge of the bluff, and—I held on to a branch and leaned down—and—my heel got wedged by a stone—and"—There was a tentative shifting of the shimmery skirts, then a hasty motion of withdrawal beneath them. "And I—I—lost the mate to that!" she finished, with desperate courage, thrusting into sight the other foot, incased in a stout little brown walking boot.

Two furious blushes were in full operation by this time.

Dudley gazed fixedly at the small trim boot. "You say the one you lost was just like this?" he questioned, with great solemnity.

"Oh, no; it belonged to the left foot, you know," she responded, with corresponding earnestness.

And then came the welcome relief of laughter, under the relaxing influence of which Dudley sank upon the edge of the rock.

"I only meant to suggest," he announced fervently, "my unbelief that there could be another like it in the world."

"Bravo, bravo!" she applauded gayly. "That is pretty enough to savor of much practice in such speaking."

Dudley's ardent expression was replaced by one of due submission to rebuke.

"It is meet," he said as his hand sought a capacious coat pocket and disappeared therein, "that the downtrodden should arise to do thee service. Perhaps I can aid you better than you know."

"I'm sure you can," she interposed hastily. "But let me tell my plan first. I couldn't let you go to find it and leave me helpless and alone again."

"Of course not." Dudley's face assumed a thoughtful expression, and his hand slowly left the big pocket. "I—a—hardly suppose you could borrow mine."

Again her bright laughter rang out. "Oh, flattery, where is thy sting?" she cried gaspingly. And Dudley, looking ruefully from his own generous boot to the adorable mateless one, realized that once more he'd "put his foot in it."

"Forgiven," she declared in a moment, "because of the pretty one you said first. And so, to go back to our muttons, I see only one way. And yet, of course, it's such a little distance—the camp's just back in the trees there—I could hop on one foot, I suppose."

She paused mischievously for the mere pleasure of regarding his look of frank disappointment; also to observe whether it occurred to him to wonder why, with friends so near, she had not called for help.

"But I should be sure," she relented, "to lose my balance and let the wrong foot down." Dudley brightened perceptibly. "And it's very stony and, I know, would hurt dreadfully. So after all there is just the one way, as I said."

She tilted the lonely boot back and forth on its heel and regarded it pensively. Dudley did likewise. When this had gone on long enough she raised to him an expectant look.

"Yes," he said, almost mournfully; "there only remains for me to help you. I suppose I ought," he continued, while his hand moved again ever so haltingly toward the pocket, then rapidly away from it, "to—to"—

"Oh, pray don't feel any obligation in the matter!" was the hint, with just a bit of ice in the tone.

"To avail myself of the most fortunate opportunity that ever befell an undeserving beggar!" he finished, laughing hilariously as he assisted her to her feet—that is to say, her foot.

Mere words cannot approximate the delight of that trip in the neighboring (much too neighboring) camp. They laughed like children and clutched each other in frantic mirth. And with what exceeding care and deliberateness it was necessary to proceed! The most inoffensive pebble was occasion for a wide detour, in spite of the lamentable fact that it increased the distance. And did the little unshod silken foot so much as caress the ground in its wabbling career Dudley was ready to weep in worshipful contrition. It was almost too much joy to discover in the course of the hysterical conversation that this was Tom Hutton's ranch—dear old Tom that he hadn't seen since the college days—and Cinderella his wife's guest.

But, as all pleasant moments come to an end, so must this, as Cinderella dropped, tired, but still merry, into a chair on the bungalow piazza.

"And then the prince," he said slowly, looking down upon her with compelling eyes, "caused his heralds—no; I think you know what the prince did without my telling you."

"Ah," she cried, her own eyes falling under his scrutiny, "but first you've to find the slipper."

"Yes, first I've to find the slipper. And when it is found I've the advantage of knowing where dwells Cinderella—and that the slipper will fit."

"Which last is yet to be proven!"—teasingly.

"May I put it to the test?" he begged.

"Oh, Faintheart!" she whispered mockingly. "Try and see."

Whereat Dudley began a most peculiar course of behavior. Going quickly around the corner of the cabin, he bumped his head softly several times against the logs, gave himself a violent shake and then strode through the trees to the low rock in the little cleared space at the edge of the bluff. Sitting down, he plunged an empty hand into the deep pocket and brought it out full of a stout brown walking boot of small dimensions.

To his credit be it said that there was self denunciation in his aspect as he sat turning it miserably over and over. Oh, yes; of course he'd had it there all the while. Well, hadn't he tried to let her have it at the very first, and didn't she keep interrupting till he couldn't—that is to say, didn't want to? Suppose he was the biggest cad on record, he'd wager no fellow ever had a better excuse! Hang it! What did she have to look at him that way for? How could he deliberately hand the thing over and put an end to the happiest few moments he'd ever spent, or ever expected to spend, for that matter? For surely by this foolishness he'd dished any prospects of further acquaintance about as effectively as possible. Well, anyhow, this was torture; might as well have the confession over with and go off and shoot himself.

In three minutes he was back. The trial trip had taken twenty to navigate. She was waiting and still alone. Oh, yes; rub it in! She might have cared if he hadn't spoiled it all.

"Most eager knight!" she called in greeting. "Was it wings? Nothing else could have taken you down the ravine and up again in this time."

For answer he knelt without a word and put the fateful shoe in place with elaborate care. He would have that privilege before he forfeited her favor forever. Then—

"I found it in the ravine before I climbed up at all," he said abruptly. "It was in my pocket all the while. Now send me away, for I can't go unless you do."

But Cinderella leaned forward to take his remorseful face between two butterfly hands.

"Oh, boy, boy," she cried softly; "most innocent of boys! Did you think I didn't know? I saw you pick it up down below—no, you shall have all the truth; it fell—I let it fall because I saw you!"

Just then Tom Hutton, coming around the corner of the house, decided he could quite as well postpone his errand.

Wellington's Integrity.

The great Duke of Wellington was noted for his rigid integrity. Here is an instance which occurred in reference to his large estate. Some farm adjoining his lands was for sale, and his agent negotiated for him for the purchase. Having concluded the business, he went to the duke and told him he had made a capital bargain. "What do you mean?" asked the duke. "Why, your grace, I have got the farm for so much, and I know it to be worth at least so much more." "Are you quite sure of that?" "Quite sure, your grace, for I have carefully surveyed it." "Very well, then, pay the gentleman from me the balance between what you have already given and the real value of the estate."—Argonaut.

Mind How You Laugh.

Isn't it a curious thing that laughing may spoil your features? If you laugh with the sides of your face the skin will work loose in time and wrinkles will form in exact accordance with the kind of laugh you have. A person who is accustomed to suppressing his feelings generally has a deep line running from each side of his nose to the upper corner of his mouth, which in time extends to the chin, forming the shape of a half moon. The scholar's wrinkle forms on his brow, while a schemer's wrinkles come around his eyes. The man who always wears a smirk will have a series of semicircular wrinkles covering his cheeks.

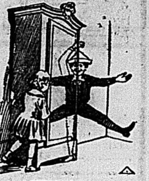
FOR YOUNG FOLKS

A MIRROR TRICK.

Example of the Odd Illusions That Can Be Produced.

A good deal of amusement may be had out of a little experiment with a long mirror if you have one in the door of a bookcase or a wardrobe. Let a boy stand by the side of the wardrobe in such a way that only one-half of his body may be seen, the other half being concealed by the wardrobe.

To persons standing at the other side at a certain distance it will seem that they see his whole body, for the half that is visible will be reflected from the glass so as to produce that illusion.



A MIRROR ILLUSION.

If he raises the arm that is in sight, another arm will appear to rise in the glass, and thus it will seem that both his arms are raised.

That is not at all extraordinary, for anybody can lift both arms at once. Let him raise the leg that is in sight, however, and the illusion becomes somewhat remarkable, for it represents a person with both feet in the air at the same time. Even that feat may ordinarily be accomplished at quick intervals, but this illusion gives the spectators the image of a person who remains in that suspended condition for a long time.

You see now how easy it is for the boy to imitate the acrobatic performance of a jumping jack, for if he moves his visible leg up and down the reflection of it from the glass makes it appear that his act includes both legs.

SHOES IN JAPAN.

They Are Queer Ones and Only Cost About a Cent a Pair.

I wonder what the poor bootblacks, if there are any, do in far away Japan, where all the people wear bamboo shoes and wooden sandals, footwear which never needs blacking?

In fact, the Japanese are a great deal of the time without shoes, as they never wear them in their houses.

One of the queerest sights in the streets of Japan is the collection of old and new, the large and the small shoes, which are seen outside the doors of the houses where they are left. These shoes have a separate place in them for the big toe, but the wearer is so used to them that he steps in and out of them so quickly that they hardly stop to do it. In the house the Japanese sit or lie on the floor when they rest and never walk unless with very clean feet.

When they travel they take several pairs of shoes in case the old ones give out. This sounds extravagant to us, but it is not, for their shoes cost only a cent and a half a pair. Of course, there are more expensive ones in the shops, but the middle class wear the cheap kind.—Exchange.

The Lost Family.

A great crowd had gathered to witness the closing exercises of the village school. It was 10 o'clock at night when they finished, and everybody started for home. Then suddenly some one shouted aloud, "Little Paul Chilton is lost!" Now, Paul was only four and a half years old.

The minister hurried alone down the path to the spring, hoping the little one might have taken that familiar walk. Ah, sure enough, a tiny figure was coming with brave little steps up the sloping path!

"Oh, Paul," cried the minister, running toward him, "how did you come to be lost?"

"I don't fink I's losted," answered the little fellow, a quaver of relief in his voice as the big man gathered him in his arms. Then he went on in a tired little tone, "But the rest of the family must be losted, for I can't find 'em anywhere."

Royal Mechanics.

Perhaps you may be surprised to hear that many members of the royal families of Europe have learned ordinary trades. King Edward of England learned in his youth how to make stockings; his son, the Prince of Wales, can make ropes; the late czar of Russia was a practical farmer; the German emperor is a typesetter; King Humbert of Italy was a shoemaker and Queen Victoria was quite expert with knitting needles.

Beware of "By and By."

If you have hard work to do,
Do it now.
Today the skies are clear and blue;
Tomorrow clouds may come in view;
Yesterday is not for you;
Do it now.

If you have a song to sing,
Sing it now.
Let the notes of gladness ring
Clear as song of bird in spring;
Let every day some music bring;
Sing it now.

If you have kind words to say,
Say them now.
Tomorrow may not come your way;
Do a kindness while you may.
Loved ones will not always stay;
Say them now.

Charges Preferred Against Gardiner

FORMER BELLEVILLIAN, NOW PRINCIPAL OF THE INSTITUTION FOR THE BLIND AT BRANTFORD, MAY FIND HIS RESIGNATION CALLED FOR.

Shortly before the Ross Government was defeated, in January, 1905, Mr. H. F. Gardiner, son of Rev. Dr. Gardiner, of this city, was appointed principal of the Institution for the Blind, at Brantford. Mr. Gardiner had been for many years editor of the Hamilton Times, one of the most bitterly partisan Grit papers in the province. The following, from the Toronto Telegram, is interesting: "The probability is that upon the arrival home of Premier Whitney and Hon. Dr. Pyne there will be a number of changes considered immediately. It is also likely that the resignation of Mr. Herb. Gardiner, principal of the Institution for the Blind at Brantford, and former editor-in-chief of the Hamilton Times, will be called for. A series of charges have been formulated against Mr. Gardiner, and an investigation will take place as soon as possible. The charges comprise some of a grave character Laxity in the administration of the affairs of the Blind Institution is charged and these take in allegations of a very serious nature concerning the blind pupils."

Judge Fraleck Will Try These Cases.

Fred Renfrew and a young man named Bennett were this morning up before Judge Fraleck for election. They elected to be tried by His Honor, and the dates of the trials were fixed for August 27th and 29th. The former is charged with theft and the latter with indecent assault.

Seventy New Services.

Ald Sinclair, chairman of the Gas Committee, informs us that already about seventy new gas services have been installed this season, and it is expected that fully seventy more will be installed before the season closes. Some people pooh-poohed the idea of putting a main on Bleecker Ave. but the wisdom of such action has been amply vindicated, twenty-five new services having been installed there already.

There will have to be a meeting of the Gas Committee soon, Ald. Sinclair says, as several tenders are in for the new gas holder, and they must soon be opened and acted upon.

The Band Concert.

Owing to the I.O.O.F. band having an engagement this evening the usual weekly concert upon Victoria Park was given last night. There was not as large an audience present as is usual upon such occasions, but nevertheless a goodly number were upon the park and enjoyed the programme of music which was given. Shortly after 10 o'clock the rendering of the National Anthem brought the programme to a close. During the evening many rowing and sailing boats were about the harbor.

Card of Thanks.

The committee in charge of the Grand Trunk Employes' picnic last week wish to thank all those who so kindly donated prizes for the sports and games and thus contributed largely to the success of the outing.

Apple Trees For Shade.

(Leavenworth Post.)

There is one thing that the people of this city could do that would add to its beauty and at the same time be profitable, and that is to plant apple trees. Every man likes to have a tree or two around his house for shade. There is no better tree for that purpose than the apple tree There is room in every lot in the city outside of the business district for at least one apple tree. The best trees can be bought for ten cents each, but one tree will net on an average two dollars a year, but it is worth more than that to a family to have their own apples This seems a small sum of money but if every owner in the city would plant one apple tree on each of his lots it would mean more than twenty thousand trees and the crop would be worth $40,000 a year. if the people who own lots in the city would plant them in apple trees and tend to them as a man tends to his orchard, it would mean a new income to the city of from $40,000 to $50,000 a year.

EDWARD W. MEYERS, A RESPECTED CITIZEN, DIED OF HEART DISEASE LAST NIGHT.

Some time during last night death came suddenly to Mr. Edward W. Meyers, who resided with his sister, Mrs. J. N. Lazier, on Ann street Yesterday afternoon the deceased was out fishing with friends, this being his especial delight, and came home in the evening apparently in his usual health. Later in the evening he retired and this was the last seen of him alive. He had disrobed and, after attiring himself in a night gown, sat down in an easy chair which was in his room. In this position he was found dead this morning, and life had no doubt been extinct for some hours. Heart disease was the cause of death.

Mr. Meyers, who was 70 years of age, was born in Belleville, where he always resided. He was well known in the city. For some years he occupied the position of jailor of the County jail here, but of late years had lived a retired life. Mr. Meyers did not belong to any secret society. A daughter of the deceased, Mrs. Fleury, resides at Aurora, Ont.

TROTTING.

Ann Direct Won Big Stake.

Cleveland, O., July 30. — Even without pool selling the opening day of the local Grand Circuit races attracted a crowd of over 8,000 people. The M. & M. Stake of $10,000, transferred from Detroit, proved the principal attraction. There were twelve starters, Ann Direct being the favorite in the pools sold in Newburg, outside the city limits. Brilliant Girl won the first heat in 2.11 1-4, but finished lame, and Ann Direct won the next two heats and the race. Second money went to Brilliant Girl and third to Kenneth Mac. The 2.08 pace was won by Hal C., who took the first and third heats, the second going to Black Pet, who was distanced in the last heat.

The 2.08 trot was won easily by Mainsheet, while Rudykip won the 2.10 pace in straight heats, reducing his record from 2.10 1-4 to 2.05 3-4.

A Boiler Fell on Gladstone Brower

SERIOUS AND POSSIBLY FATAL ACCIDENT AT MARSH & HENTHORNE'S LAST EVENING.

Shortly after 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Mr. Gladstone Brower, an employee of Marsh & Henthorne's establishment, met with a serious accident.

It appears that the young man, with fellow-employees, was working about a boiler at the firm's premises on Mill street, when the boiler slipped and fell upon Brower, pinning him to the earth.

As quickly as possible he was released from his perilous position, and it was seen that he was seriously, if not fatally, injured. Medical aid was summoned and soon after the unfortunate victim was removed to the hospital.

The unfortunate young man lay in an unconscious condition for a long period. The injuries sustained by him were all internal, as the corner of the boiler caught him across the abdomen.

This morning young Brower's condition showed but slight, if any, improvement, and it was decided that an operation would have to be resorted to in order to save the young man's life.

Gladstone, or "Stoney," as he was familiarly called, was a general favorite with all who knew him and is well spoken of by his fellow-employees, who deeply regret the unfortunate accident. His numerous friends will wish for him a speedy recovery.

An operation was performed on Brower at the hospital this morning and it was found that the internal injuries are of a serious nature. At present it is difficult to say what the outcome will be. We are informed that the young man stood the operation well.

U. S. COAL LANDS.

ROOSEVELT RESERVES 6,000,000 ACRES FOR USE OF NATION.

Washington, D. C., July 30. — As a result of action by the president and Secretary Hitchcock, the American people have been placed in a position of independence with respect to the coal monopoly or to a conflict between miners and coal operators.

Following an exhaustive investigation, the secretary, by direction of the president, has issued an order withdrawing from entry 6,000,000 acres of public lands which are known to possess workable coal. The order, perhaps, is in contravention of a revised statute, which provides that all valuable mineral deposits on lands belonging to the United States are free and open to purchase.

The examination by the geological survey in accordance with the instructions of the president developed that there was 50,000,000 acres of public land believed to contain coal deposits. The president, though, desires the withdrawal of only those sections known to possess workable coal. Accordingly the area was reduced to 6,000,000 acres.

The action of the president and Secretary Hitchcock in this matter is socialistic in the extreme. It means that the government has taken possession of coal lands capable of supplying the nation with an indefinite amount of fuel. Certainly the socialistic slogan of government ownership of public utilities has been carried out by the administration in this instance.

Higher Price; Less Booze.

Toronto Star: Inspector of No. 1 Division gave The Star some figures this morning that were calculated to prove that drinking has decreased materially since the price of liquid refreshments in bars went skyward.

"From the beginning of the year until the price of drinks went up," said he, "we had an increase of 150 in the number of arrests made for drunkenness in No. 1, as compared with the record for last year.

"Since the prices were raised the drunks have dropped off, until the figures show that in round numbers there were 200 less up to July, than there were in 1905. This figures out a total decrease of 350 drunks for the year."

It is evident that since high prices came into vogue the drinkers are either taking more beer and less whiskey, or are abstaining more from both.

MRS. COREY GETS DIVORCE.

Wife of President of the United States Steel Corporation Freed From Her Marital Bonds.

Reno, Nev., July 31.—Mrs. Wm. Ellis Corey, wife of the president of the United States Steel Corporation, was awarded a divorce in the second district court of Nevada yesterday. Mrs. Corey filed the petition for divorce on June 12.

The case was submitted without argument, and the jury took but one ballot. The jury was out but a few minutes.

Mrs. Corey was in tears when told that she had been given a decree and the custody of her 16-year-old son, Allan Corey. She drove at once to her home in Riverside avenue, where she says she will continue to reside. No evidence was submitted by the defence, and there was no argument.

The question of alimony was not introduced. Mrs. Corey made an interesting admission, however, touching upon this phase of the case, stating in May, 1906, several weeks before her petition for divorce was filed, she negotiated through her attorneys a financial settlement with her husband.

"I am a resident of Reno, Nevada," said Mrs. Corey, when placed on the stand, "and the wife of Wm. Ellis Corey, the defendant in this action. We were married on Dec. 1, 1883, at Pittsburg, Pa., and lived together until May 1, 1905. At that time my husband deserted me and went to New York. I followed him and had a conversation with him in the Hotel Lorraine. It was there that he told me that he had decided to live apart. He said that it was impossible for us to live happily together, and that I would never see him again. He stated that he intended going to Europe for several months. There was no scene. I talked with him about the matter and urged him to again resume his place in our home, but he refused. I have never seen him since."

Mrs. Corey was visibly affected while telling her story. She testified without evasion and in a clear voice. Her attorneys feared that she would collapse, as her health has suffered since the separation.

He was originally a clerk in a wine merchant's office and adopted the stage as a profession, 1852. He had since played in almost every theatre in the United Kingdom, and also extensively in Australia, New Zealand, United States and Canada. For many years he was lessee and manager of Toole's Theatre, London.

TO KILL DUKE VLADIMIR

Russian Insurgents Wrecked Train in Belgium.

Many Other Railway Wrecks — Bad Smash-Up on the New York Central —Some Miraculous Escapes—Dozen Passengers Hurt, But Engineer and Fireman Were Only Persons Killed— —'Frisco "Cannon Ball" Spiked.

Charlerio, Belgium, July 31.—An attempt was made Sunday night to wreck the Northern Express from Paris. A rail was removed, the engine and tender were ditched and the engineer and fireman were killed. The cars, however, remained on the tracks and the passengers were uninjured.

It is reported that Russian agitators were responsible for the attempt to wreck the express owing to their expectation that Grand Duke Vladimir was on board. The railway officials say the grand duke was not on the train. They have no trace of the men who committed the outrage.

SOME NARROW ESCAPES.

Train Runs Into a Landslide With Fatal Results.

Newburgh, N. Y., July 31.—Two wrecking crews were at work yesterday morning clearing the debris of the wreck of the New York Central's Pacific Express, which ran into a landslide one mile south of New Hamburg at 11.30 Sunday night, resulting in the death of Edward Wells, the engineer, of Albany, and Edward Warren, fireman, of New York, and injuries to about a dozen passengers, none of which will prove fatal.

There are three tracks at the point where the accident occurred, but they were all torn up or twisted for a hundred feet or more, so that it was apparent that it would be many hours before through traffic could be resumed.

The wreck was the worst that has occurred on the Hudson division since the New York tunnel disaster. It seems miraculous that there were no casualties or serious injuries among the passengers.

TO SEE TRAIN WRECK.

The 'Frisco "Cannon Ball" Spiked Presumably by Country Boys.

Antlers, I. T., July 31.—The southbound "Cannon Ball" train on the 'Frisco Railroad was wrecked Sunday south of Antlers. A spike had been driven between two rails on the high side of a curve. The locomotive struck it and rolled down an embankment, the tender and the baggage car following. John Harlan, the engineer, will probably die. Will Skelton, the fireman, was killed.

Detectives believe the wreck was caused by country boys, who wanted to see the fast train stop in the woods. The train was a long one, bearing 200 excursionists from Texas.

Thrown Under Train.

St. Thomas, July 31.—Frank Leach, the well-known horse buyer, had a miraculous escape from death while driving across the Pere Marquette track on Talbot street last evening. Leach did not notice an approaching passenger train, which struck his carriage and threw him under the moving train. The train was brought to a standstill and Leach was removed to the hospital. His injuries consisted of a severe scalp wound and injuries to his back and shoulder. Hope are held out for his recovery.

KILLED ON RIFLE RANGES.

Private of the Seventh Regiment Victime of Bursting Rifle.

London, Ont., July 31.—John Williamson, a member of the 7th Regiment, was instantly killed at the Cove ranges on Saturday afternoon. A rifle in the hands of Pte. Pickle, a fellow-rifleman, burst, and one of the pieces of flying metal struck Williamson in the forehead. A marksman lying between Pickle and Williamson escaped injury.

The deceased, who was 37 years of age, came to this country from Dundee, Scotland, last fall.

Pte. Pickle was also injured. The bolt flew out and hit him a glancing blow on the forehead, which raised a large lump. The thumb of his right hand was split open, and he was blinded for several minutes.

BAD BOILER EXPLOSION.

Two Men Killed and Twenty Injured—One Blown 50 Feet.

Vincennes, Ind., July 31.—Harry Borders and Lafayette Lichey were killed and twenty other workmen were injured by the explosion of a boiler at the plant of the Vincennes Paper Mills Co. The property loss is $15,000. Of the injured the worst hurt is Charles Connors, who was blown 50 feet through the air.

The boiler was hurled through the roof of the boilerhouse. Falling 100 feet away, it badly damaged the Harrison mansion, home of Wm. Henry Harrison, when he was governor of the Northwest Territory.

Taylor's Injuries Prove Fatal.

Toronto, July 31.—George Taylor, a slater, living on Bathurst street, who fell 40 feet from the roof of the House of Providence last Saturday, while engaged in work for the firm of Douglass Bros., died at St. Michael's Hospital at 7.45 o'clock last evening.

CHARLES COULD NOT SWIM.

Toronto Young Man Drowned In a Fatal Night Bathe—At Dufferin Wharf in 8 Feet of Water.

Toronto, July 31.—William Charles, plasterer, aged 21, living with his parents at 22 Foxley street, was drowned at the exhibition dock, foot of Dufferin street, at about 10 o'clock last night. Charles, though he could not swim, was in the habit of going with companions to the dock, at the foot of Dufferin street, after dark to bathe. A railing running around the wharf, about a foot out of the water, was used by the younger boys as a "hang on." Charles lost his hold, and his companions did not notice until it was too late.

DROWNED IN STONY LAKE.

Ewart G. Jupp Takes Cramps While In Swimming.

Peterboro, July 31.—Ewart G. Jupp of Toronto, who had just come to Stony Lake on Saturday night to spend Sunday with his friend, Dr. Wilson, also of Toronto, was drowned Sunday night while bathing.

Jupp was in swimming in the evening, just off Crow's Landing, where the shore inclines abruptly and where the water is very deep. He took cramps, and before assistance could arrive went to the bottom. His body was recovered shortly afterwards and taken to Norwood. Jupp was a young Englishman who had spent two years in Canada.

G. A. Burk Drowned.

Bowmanville, July 31.—George Albert Burk, only son of Erastus J. Burk, was drowned Sunday in Lake Ontario at Burk's Beach, about a mile west of Port Bowmanville. The young man was 21 years of age, and went down to the lake in the forenoon to have a bath.

Boy Drowns.

Trenton, July 31.—George Stewart, aged 11, son of E. Stewart, of Trenton, was drowned on Sunday afternoon. Young Stewart and two other boys were rowing, when he stood up in the boat, and, in an attempt to throw something, lost his balance and fell overboard. He came up a short distance away, but his companions were unable to reach him and he sank.

Two Drowned.

Sherkston, July 31.—John and Josie Sherk, grown-up children of Daniel Sherk of Sherkston, were drowned in Lake Erie yesterday afternoon.

Rescued by Lieut. Astor.

Windsor, Eng., July 31.—Second Lieut. John Jacob Astor, son of Wm. Waldorf Astor yesterday gallantly rescued a trooper of his regiment, the First Life Guards, from drowning in the River Thames.

Founders In Gulf.

Pensacola, Fla., July 31.—It was rumored here yesterday that the Austrian steamer Carolina, Captain Bartolich, which cleared from this port on July 24 for Marseilles, Spezzia and Venice, had foundered somewhere in the Gulf of Mexico.

Steamer Superior Sinks.

Victoria, B. C., July 31.—The steamer Superior, owned by Capt. G. M. French, struck an uncharted rock Monday night in Howe's Sound, near Fambier Island, and sank. The crew took to the boats and got clear before the vessel went down. The wreck lies in 40 feet of water and may be raised.

Fined $100.

Montreal, July 31.—Recorder Weir rendered judgment yesterday condemning the harbor commissioners of Montreal to pay a fine of $100 in the case in which they are charged by Pierre Robidoux with a violation of the alien labor law.

It does do good baking

This is the range that bakes better because the diffusive oven flue draws in cold air from the kitchen-floor, carries it around the oven, and pours it HOT down into the oven FROM THE TOP in a current that moves all round the whole oven and up and out the flue. When that clean, hot air leaves the oven it takes with it all the moisture, all the odors, which in OTHER ovens stay in and saturate the baking food. Perfect draft control, perfect oven, draw-out oven rack for easy basting,—all points singular to

MUST REDUCE THE RATE

Railway Commissioners Issue Order re Davies, Limited.

Maximum Rate of 18 Cents Per Cwt. Including Terminal Charges at Montreal—Not as Good as Asked But Better Than Formerly Obtained—Commissioner Mills Dissents, and Holds Order Is Deprived of Its Value.

Ottawa, July 31.—The board of railway commissioners has issued an order in the complaint of Davies, Limited, Toronto, against the action of the railways in advancing their rate from Toronto to Montreal on packing-house products in carloads for export to 19 cents per cwt., including terminal charges at Montreal. The company asked that the former rate of 16 1-2 cents be restored. The case was heard at Toronto in April and May last.

The board orders a maximum rate of 18 cents per cwt., including terminal charges at Montreal. It provides that it shall not be compulsory on the railway companies to reduce the rate below 18 cents per cwt., as a consequence of any reduction that may be made as the result of competition below the normal rate of 20 cents per cwt. on similar products from Chicago to New York.

Other Ontario Points.

This is to be the basis for rates from other Ontario points to Montreal, as follows: Peterboro, 17 cents; Hamilton and Brantford, 18 cents; Aylmer, Ingersoll, London and Stratford, 19 cents; Petrolia, Palmerston, Harrison and Collingwood, 20 1-2 cents.

Commissioner Mills dissents from the provision exempting the railway companies from any reduction below 18 cents as a consequence of reductions between Chicago and New York. In July, 1905, an order was made in relation to the complaint of the Dominion Millers' Association, in which it was stipulated that the Toronto-to-Montreal rate should be a certain fixed percentage of the Chicago-New York rate. Dr. Mills holds that the departure from this rule deprives the order of most of its value.

The railway commission may not leave Ottawa for the Yukon till Aug. 2, as one or two emergency cases may cal as one or two emergency cases may call for a sitting.

JURY ACCUSES SOLDIERS.

Cowan Held Responsible For the Murder of Thomas Power—The Others Made Accomplices.

Quebec, July 31.—Yesterday morning the coroner's jury, empanelled to enquire into the death of the two sailors after a fight with soldiers, returned this verdict:

"That the death of Thomas Power was caused by asphyxiation from submersion, and he was drowned after he had been stabbed in the back by James Cowan, who was responsible for the murder of the said Thomas Power. Furthermore, Privates Corrigan, Hillins, Walsh and Lapointe of the Royal Canadian Regiment, with others unknown, implicated in the fight that led up to the fatal termination, are held as accomplices."

James Cowan and the five soldiers have been committed to jail, and orders given to the police to continue the search for the other unknown parties implicated.

Cowan admitted the knife found in Power's back was his, but said that he did not remember using it that night. He was struck and then went into the fight.

Private Higgins said the soldiers only defended themselves.
